PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, though the clouds may hang about our earth this morning, we rejoice in the fact that Thou art shining always upon us and even through a frowning providence Thou dost have a smiling face. May we see light always in Thy light and interpret duty as Thou dost indicate it to us by Thy providence in the varying conditions of life that present themselves. Be with us this morning, we beseech of Thee, and help us each to realize the blessedness of that state described in Thy Word, where a man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, February 22, 1924, when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

REMOVAL OF SHIPPING BOARD OFFICES FROM WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the chairman of the United States Shipping Board, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, February 25, 1924.
(File 51426.)

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to Senate Resolution No. 155, which was transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate, I have the honor to advise you that the United States Shipping Board has no plans to move the offices of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation from Washington to the city of New York, nor is the matter being considered.

The president of the Fleet Corporation also advises that that corporation has no such intention.

Respectfully,

T. V. O'CONNOR, Chairman.

INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have a letter from one of my constituents in the nature of a petition that I think is worthy of the RECORD. It deals especially with the freight-rate situation and the proposition that freight rates should be so regulated that the products which can best stand the higher freight rates shall be required to pay them. I want to call attention to one statement in the letter, as follows:

> Whenever we ask the Interstate Commerce Commission for any reduction in rates they promptly advise us that they are required by the transportation act to make and maintain sufficient rates to produce an average earning of 5½ per cent on all railroads. Whenever we ask the railroads for any consideration regarding rates they promptly advise us that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not sanction any reduction in rates and that rates must "go up" rather than down, until the required earning is secured for all railroads.

I called that statement to the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission and I have their reply. I ask that their reply, together with the letter from my constituent, may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I hope that that committee, or at least the chairman of it, will note the letter from my constituent and the letter from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YAKIMA, WASH., February 11, 1924.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have been making quite a study of the freight-rate problem on our apples. I am fully convinced that a lower rate is necessary, not only for the continuation of the apple business, but for the continuance of freight revenues for the railroads themselves. A good many hundred acres of orchards are being pulled out this year, and a very large number of growers who had some of the older varieties, or considerable Jonathan acreage, are compelled to give up their orchards and abandon them to the mortgage companies.

Whenever we ask the Interstate Commerce Commission for any reduction in rates they promptly advise us that they are required by the transportation act to make and maintain sufficient rates to produce an average earning of 5½ per cent on all railroads. Whenever we ask the railroads for any consideration regarding rates they promptly advise that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not sanction any reduction in rates and that rates must "go up" rather than down until the required earning is secured for all railroads.

Attached please find copy of letter I received from the Interstate Commerce Commission bureau of statistics. You will note from this letter that the Northern Pacific and Great Northern both declared dividends of 7 per cent in 1921 and 5 per cent and 5½ per cent, respectively, in 1922, and had a good many million dollars surplus net income. The Union Pacific declared dividends of 14 per cent in 1921–22, and had from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 net income in addition.

According to the Wall Street Journal of January 12, 1924, the Union Pacific showed a much better profit, namely, 15 per cent net earnings on its stock in 1923 as compared to 12½ per cent in 1922. The fruit railroads out of California in 1923 showed 12 per cent net earnings for the Southern Pacific and 14 per cent for the Sante Fe.

The reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission made by the Great Northern show the net operating income for the first 10 months of 1923 was $18,569,505, which was more than all of 1922. Their report to the Interstate Commerce Commission also shows that their net operating income for October alone was $5,294,338, being the largest net operating income for any month in the history of the Great Northern. The net operating income for the Northern Pacific for October was $3,342,542, or 55 per cent over the same month in 1922.

One of the Northern Pacific officials advised me that the Yakima Valley was the only thing that saved them from a loss this year.

Please note also from the Interstate Commerce Commission letter that the Milwaukee had about $11,000,000 deficit in 1921 and about $6,000,000 deficit in 1922. They have done better in 1923, but is it not plain that it is unfair for the apple growers of Washington (who are paying over $20,000,000 freight this year) to be charged the present tremendous high freight rates in order to offset the loss of the Milwaukee and other similar railroads, which never should have been built? If the fruit growers were making money, it might be all right to levy rates on them to make up for the monumental blunder of building the Milwaukee, but the apple growers are simply up against it, and absolutely can not afford to pay the present rates. Just how it is going to help the railroads to have thousands of acres of orchards pulled up, and hundreds of families ruined, is beyond my comprehension. It seems to me the transportation act compels the Interstate Commerce Commission and the railroads to use inflexible and unjust rules.

Suppose we admit that the railroads need the present revenue. Why should not the freight rates be levied on the commodities that can afford to pay them? In other words, why compel the railroads to charge more than the traffic will bear on our apples, when such policy can have but one effect, the destruction of their present revenues,

In this connection, permit me to call your attention to the injustice of the flat horizontal increase in freight rates. When we planted our orchards the rate was 50 cents per box, without heater charge; now it is 75 cents per box, plus a heater charge of about 5 cents, or 60 per cent increase.

The Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry made a very exhaustive study of freight rates in 1921. They took 2,022 cars of barreled apples, with an average haul of 400 miles, and found that the producer of the apples received 80 cents out of every dollar of their wholesale price, while the railroads received 11.65 cents out of every dollar for refrigeration and all other charges. In the case of boxed apples, the commission made a study of 1,466 carloads, with an average haul of 2,800 miles and found that the shipper received 54.65 cents out of every dollar, and the railroads received 35.17 cents out of every dollar. You can see by comparing these figures, that a 50 per cent flat increase or decrease in freight rates would not make very much difference to the barreled-apple shipper, while a 50 per cent increase or decrease in freight rates on boxed apples would make about 20 per cent difference. Apples were a good price in 1921; this year, with lower prices, the railroads get a much larger per cent, intensifying the injustice of the horizontal increase.

I have just returned from a hearing before the fact-finding commission at Salt Lake City. I made a statement for the record there, putting in a great many figures which I think show that the ruin of reclamation in the West is being caused by this flat horizontal increase in freight rates, with great injustice to the long haul. The condition on many of the projects is pitiable, much worse than on ours. Their banks have been greatly impaired and credit facilities are in many cases a thing of the past. In my opinion, the high freight rates in Montana and the Dakotas are part of the cause for the terrible times in those States. Before the fact-finding commission, I appealed to the commission to ask the railroads for relief, and ask the Interstate Commerce Commission for a change in their inflexible rules, permitting the railroads of the West to reduce their rates so they would not be more than the traffic will bear. I feel the railroads are really the partners of the fruit growers and farmers of the West in developing this country, and that the policy of the Interstate Commerce Commission apparently required by the transportation act is ruining the West, while the East and the sections with the short haul have an increase (which really does not affect them greatly) and are having wonderfully prosperous times. The farmers of our valley and the people of the West have borrowed about to the limit of their credit, thinking times would change. I sincerely hope they will, but having paid $300 per acre freight, or about $100,000 on my orchards this year, you can see it is possibly plainer to me than to others where my profit and the profit of the people of the West goes.

I dislike to write you so long a letter, but I really feel the situation is almost desperate to the section you represent.

Very respectfully yours,

H. M. GILBERT.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1924.

Mr. H. M. GILBERT,

M. O. LORENS, Director.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 21, 1924.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of February 19, 1924, concerning the level of freight rates in connection with the requirements of the transportation act, 1920.

As you know, that portion of the above-cited act to which you refer has been incorporated in the interstate commerce act in section 15 (a). For your ready reference the following is quoted from the provisions of that section:

"(2) In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates the commission shall initiate, modify, establish, or adjust such rates so that carriers as a whole (or as a whole in each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate) will, under honest, efficient, and economical management and reasonable expenditures for maintenance of way, structures, and equipment earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation: Provided, That the commission shall have reasonable latitude to modify or adjust any particular rate which it may find to be unjust or unreasonable, and to prescribe different rates for different sections of the country.

"(3) The commission shall from time to time determine and make public what percentage of such aggregate property value constitutes a fair return thereon, and such percentage shall be uniform for all rate groups or territories which may be designated by the commission. In making such determination it shall give due consideration, among other things, to the transportation needs of the country and the necessity (under honest, efficient, and economical management of existing transportation facilities) of enlarging such facilities in order to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation."

In its report under Docket 13293, Reduced rates, 1922, the commission found that on and after March 1, 1922, a fair return as contemplated by the above provision would be 5.75 per cent of the aggregate property value as a uniform percentage for all rate groups or territories designated by this commission.

The above considerations are general in their character and do not in any manner preclude individual rate adjustments involving both increases and decreases. As you know, reports are constantly being issued by the commission providing for reductions in rates where such action has been found warranted under the existing circumstances. Moreover, tariffs and supplements are being received from the different carriers which bring about various advances and reductions in individual rate items through voluntary action on their part.

I believe the above considerations will remove any misunderstanding under which your constituent may be laboring; if not, however, I would be pleased to advise further in the premises.

Respectfully,

G. B. MCGINTY, Secretary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ROBINSON presented resolutions adopted by the Rotary Club of the Hot Springs National Park and the board of governors of the chamber of commerce of Fayetteville, both in the State of Arkansas, favoring the continuance of the transportation act of 1920, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from A. N. Johnson, proprietor of the Tuckerman Record, of Tuckerman, Ark., remonstrating against the practice of the Government in selling printed envelopes, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Ben B. Weil, of Pine Bluff, Ark., praying for relief of the shortage of labor on farms in the South, due to stringent immigration laws, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local No. 200, National Federation of Federal Employees, of Dallas, Tex., requesting Congress to give careful consideration to the reclassification of the field service as provided for in the Sterling-Lehlbach Classification Act of 1923, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. PEPPER presented a memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the passage of House bill 5635, to provide for a deep waterway for ocean-going vessels from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean by way of the St. Lawrence River and the Welland Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I have a petition sent to me from New Mexico, which reads as follows:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States of America and residents of New Mexico, having noticed the unjust fight being waged against the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill now pending before Congress by selfish interests, who are trying to make Congress believe that the majority of the people are against said bill, do hereby, in mass meeting assembled, petition and urge you as our representatives to stand and vote for the said compensation bill, that the majority of the people in this State, as far as we know, are in favor of that measure. Thanking you in advance, we are,

Yours truly,

The petition is not signed by veterans or by ex-service men, but is signed by citizens generally as a result of a mass meeting in that portion of the State. I agree with the declaration that the majority of our people are in favor of the passage of the adjusted compensation bill. Our people feel and believe that the delay has already been longer than is justifiable under the circumstances. I agree with them that we ought to have action. Something should be done. A settlement is due, a settlement is demanded, and a settlement ought to be accorded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a letter from Governor Hunt, of Arizona, together with a communication from Cactus Chapter, No. 2, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, relative to certain sections of the report of the committee investigating the Veterans' Bureau, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATE HOUSE,
Phoenix, Ariz., February 19, 1924.

Hon. RALPH CAMERON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been called to paragraph 10 of the report of the committee appointed by Congress to investigate the Veterans' Bureau.

The Disabled Veterans of the World War, as well as ex-service men generally, are very much exercised over this section. They feel humiliated and insulted by it. Some of them have called upon me to discuss the matter. In addition I have received a communication from the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Phoenix Chapter, No. 1, setting forth their views. The disabled men in the hospitals at Prescott and Tucson are very much disturbed.

The disgraceful, inefficient, and fraudulent administration of the United States Veterans' Bureau has been bad enough, and the handling of this problem so utterly reprehensible that it is doubtful if the injustices perpetrated can ever be rectified.

As I understand the law, the disabled veterans have been voted compensation, not a charity dole, and when Congress adopted the law providing for compensation it had no intention of setting up a bureaucratic governing institution to expend the money of the disabled veterans. The money, as I understand it, is the property of the veterans and is under their control as regards its expenditure, the same as any other personal property they may possess. That general condition is, of course, modified in the case of insane or mentally defective victims of the war.

The proposal to further restrict the compensation paid veterans indicates the menace of bureaucracy, which is developing so rapidly in this country. It appears to me that these men who have given their health to their country in its time of trial should not be harassed and humiliated further by the bungling management of governmental clerks. In justice to Maj. Gen. Frank T. Hines, I believe that he has done excellent work in straightening out the chaos created by his predecessor.

I trust that Congress will not place any further hardship in the way of disabled veterans who are struggling back toward health, and that they will not be treated in such a manner as will lower their self-respect. From data submitted to me by disabled men it appears that there is ample legislation and regulation now in effect to enforce discipline for hospitalized disabled men.

I call these matters to your attention in order that you may know the way the disabled men feel about the proposed legislation.

Respectfully yours,

GEO. W. P. HUNT, Governor.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR, CACTUS CHAPTER, NO. 2.

Resolution.

TUCSON, ARIZ., February 15, 1924.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of Cactus Chapter, No. 2, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, held on the 15th instant, the undersigned committee was appointed and empowered to prepare and present to you on behalf of the disabled ex-service men in this community our protest against the enactment into law of sections 7, 10, 13, 18, and that portion of section 14 which seeks to take away automatic reinstatement of insurance, of the recommendations of the special committee of the United States Senate appointed to investigate the affairs of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

Section 7, basing compensation on the veteran's previous occupation, would cause untold confusion in ratings and would result in a great deal of injustice. Of two veterans suffering from exactly the same injury or disease, one might be rated as totally disabled and the other as having no disability whatsoever, depending upon what their previous occupations were. A carpenter would be totally disabled if he had suffered the loss of both legs, yet under this recommendation a bookkeeper who had lost both legs would not be entitled to such a rating because he possibly could still keep a set of books. We believe that compensation should be based solely on the physical condition of the veteran and nothing else.

Section 10 of said report recommends the arbitrary withholding of compulsory allotment of not more than three-fourths of a disabled veteran's compensation. Such high-handed and autocratic procedure on the part of any governmental agency is without precedent in the annals of American history. So far as we have been able to ascertain no previous attempt has ever been made in this country to create wards of the Government by declaring free-born white male citizens of the United States above the age of 21 years to be incapable of administering their own private affairs. The men who were disabled in the honorable service of this country are not children, nor are they imbeciles, idiots, or lunatics. We resent any imputation or insinuation that we are any less capable of handling our own individual financial affairs than the millions of other young American citizens who did not go to war. A large number of disabled veterans in hospitals have made investments in real estate and other kinds of property. To arbitrarily withhold full payment of compensation from these men would, in effect, result in a virtual confiscation of the property they have acquired in cases where the same has not been fully paid for.

Shall a veteran be penalized for entering a hospital and making every effort to regain his health in order that he may once more assume all the duties and privileges of the average American citizen? It would seem so, for the recommendation is that this wholesale guardianship be applied only to men in the hospitals.

The enactment of such a law would in effect deprive the men in hospitals of their full rights of citizenship comparatively the same as common criminals. The average American citizen has the absolute right to conduct and manage his private business affairs according to the dictates of his own brain without any interference or dictation from any individual or Government official. Are the disabled men in hospitals to be deprived of their full rights of American citizenship? Certainly they committed no crime by serving the United States in time of war and they should not forfeit any of their rights of citizenship because they were disabled in the service of their country. Is the Government to adopt the paternal attitude of the father who promises to give his son $500 if he will not smoke cigarettes before he is 21 years old, and say to the disabled veterans we are going to pay you $80 per month compensation, but we are going to hold out $60 of that amount which we will pay you when you leave the hospital provided you do not die before you leave the hospital?

Section 13 provides that retroactive awards of compensation shall be more strictly limited. An award of compensation is based on the extent of the claimant's disability at the time of his examination on his application for compensation. The Veterans' Bureau has been known to take as long as two years to adjust a claim for compensation. Surely a man is entitled to compensation from the time he became disabled, if at all, and not simply from the time his claim is finally adjusted by the bureau.

Section 18 would deny vocational training to thousands of veterans who have been sick for a number of years. Some of them may ultimately improve sufficiently to become feasible for training. With no provisions for permanent compensation in sufficient amounts for these veterans we must strongly protest the enactment into law of this section. This section provides that training must be begun on or before June 30, 1924, and vocational training is limited to those disabled veterans who made application therefor on or before June 30, 1923. Is the man who only recently became disabled from an injury received in service to be discriminated against in such unjust manner? Is he not entitled to as much consideration and the same fair treatment as was accorded the man whose disability became apparent on the day he was injured or shortly thereafter?

We do not doubt that the people of the United States want to see the disabled veterans of the late war receive fair and just treatment at the hands of the Government they served and we do not believe the people of this country would countenance for one moment the passage of laws putting into effect the above recommendations of the special Senate committee composed of Senators ODDIE of Nevada, REED of Pennsylvania, and WALSH of Massachusetts. We therefore earnestly and sincerely urge that you use your best efforts to oppose and prevent the enactment of any laws putting these recommendations into effect.

Respectfully submitted.

CACTUS CHAPTER, No. 2, D. A. V. W. W.,
By CLAUDE SMITH,
A. E. LARSEN,
P. M. BROWN,
THOS. JOHNSON,
G. F. STONER,
C. R. SOLLERS,
Committee.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented a resolution adopted by the Christopher Columbus Society, of Minneapolis, Minn., protesting against the passage of the so-called Johnson selective immigragration bill, as being discriminatory, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, by request I present a letter from N. W. Upham, of St. Paul, Minn., transmitting a large number of petitions relative to the so-called Mellon tax plan. I ask that the letter, together with the body of one of the petitions may be printed in the RECORD, and all of the petitions, with the letter of transmittal, referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being on objection, the letter and petitions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and the letter, with the body of one of the petitions, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CAPITAL NATIONAL BANK OF ST. PAUL,
St. Paul, Minn., February 9, 1924.

Senator HENRIK SHIPSTEAD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: I have the honor to send you under separate cover a number of petitions requesting the adoption by Congress of a tax-reduction plan substantially along the lines recommended by the Hon. Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. These petitions have been sent to us from all over the country, a vast majority being from St. Paul and Minneapolis and the Northwest States. Their distribution is as follows:

St. Paul (including Minneapolis)	473
Minnesota	63
North Dakota	35
Wisconsin	30
Iowa	30
Montana	25
Nebraska	19
South Dakota	9
Kansas	4
Wyoming	4
California	3
Utah	3
Illinois	2
Colorado	2
Oregon	1
Arkansas	1
Missouri	1
Washington	1
Ohio	1
Total	716
	45
	761

I sincerely trust that this expression of opinion, relative to tax reduction, will meet with your consideration.

Respectfully,

N. W. UPHAM.

To the Congress of the United States:

I respectfully urge and request Congress to take an aggressive and persistent stand for lower Federal taxes and to support a tax-reduction plan substantially along the lines recommended in letter dated November 10, 1923, from the Hon. Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to the Hon. WILLIAM R. GREEN, acting chairman, Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and to refrain from voting in favor of any legislation which will interfere with the carrying out of such tax-reduction program.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KEYES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 162, authorizing the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions during the Sixty-eighth Congress to hold hearings and employ a stenographer. The resolution is in the usual form, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. MOSES. I object.

Mr. KING. Let the resolution be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 162) submitted by Mr. WILLIS on the 16th instant, was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-eighth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will go to the calendar.

Mr. KEYES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably Senate Resolution 158, submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] on the 13th instant, directing the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate and have a survey made of housing and rental conditions in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MOSES. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will go to the calendar.

Mr. KEYES. From the same committee I report back favorably Senate Resolution 157, submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] on the 13th instant, directing a committee to investigate the failure of the Attorney General to prosecute or defend certain criminal and civil actions wherein the Government is interested.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MOSES. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go to the calendar.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 264) for the relief of Charles H. Willey (Rept. No. 173); and

A bill (S. 1013) for the relief of Gordon G. MacDonald (Rept. No. 174).

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 172) thereon. I give notice that I shall ask for the consideration of the bill probably Thursday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LATE PRESIDENT HARDING.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement touching the program for to-morrow. I remind Senators that on January 24 the Senate agreed to the House concurrent resolution providing for a joint meeting of the House and Senate on Wednesday, February 27, for the services in memory of the late President Warren G. Harding. There was sent to Senators in their mail this morning a notice and the official program. If they do not have it before them, they will find it printed in the RECORD at page 2808. The concurrent resolution provides that the two Houses shall meet in joint session at 12 o'clock noon. I am simply calling attention to the matter that Senators may have it in mind and so that when the Senate concludes its business for the day it may recess or adjourn until perhaps 11.45 to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in view of the statement just made by the Senator from Ohio as chairman on the part of the Senate of the Committee on Memorial Services in honor of President Harding, I ask unanimous consent that to-day when the Senate adjourns or takes a recess, as the case may be, it be to meet at 11.45 to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it shall adjourn or take a recess, as the case may be, until 11.45 to-morrow morning. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2625) to detach Jim Hogg County from the Corpus Christi division of the southern judicial district of the State of Texas, and attach the same to the Laredo division of the southern judicial district of said State; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2626) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 2627) granting a pension to Edward D. Hassett; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2628) providing for a preliminary survey of the Wolf River in Wisconsin to ascertain some method to control floods; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 2629) for the relief of Frank Murray; and

A bill (S. 2630) for the relief of F. M. Gray, Jr., Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 2631) to increase the cost of public building at Russellville, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 2632) for the relief of Henry Wagner (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 2633) granting a pension to Mary L. Simmons (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 2634) authorizing the Secretary of War to convey to the State of Maine certain land in Kittery, Me., formerly a part of the abandoned military reservation of Fort McClary (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEPPER:

A bill (S. 2635) for the relief of Jabez Burchard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2636) granting a pension to Pearl Brown; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 2637) granting permission to Lieut. Col. Charles G. Mortimer, United States Army, to accept decoration of officer of the French Legion of Honor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Daniel Burkhart (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2640) for the purchase of a rifle range at Liberty, Mo.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2641) to establish the department of public welfare and to determine its functions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 2642) to renew and extend certain letters patent; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2643) granting a pension to George W. Johnson; and

A bill (S. 2644) granting a pension to Clarence G. Stonestreet; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 2645) to amend the organic act of the Philippine Islands, approved August 29, 1916; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

By Mr. PEPPER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 87) authorizing the erection of a flagstaff at Fort Sumter, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

DISQUALIFICATION FROM SERVICE ON QUASI JUDICIAL COMMISSIONS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I request consent to make a very brief statement concerning it.

Some days ago I submitted a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that members of the Tariff Commission should not participate in hearings and in decisions by that commission in cases where the members of their immediate families appeared to have a pecuniary interest in the result. I am now introducing a bill to provide for disqualification under specified conditions of members not only of the Tariff Commission but of the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission. It seems necessary that the rule of disqualification for members of quasi judicial tribunals shall be definitely established by statute.

The bill provides that when any members of the commissions designated—namely, the Tariff Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Federal Trade Commission—are interested in any special or private way in proceedings before the respective bodies, or whenever they have been of counsel for any person having a direct and pecuniary interest in proceedings before them, or where they have appeared as a material witness or acted as attorney or legislative agent or representative in respect to the subject matter of such proceeding or investigation, or whenever such members shall be within four degrees related to or connected with persons who have a private and pecuniary interest, such members shall be deemed to be disqualified to take part in the hearings and decisions of the commission and shall be required to note their disqualification upon the record.

The second section of the bill establishes a process by which parties interested in proceedings or investigations before such commissions may test out and have determined by the commission itself the alleged disqualification of members of such commission.

The measure also provides in section 3 that the commission itself shall finally determine questions of disqualification of any member and denies the member a question as to whose disqualification is raised the privilege of voting on the issue.

Section 4 makes clear the intention not to disqualify members of said commission from participating in proceedings before the respective bodies of which they are members merely because they shall have been interested in or connected with general agricultural, manufacturing, transportation, or other business or with any labor organization, but such disqualification must be based on a special or private interest.

I believe, Mr. President, there is necessity and demand for legislation upon this subject. That is disclosed by the proceedings which prompted the introduction of the resolution to which I have already referred and which I hope may be acted upon by the Senate as soon as other business in this body permits. The bill is not intended to supersede the resolution and is broader and more effective and more specific, in that its provisions apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, as well as the Tariff Commission, and in that it defines as a rule of law the circumstances and conditions under which members of these quasi judicial tribunals shall not be permitted to participate in the proceedings before their respective bodies.

I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I request that it be considered by that committee at an early day.

The bill (S. 2638) to provide for the disqualification, under specified conditions, of any member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, or United States Tariff Commission to participate in certain proceedings or investigations, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I hardly ever see much that the Republican Party does for which it should be praised, but it was my pleasure yesterday afternoon to read in the Washington Evening Star that the President of the United States had put the brakes on as to increases of pensions. I was delighted to read his conclusion, and I hope it will be followed by Congress.

My recollection is, Mr. President, that in 1879 a pension bill was passed by Congress appropriating $37,000,000 for Civil War pensions. About a quarter of a million pensioners drew their quota as a result of that legislation. About 1901 the number of pensioners had increased to about 1,000,000. The amount of money appropriated at that time for the payment of such pensions was $157,000,000. About 1920 the number of pensioners had decreased back to about a quarter of a million, but the sum of money then appropriated for the payment of the pensions was in the neighborhood of $258,000,000. Subsequently additional pensions have been granted in larger amounts. Since I have been a Member of this body I believe that two such increases have been made.

Last year an attempt was made to increase the pensions of pensioners of the Civil War by about $108,000,000. Some of the members of the Senate opposed it, but there were very few who did so. However, President Harding saw the injustice of the proposed increase and he vetoed the bill and sent it back to Congress. I complimented President Harding on the floor of the Senate for the action he then took. The bill was then redrawn, carrying an appropriation of something like $65,000,000, and we had a hard time here to defeat it by preventing it from coming up. I fought the bill in season and out of season, and I am gratified that it did not come up and, of course, did not pass.

At that time there were a couple of other pension bills pending, one being an omnibus pension bill, which I aided in defeating, and another a bill to pension Civil War telegraph posthole diggers. The proponents of that bill were so anxious to raid the Treasury that they introduced a bill proposing to pension the telegraph posthole diggers. The idea of robbing the Treasury by trying to pay people who dug postholes during the Civil War, perhaps a thousand miles from a bullet, shows to what extent those who wish to raid the Treasury will go. I filibustered against that bill, and am glad that it did not come up. I do not think anyone will ever have the temerity again to introduce such a bill.

Mr. President, I notice that there is now pending in the Senate Senate bill No. 5, which, I believe, has been favorably reported by the Committee on Pensions. That bill proposes to increase by $55,000,000 the appropriations which are already being provided for pensions. It was to that bill, I understand, the President had reference on yesterday. I hope that Senators and Members of the other House will not consider laying further burdens upon the taxpayers of this country.

I sympathize with veterans who have become disabled, but there are old soldiers' homes now to take care of the Civil War veterans, and those veterans are already drawing pensions of around $50 a month, and perhaps some are drawing even larger pensions.

Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, Doctor Work, in response to an inquiry in reference to the pending pension bill to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 31, 1924.

Hon. H. O. BURSUM,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Responding to your request dated January 16, 1924, for information relative to Senate bill 5, I have to advise you as follows:

(a) The number of Civil War soldiers on the roll of pensioners December 31, 1923, was 158,851.

(b) The number of Civil War soldiers on the roll December 31, 1923, at a rate exceeding $72 per month was 140; the number pensioned at $72 per month was 41,278, 40,811 of whom were pensioned under section 2 of the act of May 1, 1920.

(c) The number of applications filed under section 2, act of May 1, 1920, between July 1, 1923, and December 31, 1923, was 9,480—an average of 1,580 per month.

(d) The number of claims under section 2, act of May 1, 1920, allowed between July 1, 1923, and December 31, 1923, was 8,532—an average of 1,422 per month.

(e) The number of claims under section 2, act of May 1, 1920, pending December 31, 1923, was 5,244.

(f) The number of deaths of Civil War soldiers, per month, since July 1, 1923, was:

July	1,714
August	1,487
September	1,554
October	1,711
November	1,770
December	1,472
Total	9,708

The monthly value of the pension represented by those thus dropped from the roll on account of death was $580,971.

Attention is invited to the fact that the months of January, February, March, and April usually show a much higher death rate among Civil War soldiers. It is quite probable that during the 12 months of the present fiscal year approximately 26,000 of this class will be dropped from the roll on account of death.

(g) The additional cost which would be entailed should section 1 of this bill (S. 5) be enacted into law would, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, be approximately $17,700,000. These figures are the result of computing the increased annual value of the pensions payable to Civil War soldiers under this bill and deducting losses due to the death of 26,000 of these soldiers during the next fiscal year.

The number of Mexican War soldiers is so small and their death rate so high that there will likely be a slight decrease in the cost of paying pensions to them whether the bill becomes a law or not.

(h) The number of Civil War soldiers and Mexican War soldiers that would receive benefit by the enactment in excess of probable allowances under section 2, act of May 1, 1920, is, approximately, Civil War soldiers, 110,000; Mexican War soldiers, 15. This estimate is based upon the assumption that about 15 per cent of these two classes of pensioners will be allowed pension at $72 per month by June 30, 1924.

(i) The number of Civil War widows on the roll December 31, 1923, was 257,320. The number receiving $40 per month and less than $50 per month was 320; the number receiving $50 per month and over was 113. The number of such widows who are 60 years of age and under 74 years of age was 95,279; the number over 74 years of age was 149,998. The number of widows, by class, whose pension will be increased by this bill under suggested amendments (60 to 73 years of age, $35 per month; 74 and older, $45 per month) is 90,279 who are from 60 to 73 years of age, and 141,998 who are 74 years of age and older. The number of widows who have died since July 1, 1923, is 9,404; the monthly value of the pension thus terminated is $282,120; but this is fully offset by the amount payable on original allowances during the same period.

The net additional cost involved by the increase would be, approximately, $5,416,740 for 90,279 who are 60 to 73 years of age; $25,559,640 for 141,998 who are 74 years of age and older; total, approximately, $30,976,380. In this estimate 13,000 remarried widows and 11,723 who are under 60 years of age have been eliminated.

(j) The number of applications filed by Civil War widows, act of May 1, 1920, per month, since July 1, 1923, is 884; total, 5,304.

(k) The average age of Civil War soldiers January 1, 1924, was 80.5 years. The average age of Civil War widows January 1, 1924, was 74.15 years. This statement is based upon the examination of more than 500 typical cases in each class.

(l) The number of Mexican War soldiers on the roll December 31, 1923, was 41; the number benefited by the bill, 20. There would be no additional cost for the reason that the death rate will be so high that the net result will perhaps be a slight decrease.

(m) The number of deaths of Mexican War soldiers since July 1, 1923, was 8.

(n) The number of widows of the War of 1812 on the roll December 31, 1923, was 39; Mexican War widows, 1,549. The number benefited by the bill would be by July 1, 1924, about 1,400. The number of such widows who have died since July 1, 1923, is, War of 1812, 1; Mexican War, 79. The additional cost, making allowance for deaths in 1925, would be approximately $200,000.

(o) The number of remarried widows now on the roll is 13,000; the number who have died since July 1, 1923, 850. There will be none benefited by the bill; consequently, no additional cost.

(p) The number of minor children, including helpless children, on the roll December 31, 1923, was 15,643; the number dropped since July 1, 1923, 2,844; the monthly value of which was $11,922. The additional cost involved in section 5 of this bill will be approximately $450,000.

(q) The number of probable beneficiaries under section 6, the approximate cost, and the average age of probable beneficiaries are very difficult to estimate. Your attention is invited to Report No. 837, accompanying H. R. 211 (67th Cong., 2d sess.), submitted by Mr. LANGLEY from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in which it is stated that from the best information obtainable it was believed that at that time the number of beneficiaries who are contemplated by section 6 was 9,000. Estimating that since the date of the above-mentioned report, March 27, 1922, 15 per cent of those referred to in section 6 have died, the number remaining would be by June 30, 1924, about 7,500. The ages of such persons would be, presumably, about the same as other Civil War pensioners. The cost of pensioning these persons would hardly be a factor during the fiscal year of 1925, as the nature of these claims and the character of the evidence required to show service, in the absence of record of service in the War Department in most of the classes of persons enumerated, will make prompt adjudication impossible.

(r) The number of Army nurses on the roll December 31, 1923, was 73; the number deceased since July 1, 1923, 8. All who are now on the roll would be entitled to increase at an additional cost of $11,000.

(s) The number of Indian war soldiers and Indian war widows on the roll December 31, 1923, was, soldiers, 3,469; widows, 2,880. The number who have died since July 1, 1923, is, invalids, 166; widows, 71. Approximately 3,400 soldiers would be entitled to increase to at least $30, and 2,700 widows would be eligible to $20 per month. Additional cost, soldiers, $300,000; widows, $200,000; total, $500,000.

(t) The number of Spanish War soldiers on the roll December 31, 1923, was 75,721; the number dropped since July 1, 1923, 733, the monthly value of which was $15,074. No data has been compiled upon which to base estimates as to the grades, average age, degree of disability, and other factors which would enter into the question of rate. It is not clear from the wording of the bill whether the rates provided can be automatically allowed. If automatically allowed, the cost for the first year would be approximately $8,000,000; if dependent on application and proof of degree of inability to earn a support by manual labor, $5,000,000, the difference in cost being due to the difference in number of claims allowed during the first year. The number of applications for increase filed per month since July 1, 1923, was an average of 1,803; total, 11,180. The total number of allowances for the same period was 4,185.

(u) The number of persons on the roll December 31, 1923, for loss of both arms or both legs, or total disability of the same, or for loss of sight of both eyes, was 174. The death rate of these particular classes is not of record, as they are not segregated from other general law pensioners. It is estimated that the additional cost of increasing all pensioners on the roll on account of the loss of limbs in varying degrees would be $265,000.

(v) The expenditures for pensions during the fiscal year 1923 aggregated $263,012,500.18. The amount of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1925 is $222,500,000. Assuming that this amount will cover obligations under present conditions for 1925 and that the present bill will not become operative before the beginning of the fiscal year 1925, the difference in cost for pensions between the years 1923 and 1925 will be an increase of approximately $14,448,000 for the year 1925 over the amount expended in 1923. It is estimated that the reduction in the cost of Civil War pensions for the fiscal year 1926 will amount to approximately $11,000,000.

Attention is especially invited to the fact that in making the foregoing estimates it has been assumed that the proposed legislation would not become effective until about July 1, 1924. This qualification has special reference to the estimates of the probable cost of increasing all Civil War soldiers to $72 per month and of the provisions for increasing the pension of war with Spain soldiers.

The enactment of this bill in its present form will add to expenditures for pensions for 1925 approximately $55,000,000.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

NAVAL OIL LAND LEASES—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on yesterday morning I was accorded the privilege by the Senate to call the attention of this body to a statement emanating from the Republican National Committee and its news organ, the National Republican, charging that I was responsible for the legislation under which the leases of the naval oil reserves were made. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was decent enough—and I thank him for it—to arise in his place and substantiate the statement which I made to the effect that the leases were not made at all under the provisions of the act of February 25, 1920, the passage of which I advocated in this body. To-day from the same source comes a repetition of the calumny and an aggravation of the statement. It asserts as follows:

Senator WALSH'S statement that the naval oil reserves were not leased under the act of February, 1920, which he so earnestly advocated, but under the act of June, 1920, is a quibble for the purpose of misrepresenting the facts. * * * The Federal leasing act under which all public oil reserves are leased, whether naval or otherwise, was enacted in February, 1920. It was amended June 1, 1920, through the medium of a rider on the naval appropriation bill, so as to give the Secretary of the Navy complete control of naval oil reserves. Secretary Daniels wrote the amendment and Senator WALSH supported it when it came before the Senate.

I should like to have the attention of the senior Senator from Utah, if he will be kind enough to give it to me.

Mr. President, the leasing act of February, 1920, did not, as thus asserted, authorize the leasing of "all public oil reserves, whether naval or otherwise." As a matter of fact, the leasing act of February, 1920, did not authorize the leasing of any public reserves, naval or otherwise.

Again, the article says:

It was amended June 1, 1920, through the medium of a rider on the naval appropriation bill, so as to give the Secretary of the Navy complete control of naval oil reserves.

It was not amended by the act of June 4, 1920. The act of June 4, 1920, was not an amendment of the act of February 25, 1920, in any shape, form, or manner. It was in no sense an amendment of the act of February 25, 1920. But, Mr. President, if it were an amendment of the act of February 25, 1920, I am not to be charged with it, unless as a matter of course I supported the amendment. The statement says I did so.

Secretary Daniels wrote the amendment and Senator WALSH supported it when it came before the Senate.

That is not true, as the record itself discloses. I had nothing at all to do with it. I said nothing about it and neither did any other Member of the Senate on the floor say anything about it, except the Senator from Utah introduced some amendments, which were accepted without debate and without discussion. I respectfully ask the Senator from Utah if I made an accurate statement of the facts?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Montana has made the statement just as I understand it to be.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now, Mr. President, I ask any Republican Member to arise in his place and question the accuracy of the statement which I have made concerning the record, if it is in any respect inaccurate.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Montana is entirely correct, with possibly one exception; that the act of February, 1920, did authorize the leasing of producing wells in the reserves and a compromise of existing claims by the President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to ask the Senator, then, is it not also a fact that none of the leases were executed under the provisions of that clause in the act of February 25, 1920?

Mr. LENROOT. None of the leases in question here; no, none of them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now, Mr. President, having demonstrated that the Republican National Committee and its news organ are inveterate liars, I shall not trouble the Senate any further with anything that they or either of them may say upon this subject. I desire to add at this time, however, that it is perfectly obvious that they are engaged, not in enlightening the public concerning the facts of this matter, but in misrepresenting the facts to the public in order to bring discredit upon the investigation and thus hamper and retard and, if possible, destroy the effect of the committee's work; for it must be conceded that it is useless for us to go on with this investigation unless the public has confidence in the purpose which actuates us in the development of these facts.

But, Mr. President, there is another matter to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate.

My esteemed friend the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] in the course of some remarks made upon this general subject here upon the floor some time ago inquired why Senator WALSH was so dilatory about bringing these facts before the public, nearly two years having elapsed before they were made public, and the suggestion and the inquiry thus made by the junior Senator from California was taken up and reechoed in the public press a few days ago by Mr. Vanderlip. I congratulate the junior Senator from California upon his associate.

I take occasion at this time to put in the RECORD the chronology of this matter for the purpose of determining how dilatory anyone was and particularly how dilatory I was in discharging the duty imposed upon us by the committee.

April 15, 1922: Senator KENDRICK introduced his resolution requesting the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy to inform the Senate whether negotiations were pending for the leasing of the Teapot Dome, which was agreed to.

April 21, 1922: Senator LA FOLLETTE introduced his resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to the Senate all records relating to the naval oil reserves.

April 22, 1922: Vice President Coolidge laid before the Senate a joint communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy transmitting, in response to Senator KENDRICK'S resolution, information relative to negotiations with private parties for the operation of lands included in naval petroleum reserve No. 3, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

April 28, 1922: Senator LA FOLLETTE delivered an address in support of his resolution authorizing the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys to investigate the entire subject of leases upon naval oil reserves.

April 29, 1922: Senator LA FOLLETTE'S resolution passed the Senate unanimously; yeas 58; nays none.

June 7, 1922: Secretary Fall transmitted to Senator SMOOT, chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, all documents called for in Senator LA FOLLETTE'S resolution.

June 7, 1922: Secretary Fall transmitted to President Harding a report concerning the handling of all the naval petroleum reserves, with the request that it may be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys for their consideration.

June 8, 1922: Message from the President of the United States transmitting, in response to Senator LA FOLLETTE'S resolution, a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting information concerning the naval reserve oil leases. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

That report, thus made by Secretary Fall, advised the Senate through the President that pursuant to that part of the resolution which directed the transmission to the Senate of copies of all documents relating to these leases compilation of such documents was in process of completion. By that time, as my recollection is, several drayloads of these documents had been transmitted to the Committee upon Public Lands and Surveys, and the letter of Secretary Fall said that the work was still going forward. That was on June 8, 1922.

August 25, 1922: Senator KENDRICK delivered an address in the Senate on the leasing of the Teapot Dome.

That session of the Congress of the United States terminated on September 22, 1922. On June 8 the collection of these documents was not yet complete. Three months thereafter the Senate adjourned for the session.

The Congress reconvened on the 20th day of November, 1922, in special session but adjourned pursuant to the Constitution on December 4, 1922. During the period intervening between June and September the Public Lands Committee was holding hearings on the matter of the Red River (Okla.) oil leases, and during the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, and these were concluded on September 12, 1922. Those hearings were protracted and important.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I might add that a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys also spent some three weeks investigating the Pueblo Indian matters.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Reference is made to that in the RECORD which I have here.

The Senate reconvened on December 4, 1922.

December 20, 1922: The official minute book of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, at page 49, has the following:

Upon motion of Senator WALSH communications were sent to the following: Mayor W. A. Blackmore, of Casper, Wyo.; Gov. Robert D. Carey, of Wyoming; and Mr. G. B. Morgan, State geologist of Wyoming, asking if they had additional information concerning the Salt Creek and Teapot structures since their recent communications to Senator LA FOLLETTE.

In the course of the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] made in the month of April, 1922, he had referred to communications which he had received from these distinguished citizens of the State of Wyoming. Some seven or eight months had elapsed, and the committee desired to get further information from them, and communication was opened up with them for that purpose. That was on December 20.

January 3, 1923: The official minute book of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, at page 51, has the following:

Answers to wires sent the following at last meeting were read: Messrs. Blackmore, Carey, and Morgan.

Naval oil leases were discussed. Senator WALSH moved that the committee engage two experts, unbiased geologists, to make an investigation of the situation and report for the use and information of the committee. Carried. The geologists to be named at the next meeting.

The Public Lands Committee was holding hearings in the matter of the Pueblo Indian land bills during the fourth session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, commencing January 15, 1923.

January 24, 1923: The official minute book of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys at page 69 has the following:

Considered matter of appointment of geologists to investigate Teapot Dome situation. Subcommittee appointed as follows to select two geologists: Senators SMOOT, chairman; LENROOT, and WALSH of Montana.

February 3, 1923: The official minute book of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, at page 79, has the following:

Senator SMOOT reported that the subcommittee appointed to confer with the geologists in connection with the Teapot Dome had met Messrs. Clapp and Lewis and recommended that they be employed at a salary of $175 a day and expenses until the work was completed. The geologists would start about March 1, 1923, and would complete the examination within 60 days and submit a report. The recommendation was agreed to, and Senator SMOOT agreed to ask for an appropriation in the usual manner.

The geologists were to commence their work on March 1, 1923, and the session of the Congress would come to an end on the 4th day of March, under the Constitution. As a matter of fact, the weather was so severe at that time that it was impossible for them to get to work; and the work was delayed, according to my recollection, until about the 1st of June, 1923.

February 23, 1923: The official minute book of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, at page 93, has the following:

Moved to proceed with the hearings on the naval oil reserves resolution, commencing October 15, 1923, and that for the purpose of taking testimony five members of the committee will constitute a quorum.

I should say there that I made every possible effort to induce a majority of the members of the committee to remain after the adjournment of the session on March 4, 1923, to take up this matter as soon as the geologists made their report. I think that my ardency in urging that course will be sustained by the statement of any member of the committee who will speak upon the matter. However that may be, the Senate then adjourned, and it was agreed that we should begin the hearings on the 15th day of October, 1923.

October 15, 1923: A quorum of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys not being present, the hearing in the matter of the leasing of the naval oil reserves was put off until October 22, 1923.

October 22, 1923: Hearings commenced on Senate resolutions providing for an investigation of the subject of leases upon naval oil reserves.

This, I think, Mr. President, ought to dissipate the contention on the part of anybody that there was any delay on the part of the committee, or any member of the committee, in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them by the joint resolution.

SPEECH OF SENATOR JAMES A. REED.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, noting the return of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the floor a few minutes ago, I supposed he had come in here with a certain purpose, but as he has since left the floor I have concluded that I was wrong in that deduction. I had assumed that he would present for printing in the RECORD a very powerful speech delivered by one of our colleagues last night in the city of St. Louis. Since he is not here to do it, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD, according to the print contained in the New York Tribune of this morning, the speech delivered by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in St. Louis last evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. MOSES. Then I regret that I shall have to read the speech and give to it a rhetorical emphasis which perhaps printing in the RECORD might not do.

Mr. ROBINSON. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the introduction of bills and joint resolutions. The Senator from New Hampshire is out of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no desire to take up the time of the Senate on that subject. I want to say just a word in reference to what the Senator from Montana has said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order has been called for.

Mr. MOSES. The regular order is the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that I can be taken off my feet by an objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further bills and joint resolutions, the introduction of concurrent and other resolutions is in order.

RESERVOIR OR POWER SITES.

Mr. LENROOT. The bill (S. 665) to amend section 13, chapter 431, of an act approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L. p. 855), so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue trust and final patents on lands withdrawn or classified as power or reservoir sites, with a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees to enter upon and use any part of such land for reservoir or power-site purposes, was introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. It was favorably reported and is now upon the calendar. I ask that it be taken from the calendar and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LAND CLAIMS OF NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. LENROOT. I also desire to ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has not the floor.

Mr. MOSES. Then I will stay here demanding it.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys by the President of the United States relative to the Northern Pacific land-grant matter.

There being no objection, the letter of the President was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 23, 1924.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to bring to your attention a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture under date of February 19, 1924, in reference to the claim asserted by the Northern Pacific Railroad to large areas of valuable timberland within the national forests.

The possible loss of public title to these resources, which have been protected and developed for many years at public cost, arises under an adjudication of the land grand made by Congress to the Northern Pacific Railroad in 1864. It is my understanding that the legislation conveying this grant of 40,000,000 acres of public land was, in effect, a contract or covenant between the United States and the railroad company under which mutual obligations were assumed. Certain features of these obligations, particularly on the part of the Government, have from time to time been reviewed and determined by the Federal courts, but their decisions were confined necessarily and purposely to the immediate issues brought before them. At no time does there appear to have been a comprehensive review or determination of the entire transaction covering the mutual equities and obligations created by the covenant if the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad may purposely be so designated.

The statements contained in the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture raise serious questions as to the extent to which the railroad company may have obtained undue benefits from the grant, and also as to the extent of its compliance with the obligations imposed upon it by the legislation which conferred the grant. I believe that these questions should be fully determined before a final settlement of the matter is effected, and before further public lands are patented to the company. From the nature of the case, and particularly the broad and varied equities which it involves, it would seem that such a determination and settlement can be made only by the Congress.

The United States has granted lavishly of its public resources to aid the extension of transportation facilities and thereby the economic development of the Western States. No question as to the wisdom of that policy is involved in this issue. Nor is any question involved as to the legal and moral obligation of the Government to discharge in full the contractual obligations which it assumed for the accomplishment of public benefits. That the legal and equitable claims of the grantee should be fully weighed and safeguarded goes without saying. But it is still more imperative that the interests of the public, both in the possession and conservation of valuable natural resources and in the accomplishment of the purposes for which the grant was made be adequately protected in an equitable settlement of this question.

The Secretary of Agriculture in a letter to me states further a summary of the facts involved in this matter, as they have been developed through a painstaking investigation. The full record of that investigation has no doubt been placed at your disposal. I quote from the letter of Secretary Wallace, dated February 19, 1924:

> "In April, 1921, the Supreme Court rendered a decision (256 U. S. 51) with regard to lands in the indemnity limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific, holding that lands in these limits could not be withdrawn by the United States if they were needed to satisfy the acreage of the grant.
> "The tentative adjustment made by the Department of the Interior shows the grant to be deficient some 3,900,000 acres.
> "Large areas of national forest lands are within the indemnity limits of the grant. It follows that should the tentative adjustment become final a large acreage of these national forest lands will pass to the Northern Pacific.
> "When this situation became evident this department, through the Forest Service, began a thorough investigation of the Northern Pacific grants. As a result of this investigation certain representations were made to the Department of the Interior, and on January 24, 1924, I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior and asked him to join with me in sending to Congress a proposed joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants until Congress shall have made a full and complete inquiry into them.
> "The Secretary of the Interior complied with this request, and the proposed resolution was sent to Congress and was introduced in the House by Hon. N. J. SINNOTT, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, and in the Senate by Senator LENROOT.
> "As this matter no doubt will come to your attention, if it has not already, I desire to give you a brief statement of the reasons for this action by this department.
> "The case in which the Supreme Court (256 U. S. 51) defined the measure of the Northern Pacific grants did not take into consideration, and properly so, many other questions which I believe should be considered by Congress before the case reaches the point where the Northern Pacific may take these national forest lands.
> "The defaults of the Northern Pacific were numerous and flagrant, and the supplementary benefits allowed by the Government were many and lavish, but in the absence of action by Congress the courts and the administrative departments were and are without authority to consider the resulting equities, but have been forced to act as though the company had complied with every term of the grant, both in spirit and letter. Congress, as the contracting power in this case, has the power and authority to determine what weight shall be given to such violations of the grant and such beneficial concessions. It alone can inquire into the grants for the purpose of ascertaining whether they have been fairly satisfied to date by the United States, taking into consideration the equitable and other features of the grants that were not before the Supreme Court when it handed down its decision. (256 U. S. 51.)
> "I submit that if the proof is sufficient to show that the Northern Pacific failed to meet the requirements of its agreement, or that the Northern Pacific has already received a greater acreage or greater values than it was equitably entitled to receive, Congress has ample authority to save these national forest lands to the Government. I believe an investigation by Congress would show:
> "1. That the land grants were made for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the railroad. The total gross receipts of the Northern Pacific to June 30, 1917, from the sale of the lands from its grant amounted to $136,118,533.14. The cost of constructing the road did not exceed $70,000,000. The sale of lands has more than paid for the cost of constructing the railroad.
> "2. That the Northern Pacific failed to construct 1,507.21 miles of its railroad within the time required by law, thereby rendering the granted lands subject to forfeiture.
> "3. That the Northern Pacific failed to dispose of certain of its lands to settlers at not to exceed $2.50 per acre as required by the law. A somewhat similar provision in the Oregon & California grant was held by the Supreme Court to be an enforceable covenant. (238 U. S. 393.)
> "4. That the Northern Pacific failed to dispose of hundreds of thousands of acres of its lands at public sale as required by law.
> "5. That hundreds of thousands of acres of poor land in the Northern Pacific grant were erroneously classified as mineral. This land was turned back to the United States and the railroad acquired mineral indemnity rights therefor which were applied in part on more valuable lands in the indemnity limits.
> "6. That under a rule of law laid down by the Supreme Court the Northern Pacific has been erroneously allowed 1,500,000 acres too much land in the State of Washington.
> "7. That over 500,000 acres of land credited to the Northern Pacific should be deducted, because of conflict with the land grant of another road and the erroneous fixation of the land grant limit lines.
> "8. That approximately 640,000 acres of land have been erroneously allowed the Northern Pacific by reason of the Tacoma overlap.
> "9. That the Northern Pacific has received approximately 600,000 acres of land to which they were not entitled under their grant in the Wallula overlap.
> "10. That the Northern Pacific has been allowed to make over 1,300,000 acres of indemnity selections in its second indemnity belt, whereas these selections should have been confined to the first indemnity belt.
> "11. That for lands erroneously patented to the Northern Pacific the Government should be entitled to receive at least what the railroad received from the sale of these lands instead of $1.25 per acre.
> "12. That the Northern Pacific under the Mount Rainier Park act of March 2, 1899, relinquished to the United States thousands of acres of commercially valueless land and received therefor selection privileges applicable to the finest lands they could find in the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, and Wisconsin.
> "I am sending with this letter a mimeographed pamphlet, which is in the nature of a brief, dealing with the whole matter. This brief was filed by the Forest Service of this department with the General Land Office on July 12, 1923.
> "The resolution which has been introduced in Congress does not attempt to take any land from the Northern Pacific. It merely holds the adjustment of the grant and the issuance of further patents in abeyance until Congress has had an opportunity to make an inquiry into the land grants so that it may pass such legislation as it may deem right and proper.
> "It is my opinion that the case is beyond question one for the action of Congress. It would be extremely unfortunate if 3,000,000 acres of national-forest lands should be lost to the United States if Congress has the authority to save them under legislation which, in the light of all the law and the facts, would be fair and just to the Northern Pacific Railway Co."

For the reasons set forth by the Secretary of Agriculture I heartily concur in his recommendation that the entire matter should receive the attention of Congress. I therefore urge upon your committee the importance of action as early as possible which shall look to the fullest protection of the public interests herewith concerned. The recital of the facts has deeply interested me, and it is this interest, together with the conviction that a highly important public interest can only be effectively protected by appropriate congressional action, that prompts me to write you.

Most sincerely yours,

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Hon. IRVINE L. LENROOT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT, ETC.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2295) to amend the Federal farm loan act and the agricultural act of 1923, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

ETHEL ROBERTS LOOP.

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment (with an accompanying paper) proposing to appropriate $4,000 to pay Ethel Roberts Loop, widow of Carl R. Loop, late consul at Catania, Italy, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty of illness incurred in the Consular Service, intended to be proposed by him to the State and Justice Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESS OF SENATOR M'KELLAR ON WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have here a copy of an address delivered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] on Washington's Birthday, at Chattanooga, Tenn., where a great auditorium in honor of the ex-service men of the World War was dedicated. I have had the privilege of reading the address. It contains no offensive partisanship; it is a very excellent address, and is very brief. I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS DELIVERED BY SENATOR KENNETH MCKELLAR AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN., ON FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1924, AT THE SERVICES DEDICATING A GREAT AUDITORIUM IN HONOR OF THE EX-SERVICE MEN.

My fellow citizens, I have been asked to do an impossible thing to-day, namely, to eulogize fittingly, in five minutes, the greatest mortal man that probably the world ever produced, the late lamented Woodrow Wilson. Of course, it can not be done. I can only hope, in the time accorded me, to point out some leading facts in his life.

I was never an intimate of President Wilson's, but we were warm friends. I stood by him and his administration, and I knew him well. No one could come in touch with his wonderful and engaging personality, and not be his admirer. Since I have served in the Congress I have seen and known many great men in this country and from all parts of the world. I have touched hands with Presidents, rulers, kings, and princes; but I have never known a man in high place who so admirably fitted it, who so greatly adorned it, as President Wilson.

What constitutes greatness in a man is dependent upon many conditions. The age in which he lives, the race to which he belongs, the people from whom he springs, the Nation of which he is a citizen, his position in life, his moral character, his mental capacity, his education, his principles, his purposes, his ideals, his personality, his opportunities, his failures, his accomplishments, his successes, must all be taken into consideration.

Considering all these things, I think it can safely be said that Woodrow Wilson was the most remarkable figure that has ever arisen above the horizon of time and that he is entitled to first place among the sons of men.

AS A MAN AND CITIZEN.

Woodrow Wilson was born of a race of thinkers and doers. His people before him were clean and honest; Presbyterianly religious, and law-abiding, and he inherited all these rich and admirable qualities. As a boy, as a young man, as a son, as a brother, as a husband, as a father, and as a Christian gentleman, his life was devoted and blameless. He loved his family and his family loved him. He was intensely patriotic, but at the same time loved all mankind.

He had a master mind. He was the greatest scholar in the land. He was the greatest master of the English language that we had. He was the highest authority on civil government. He was an expert in economics. He was an historian without a peer. He was an orator equal to the best. His personality was the most remarkable of any man I have ever known. He was the greatest democrat in the highest and best meaning of that word that the world ever knew. In my humble judgment he was the greatest statesman of this or any other age.

AS PRESIDENT.

Because of his ability, because of his extraordinary education, because of his wonderful mental capacity, because of his experience as president of one of our greatest universities and as governor of his own State, because of his expert knowledge of civil government and of his mastery of economics, with a knowledge of history unsurpassed, no man ever came to the presidential chair so well equipped as was Woodrow Wilson.

Under his administration our Nation reached its greatest power. There was no scandal that arose during the eight years of his service. His administration was clean. His administration was honest. His administration was uplifting. In short, our country reached its greatest prosperity at home and its widest influence abroad. Under it we became the first power in all the world.

Woodrow Wilson never took a selfish position for our country. He wanted and would have no other nation's territory. He wanted and would have no indemnity in war. His sole object was to make our great, rich, powerful Nation the instrument of bringing about a perpetual peace among all nations, and instituting a rule of righteousness and justice among the children of men. He loved all mankind. He wanted America to take the lead not in putting mankind under the yoke of America but in uplifting and aiding all mankind, and especially in seeking to do away with the horrors of war, and to lead all nations to rise to higher, better, and nobler things.

He wanted "the world made safe for democracy." He wanted all agreements between nations to be "open and openly arrived at." He wanted "pitiless publicity" in all public affairs. He wanted all peoples to be governed by "self-determination." He wanted "the seas to be free to all nations and to all people." He wanted to abolish war, to abolish selfish and secret diplomacy, to abolish a desire for the territory of others. His ideals were the highest, his purposes the purest in every affair of life. His ideals, though ahead of his time, were the greatest ideals that were ever put forth by any mortal man.

WORLD LEADER.

No man before him was ever such a world figure. No man was ever revered by so many and such various peoples. No man was ever known to so many people. No man ever advocated policies affecting so many people. No man ever before caused so many nations to agree to keep the peace. No man ever had such a dominating influence in the world's affairs. He was known and believed in by all peoples, by all races, and by all nations. His ideals were discussed wherever civilization existed. He was the one masterful, outstanding figure of the world during the last century.

All greatness is relative. Washington's success could not have been excelled in his day in the surroundings which he had. Lincoln's success could not have been excelled in his day in his surroundings. What they would have done if they had been in Wilson's place of enlarged opportunities, of course, no one knows. We Americans might well believe either might have done as well. We know that neither could have done better. But the opportunities were not theirs. They were Woodrow Wilson's, and we all know that he lived up to his opportunities.

He was the Commander in Chief and the actual leader of the largest army ever organized on the face of the earth. That Army was successful in the greatest war ever fought among men. For two years after April 6, 1917, when we entered the war, Woodrow Wilson was the actual commander and ruler of the destinies of the world. He dominated the world more completely than Alexander or Caesar or Napoleon ever did. And, because of the wonderful success of his undertakings up to that time, and because of the wonderful feat of transporting 2,000,000 men across German-submarine-infested seas, there to fight and win the greatest military victory ever achieved, it can easily be seen that Wilson was the foremost war leader that ever appeared on the scene in the affairs of men. But he led in no unrighteous war. His foremost purpose was to lead the world through a war in which he had had no part in starting into everlasting peace.

I believe he was the greatest President that ever sat in the presidential chair, and the greatest world leader, civil or military, of this or any other age. In his ideals, his purposes, in his crusader-like determination to win the world to a higher and nobler existence and to bring about a permanent peace he was more like the great Prince of Peace than any man who ever lived on the face of the earth. As the days, as the years, and as the ages go by his fame will grow and increase, and his name will be praised by all who love peace, justice, freedom, and righteousness everywhere. The purposes that guided his life and the ideals for which he stood will stand as a monument to him that time will but make more enduring.

When 10,000 years shall have rolled away his name will still be a household world throughout the world, and it will be from everlasting to everlasting.

ENFORCEMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment intended to be proposed as a substitute for the resolution (S. Res. 171) offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], and I ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas on the night of the 15th day of February, 1924, on Pennsylvania Avenue, in the city of Washington, Hon. FRANK L. GREENE, a United States Senator from the State of Vermont, while walking peaceably along the Avenue, was struck and severely wounded by a gunshot: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be authorized and directed to investigate the facts and circumstances leading up to the shooting and report its findings to the Senate, as to placing the responsibility for the act committed and providing measures to change the existing conditions under which similar deplorable acts may occur, together with such other conclusions and recommendations as to said committee may seem proper.

WILLIAM J. DONALD.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 172), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to William J. Donald the sum of $228.33, being the amount received by him per month as clerk to the Hon. Samuel D. Nicholson, late a Senator from the State of Colorado.

PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT BY EX-OFFICIALS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have a resolution to offer if I can get recognition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to offer a Senate resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information. I ask that it be read. Then I will ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 173), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

1. Give the name of any ex-Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, or any ex-Cabinet officer, who, within two years after he had served in the House or the Senate, or held official position as head of one of the departments of the executive government, and who, since the 1st day of January, 1918, has appeared as attorney or agent, or who is a member of any firm or partnership appearing as attorney or agent, before the Department of the Treasury, or any of its bureaus, divisions, or subdivisions, in advocacy of any claim of any kind against the Government of the United States.

2. If there has been any such appearance as outlined in paragraph 1, then give in full and in detail the nature of the claim, the amount of money involved, the amount of money, if any, allowed such claimant, and the final disposition of the matter involved.

3. If there has been any correspondence between the Treasury Department or any of its branches, divisions, or officials, and any of the persons described in paragraph 1, in relation to the subject matter outlined in paragraph 1, then supply the Senate fully with all such letters or copies thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have a similar resolution to offer——

Mr. WATSON. May I ask the Senator a question about the resolution which has already been passed?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. I am assuming that the Senator has examined the statutes so as to know whether the Secretary of the Treasury can give us the information the Senator seeks without violating any of those statutes. Very much of the information in the Treasury Department the Secretary can not give to the public, and I was just wondering whether the Senator had examined the statutes.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not made an examination of the statutes for that purpose, but I assume there is nothing wrong in the Secretary of the Treasury giving the information I have called for in this resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there is a statute, forty years or more old, prohibiting persons who were in the employ of the Government from taking cases against the Government. There was a statute passed in 1917 prohibiting certain other persons from appearing before the Government departments within two years after they severed their relations with the Government.

Mr. MOSES. I do not understand that those are the statutes to which the Senator from Indiana refers. The Senator from Indiana is referring to the statute which makes certain information in the custody of the Treasury Department not open to the public.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, I did not understand the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer resolutions, word for word, like the resolution just passed, directed to the Secretary of the Interior, one directed to the Secretary of the Navy, another to the Secretary of War, another to the Attorney General, and another one in the same language, except that it puts in the usual phrase, "if not incompatible with the public interest," directed to the Secretary of State; and still another one, which I will ask to have read, because it is somewhat different, directed to the Shipping Board. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of these other resolutions, directed to the heads of the various departments, and I suppose it will not be necessary to read them, because they are in the same language.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the first resolution for information.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senate is willing to take my word for it, I ask that the reading of the resolutions be dispensed with. As I said, they are in the same language employed in the resolution which was just passed, except that the one directed to the Secretary of State has the clause in it that he is to furnish the information "if not incompatible with the public interest."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate consent to pass upon the unanimous-consent request without the reading of the resolutions?

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the resolution be read, Mr. President, and let us consider them one at a time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the first resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 174), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish the Senate the following information:

1. Give the name of any ex-Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, or any ex-Cabinet officer, who, within two years after he had served in the House or the Senate, or held official position as head of one of the departments of the executive government, and who, since the 1st day of January, 1918, has appeared as attorney or agent, or who is a member of any firm or partnership appearing as attorney or agent, before the Department of State, or any of its bureaus, divisions, or subdivisions, in advocacy of any claim of any kind against the Government of the United States.

2. If there has been any such appearance, as outlined in paragraph 1, then give in full and in detail the nature of the claim, the amount of money involved, the amount of money, if any, allowed such claimant, and the final disposition of the matter involved.

3. If there has been any correspondence between the Department of State, or any of its branches, divisions, or officials, and any of the persons described in paragraph 1 in relation to the subject matter outlined in paragraph 1, then supply the Senate fully with all such letters or copies thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, this being a debatable question, I ask for recognition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not debatable.

Mr. MOSES. A request for the consideration of a resolution by unanimous consent is not debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not before 1 o'clock.

Mr. MOSES. Then, Mr. President, I will wait eight minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Hampshire may proceed.

Mr. NORRIS. I object to that. It is only eight minutes before he will be able to take up what he wants to speak about.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senate will give me unanimous consent for the printing of a speech by a Senator, I will not take any time at all. In my capacity as watchdog of the RECORD, being chairman of the Committee on Printing, I have often had occasion to object to the insertion of extraneous matter in the RECORD, but the unbroken rule has been that a speech delivered by a Senator, anywhere, on any subject, should be printed in the RECORD if unanimous consent was asked for. I asked for unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the speech made by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] last night in the city of St. Louis. It was refused. In view of the return of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the floor, I again ask unanimous consent for the printing of the speech in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has submitted a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRISON. I only asked unanimous consent that the Senator might proceed. I am very anxious to hear him, but there is pending his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object. Let the proceedings of the Senate be in regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas object?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution which has just been read.

The resolution was agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 175) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

1. Give the name of any ex-Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, or any ex-Cabinet officer, who, within two years after he had served in the House or the Senate, or held official position as head of one of the departments of the executive government, and who, since the 1st day of January, 1918, has appeared as attorney or agent, or who is a member of any firm or partnership appearing as attorney or agent, before the Department of the Interior, or any of its bureaus, divisions, or subdivisions, in advocacy of any claim of any kind against the Government of the United States.

2. If there has been any such appearance, as outlined in paragraph 1, then give in full and in detail the nature of the claim, the amount of money involved, the amount of money, if any, allowed such claimant, and the final disposition of the matter involved.

3. If there has been any correspondence between the Interior Department, or any of its branches, divisions, or officials, and any of the persons described in paragraph 1 in relation to the subject matter outlined in paragraph 1, then supply the Senate fully with all such letters or copies thereof.

The resolution (S. Res. 176) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

1. Give the name of any ex-Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, or any ex-Cabinet officer, who, within two years after he had served in the House or the Senate, or held official position as head of one of the departments of the executive government, and who, since the 1st day of January, 1918, has appeared as attorney or agent, or who is a member of any firm or partnership appearing as attorney or agent, before the Navy Department, or any of its bureaus, divisions, or subdivisions, in advocacy of any claim of any kind against the Government of the United States.

2. If there has been any such appearance, as outlined in paragraph 1, then give in full and in detail the nature of the claim, the amount of money involved, the amount of money, if any, allowed such claimant, and the final disposition of the matter involved.

3. If there has been any correspondence between the Navy Department, or any of its branches, divisions, or officials, and any of the persons described in paragraph 1 in relation to the subject matter outlined in paragraph 1, then supply the Senate fully with all such letters or copies thereof.

The resolution (S. Res. 177) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

1. Give the name of any ex-Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, or any ex-Cabinet officer, who, within two years after he had served in the House or the Senate, or held official position as head of one of the departments of the executive government, and who, since the 1st day of January, 1918, has appeared as attorney or agent, or who is a member of any firm or partnership appearing as attorney or agent, before the Department of War, or any of its bureaus, divisions, or subdivisions, in advocacy of any claim of any kind against the Government of the United States.

2. If there has been any such appearance, as outlined in paragraph 1, then give in full and in detail the nature of the claim, the amount of money involved, the amount of money, if any, allowed such claimant, and the final disposition of the matter involved.

3. If there has been any correspondence between the Department of War, or any of its branches, divisions, or officials, and any of the persons described in paragraph 1 in relation to the subject matter outlined in paragraph 1, then supply the Senate fully with all such letters or copies thereof.

The resolution (S. Res. 178) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

1. Give the name of any ex-Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate or any ex-Cabinet officer who within two years after he had served in the House or the Senate, or held official position as head of one of the departments of the executive government, and who, since the 1st day of January, 1918, has appeared as attorney or agent, or who is a member of any firm or partnership appearing as attorney or agent, before the Department of Justice, or any of its bureaus, divisions, or subdivisions, in advocacy of any claim of any kind against the Government of the United States.

2. If there has been any such appearance, as outlined in paragraph 1, then give in full and in detail the nature of the claim, the amount of money involved, the amount of money, if any, allowed such claimant, and the final disposition of the matter involved.

3. If there has been any correspondence between the Department of Justice, or any of its branches, divisions, or officials, and any of the persons described in paragraph 1 in relation to the subject matter outlined in paragraph 1, then supply the Senate fully with all such letters or copies thereof.

The resolution (S. Res. 179) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board be, and it is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

1. Give the name of any ex-Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, or of any ex-Cabinet officer, who, within two years after he had served in the House or the Senate, or held official position as head of one of the departments of the Government, and who, since the 1st day of January, 1918, has appeared as attorney or agent, or who is a member of any firm or partnership appearing as attorney or agent before the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any of the officers or officials or branches of either the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, in advocacy of any claims of any kind requiring action thereon by the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any of the officers or officials of the United States Shipping Board or Emergency Fleet Corporation.

2. If there has been any such appearance, as outlined in paragraph 1, then give in full and in detail the nature of the claim, the amount of money involved, the amount of money, if any, allowed such claimant, and the final disposition of the matter involved.

3. If there has been any correspondence between the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any officer or official of the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and any of the persons described in paragraph 1 in relation to the subject matter outlined in paragraph 1, then supply the Senate in full with all such letters or correspondence.

4. If any of the persons described in paragraph 1 have appeared as attorneys or agents, or if any of such persons are members of any partnership or firm appearing as attorneys or agents, before the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or before any official of the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, either directly or through correspondence, since the 1st day of January, 1918, in behalf of any person, firm, or corporation, asking for any official action upon the part of the United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or any officer or official thereof, then supply the Senate fully with such information, together with the correspondence, if any, thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

SPEECH OF SENATOR JAMES A. REED.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. MOSES. By which clock is the Presiding Officer going, the one which he faces or the one behind him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not feel that he is called upon to announce in advance a decision about the timepiece. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, is the resolution now debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable after 1 o'clock.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having passed, the Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I shall not repeat to the Senate nor for the edification of the galleries what I said before about the rupture of the unbroken custom of printing in the RECORD upon request any speech delivered by any Senator on any subject anywhere. But since the sensitive leader of the minority—I am not sure that it is the minority, however, in view of recent events—since the titular leader of the minority has objected to printing in the RECORD the report of a speech delivered by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in the city of St. Louis last night, in pursuance of a campaign which the senior Senator from Missouri doubtless deems to be well advised, and being wholly unwilling that the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should lose the vigorous language and terse arguments presented by the senior Senator from Missouri, I shall have to read the speech as it appears on the front page——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MOSES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator think that the matter should be discussed in the Senate, and that all political speeches made by candidates for the Presidency upon both sides should be discussed in the Senate?

Mr. MOSES. We have had all sorts of discussions of all kinds of speeches. There are Senators here who seem to make of a speech delivered anywhere in the country a text for a sermon in the Senate. This, however, is an absolutely unique situation. This is a candidate for the Presidency from the Senator's party, the only announced candidate on the other side of the Chamber. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who is not here; but if he should deliver a good speech I certainly would not object to having it printed in the RECORD.

Our practice has been to print speeches of Senators, it makes no difference what the subject matter nor where delivered nor under what circumstances. Invariably the speech of a Senator is printed in the RECORD, and this one is going to be printed in the RECORD, because I am going to read it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he proceeds?

Mr. MOSES. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator would not object to printing in the RECORD some speeches made by the Senator from California, Mr. HIRAM W. JOHNSON——

Mr. MOSES. I have not the slightest objection, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator did not wait until I finished. I was referring to the Senator from California, for whom some papers report the Senator from New Hampshire as being in favor of for President, while other papers quote him as being against him.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, I have not the slightest objection. Those are speeches the Senator wants to have printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; they are some speeches of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. The Senator will have no objection to those being inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. MOSES. Certainly not. I will not object to printing in the RECORD the speech of a Senator made anywhere.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether he knows that the report he has is a correct report of the speech delivered?

Mr. MOSES. I prefaced by saying that I should read it as it appeared in the New York Tribune of this morning, which, being a reputable newspaper, I presume is fairly correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know that that is a sufficient verification of the truth of the report.

Mr. MOSES. The headlines:

> MCADOO HIRED FOR INFLUENCE, REED ASSERTS—NOT EMPLOYED BY DOHENY AND MORSE FOR LEGAL ABILITY, SAYS SENATOR OF RIVAL FOR NOMINATION—"WHEEDLED MONEY FROM GOVERNMENT"—EX-SECRETARY GOT HALF OF $100,000 SHIP BOARD GAVE FIRM IS CHARGE.
> ST. LOUIS, February 25.—United States Senator JAMES A. REED, in formally opening his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination at a mass meeting here to-night, declared that in his opinion "not one-tenth of the corruption and iniquity which has existed is yet laid bare," in referring to the oil disclosures.
> He charged that William Gibbs McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury and an opponent for the nomination, expected to receive $1,094,000 in "legal fees" from E. L. Doheny, oil magnate; the Charles W. Morse interests; and motion-picture concern, although he "did not appear in a single lawsuit."
> MAKES BRIBERY CHARGE.
> The Senator reiterated his platform and reviewed the oil scandal at length. He said the disclosures—
> "warranted in saying that the people of the United States were, by bribery, deprived of these great oil deposits upon which the Nation must rely in the hour of extremity.
> "Facts are being constantly exposed and when the whole foul mess is known the American people will be convinced of the supreme necessity of purging the Government and driving from power every tainted man.
> "The evidence thus far taken involves the Attorney General to a certain degree and his department will be rigidly investigated."
> His speech in part follows:
> "I am asking the indorsement of the Democracy of Missouri and of the Nation for the presidential nomination.
> "Mr. McAdoo publicly announced he did not intend to enter the list against any home candidate, but, for reasons which are doubtless satisfactory to himself, he has singled me out as an exception to his general rule. He comes into the State of Missouri and is receiving some support.
> "Having been invited into the arena, I come and give my reasons why the attorney for Mr. Doheny should not receive the indorsement of the Missouri Democracy.
> DOHENY'S QUEST FOR INFLUENCE.
> "Mr. Doheny came to Washington. He was in search of influence, and to obtain it was willing to expend large sums of money. Mr. Doheny took into his employ five Cabinet or ex-Cabinet officers. I do not say these lawyers were corrupt. I do say that with the possible one exception, Garrison, they were not employed for their legal ability.
> "Doheny swore that he employed McAdoo shortly after he left the Cabinet, which was on December 16, 1918.
> "For his services at Washington Mr. McAdoo was paid $100,000. He was removed from that field of endeavor when the Democratic administration was succeeded by the Republican administration. Such is Doheny's own testimony. It remains uncontradicted.
> EMPLOYMENT BY MORSE.
> "But Doheny was not the only man who bought influence. There was Morse, who hired lawyers and paid them in commissions on coal contracts with foreign governments.
> "Morse will be remembered as the gentleman who wrecked a string of banks and got into the penitentiary.
> "Singularly enough, the same lawyer who convinced President Taft that Morse's complexion, which was superinduced by a diet of soap, indicated a speedy death by Bright's disease, now sits in the Cabinet as Attorney General of the United States.
> "After his release from the penitentiary Morse proclaimed himself a patriot and organized a concern to build ships. For his transactions with the Government he was indicted. On Mr. Morse's trial Mr. McAdoo appeared and testified for the defense. McAdoo's sworn testimony discloses that either before or shortly after he resigned as Director General of Railroads he became a member of the firm of McAdoo, Cotton & Franklin, and that he resumed the practice of law June 1, 1919.
> READ BRIEF BY ANOTHER.
> "About 90 days after McAdoo left the Government employ he entered the employment of Morse's companies. It should be noted that McAdoo's partner, Cotton, had been the attorney for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and therefore for the Shipping Board.
> "Shortly after entering Morse's employment, Mr. McAdoo appeared before the Shipping Board on behalf of Morse's company and read a brief prepared by a lawyer named Gordon. He does not appear to have got very far with that case, the fact being that the Emergency Fleet Corporation contended that McAdoo did not know the facts of the controversy he was talking about.
> "On December 31, 1919, the transport company made a contract to pay McAdoo's firm 75 cents a ton on approximately 400,000 tons of coal to be shipped to the Italian Government.
> "The aggregate total expected to be shipped was 844,000 tons.
> "The amount expected to be collected by McAdoo was $744,000.
> "As a matter of fact, the coal actually shipped realized an indebtedness to the McAdoo firm of $165,712.64. The lawyers only got $33,304.45 in cash and some bad notes for the balance.

"Going along with these lucrative engagements was the employment by the moving picture people at an annual fee of $100,000.

"The total of fees thus far discovered which McAdoo expected to realize was $944,000.

"To this must be added the Doheny fees of $150,000.

"Total $1,094,000.

DID NOT APPEAR IN SUIT.

"For all this McAdoo did not appear in a single lawsuit. He was dealing for the most part in his domestic transactions with men who had been part of the administration when he was a member of the Cabinet.

"Thereupon McAdoo undertook process with which he was more familiar. He appealed to John Barton Payne, chairman of the Shipping Board, to advance to the Morse company $100,000, representing that it was necessary to have this money in order to prevent a receivership for the company. He evidently succeeded in convincing Judge Payne that the payment of this money was absolutely necessary to save Morse's company from bankruptcy.

GOT HALF OF MONEY.

"The money thus paid over was Government money. It was paid over on the claim that it was necessary to prevent bankruptcy. Nevertheless McAdoo charged and received for securing the $100,000 to prevent bankruptcy a fee of $50,000.

"I pause to inquire was he then engaged in ordinary legal service or in wheedling money out of the Government he had just served?

"The Groton Iron Works is another Morse company. It was in the hands of a receiver. In September, 1919, the same month Mr. McAdoo had earned the $50,000 fee I have just mentioned, he took up with the Shipping Board the question of lifting the receivership of the Groton Iron Works. As a result a contract was made between the Shipping Board and the United States Transport Co. (a Morse company) for the purchase of the vessels constructed at the Groton Iron Works under prior contracts with the Emergency Fleet Corporation. For this service McAdoo's firm charged the Groton Iron Works $50,000. It was claimed, however, that this sum actually was not paid.

NOT "LEGAL WORK."

"Again we observe that the work done is not what is ordinarily called 'legal work.' It consisted in securing action by the Government favorable to the Morse company.

"On December 30, 1919, Morse, his sons, and William Guggenheim, constituting the board of directors of the United States Transport Co., approved a contract to pay McAdoo's law firm $1 a ton on 444,000 tons of coal contracted to be shipped to France, Morse stating that the fee was in connection with negotiations of the French coal contracts.

"In his dealings with the French and Italian Governments he was transacting business with Governments to which he had shelled out American dollars during the war.

"But McAdoo called his cohorts together in solemn conclave at Chicago. He submitted to them, to their decision, the question: 'Am I an asset or a liability?' He admitted substantially all that Doheny had said except that he insisted he only got $150,000 from Doheny instead of $250,000, as Doheny had said. And thereupon, for no other apparent reason than that the amount had been reduced, these distinguished gentlemen set up a pæan of praise for McAdoo. With them it was the size of the fee, not its character."

Mr. President, I feel that I ought to apologize to the distinguished senior Senator from Missouri for not having been able to give to his words the force which I am sure he employed when uttering them at St. Louis last night.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat may I ask him if he has a full copy of the speech of the senior Senator from Missouri, and if so, whether he would have any objection to putting it in the RECORD?

Mr. MOSES. An entire copy?

Mr. HARRISON. A copy of the entire speech.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, not the slightest, but I am afraid the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] would object.

ARTICLE BY SENATOR STANFIELD AND SPEECHES BY SENATOR HIRAM W. JOHNSON.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to read—it will not take long—from the Oregon Daily Journal of Tuesday, February 19, a very recent issue. The article is headed "McAdoo is given clean bill by Senator STANFIELD," and reads:

Insisting that "McAdoo was not in any way involved with the transaction between Doheny, Sinclair, and Secretary Fall," and that "President Coolidge has shown his fairness in selecting former Senator Atlee Pomerene as one of the legal investigators of the so-called oil scandals," and has thus "pulled him from the quagmire of senatorial defeat and given him the opportunity of coming before the American people," Senator R. N. STANFIELD, in Portland for a day, gave his impressions of recent developments in Washington and in national politics.

I am quoting Senator STANFIELD, the junior Senator from Oregon. It is needless for me to say that he is a Republican. I continue the reading:

"I am a member of the Public Lands Committee that has been conducting the investigation of the national oil leases," Senator STANFIELD said. "Up to date we have discovered nothing more than a number of suspicious circumstances. Many good names have been drawn into the scandal that are entirely irresponsible for any wrongdoing, if there was wrongdoing. McAdoo was not in any way involved with the transaction between Doheny or Sinclair and Secretary Fall."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD some speeches, including the newspaper headlines, which have been made by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] in his campaign for the Presidency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The speeches referred to are as follows:

JOHNSON ATTACKS MOTIVES OF FORD IN COOLIDGE PLEA—ASKS WHAT LED MANUFACTURER TO CHANGE AFTER HE DENOUNCED GORGAS PLANT SALE—SEES PSYCHOLOGICAL SHIFT—AND WINDS UP BY REMARKING THAT FORD IS "A MARVELOUS BUSINESS MAN"—PRESIDENT WILL REPLY—FRIEND PREDICTS THAT A REPORT FROM WHITE HOUSE WILL BE ISSUED PROMPTLY.

[From the New York Times, December 23, 1923.]

WASHINGTON, December 22.—Senator HIRAM JOHNSON issued today a statement questioning the motives of Henry Ford in indorsing President Coolidge, and intimating that he was induced to announce his approval of the President by the introduction of Representative MADDEN'S bill to sell Muscle Shoals and the administration's tax reduction proposals, characterized by the California Senator as favorable to big business.

Senator JOHNSON issued the statement after conferring with his advisers, and after it became known that Mr. Ford had turned his influence actively for Coolidge delegates in Michigan. The statement reads:

"American politics present a most interesting psychological study. Henry Ford has declared for Mr. Coolidge because, as he says, Mr. Coolidge is 'safe.' Immediately the part of the press of the country representing special privilege, which has always denounced and caricatured Mr. Ford, gives him a certificate of character, and with open arms welcomes him to its ranks.

"Perhaps the time is propitious for Emma Goldman and Bill Haywood to return, declare for Mr. Coolidge, and be acclaimed by the same special privilege press. But in the light of Mr. Ford's previous utterances, just when did Mr. Coolidge, in Mr. Ford's opinion, become 'safe'?

"On the 13th day of October, after Mr. Coolidge had been in office for more than two months, and when Secretary Weeks had sold what Ford claimed to be a part of the Muscle Shoals project, Mr. Ford denounced in unmeasured terms the Secretary of War, and inferentially the administration, as being under the control of private interests inimical to the farmers, and the Secretary of War made an angry rejoinder.

CITES THE MADDEN BILL.

"Obviously, according to Mr. Ford, the administration of Mr. Coolidge was then unsafe and didn't even wish to do right. Thereafter Congressman MADDEN gave to the press the outline of a measure he would introduce in Congress, apparently for the administration, designed to give Mr. Ford Muscle Shoals and a plant of like character to that sold by Weeks. The message of the President on the 6th day of December was not inimical to this idea. Mr. MADDEN'S bill was then introduced and is now pending. On the 19th day of December Mr. Ford gives out his 'safe' interview.

"If his administration were under the influence of private interests on the 13th day of October, as Mr. Ford plainly said to the American public, what occurred between the 13th day of October and the 19th day of December to transmute the bitter denunciation of Mr. Ford against the administration then into enthusiastic advocacy now?

"Mr. Ford is entitled, of course, to his political opinions; equally, of course, these opinions can not control a Republican nomination. Mr. Ford was for Mr. Wilson when Mr. Wilson was President. Mr. Ford was for Mr. Harding when Mr. Harding was President Mr. Ford is for Mr. Coolidge while Mr. Coolidge is President. Mr. Ford is a marvelous business man."

COOLIDGE EXPECTED TO REPLY.

Administration advisers are confident that President Coolidge will reply to the arraignment of himself in the Johnson denunciation. It was said by a personal friend of the President that he would not allow the statement to go unanswered, and a formal reply is expected at once.

Some political observers say that the outburst of Senator JOHNSON instead of increasing his strength will prove a boomerang.

The campaign managers for President Coolidge are not disturbed by the Johnson attack. They say the country is becoming stronger each day for the President, especially in States where radical doctrines less than a year ago swept the party from its moorings.

Politicians recall the admission made a few days ago by Frank H. Hitchcock, manager for Senator JOHNSON, that the administration was assured of the southern Republican delegates. Mr. Hitchcock told his progressive followers that he would contest for delegates in North Carolina and Alabama only.

Mr. Slemp, accompanied by Richard Whaley, president of the rent board, left to-night for a 10-day vacation, which will be spent in playing golf in North Carolina and Florida. He is expected to look over the political field in the South.

FAIR PLAY IGNORED BY G. O. P. IN INCREASING DELEGATES, IS JOHNSON'S CHARGE—SOUTH UNDESERVING OF FAVORS CONFERRED, SENATOR CHARGES, CITING LIGHT HARDING VOTE—BITTERNESS IS PROJECTED INTO G. O. P. RANKS, AND TROUBLESOME FIGHT AT CONVENTION LOOMS—BREACH BETWEEN ADMINISTRATION FORCES AND CANDIDATES, AVOWED AND RECEPTIVE, IS WIDENED.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer, December 14, 1923.]

WASHINGTON, December 13.—Action of the Republican National Committee yesterday in reversing the program for reapportionment of delegates to the Republican National Convention next June, demanded by the last Republican convention and recommended by the subcommittee appointed to carry out the instructions of that convention, has widened the breach between administration forces and friends of other active and receptive candidates for the Republican presidential nomination.

Unless the storm that has been raised by the eleventh-hour shift of a majority of the committee dies down to a mild flurry by the time the convention convenes the national committee has produced a situation that promises to be exceedingly troublesome in that convention.

As was anticipated yesterday, Senator HIRAM JOHNSON of California, opponent of President Coolidge, in a vigorous statement to-day branded the act to be "repugnant to every sense of fair dealing and just representation."

TO BE CAMPAIGN ISSUE.

That he will embrace this issue in his campaign in the Northern and Western States is not doubted for a moment, and the additional ammunition it has given to him will be employed to the limit in his preconvention campaign.

His feeling is shared less openly by other prospective candidates and their friends, who are asserting that it was done under pressure of White House influence and in the interest of the candidacy of President Coolidge.

The President demonstrated twice during the national committee session that he and his friends are in control of party machinery, the first time when he induced Fred W. Upham, of Chicago, to withdraw the entry of Chicago as a contender for the convention, thus paving the way for the selection of Cleveland, and the second time in the reapportionment decision.

TEXT OF STATEMENT.

Senator JOHNSON'S statement, issued after conference with Frank H. Hitchcock, his campaign manager, was as follows:

"The unfair and unjust representation from Southern States in the Republican National Conventions and the scandals connected with delegates from certain of those States, after many years of agitation led finally to the resolution of June 13, 1920, of the Republican National Convention, directing the Republican National Committee within a year to adopt a just and equitable basis of representation in future conventions.

"Within a year the national committee did adopt a new basis of representation and ever since the Republican National Committee has distributed, as part of its literature, the representation thus agreed upon.

MEANING IS ILLUSTRATED.

"I take two States as illustrating what was done and what now has been undone. South Carolina polled 2,600 votes for President Harding; Mississippi 11,500 votes. Under the mandate of the Republican National Convention, South Carolina was awarded four delegates and Mississippi four.

"The former action yesterday was rescinded, the mandate of the last Republican convention contemptuously ignored, and South Carolina now is given 11, and Mississippi 12, a total for the two States polling 14,000 Harding votes of 23 delegates.

"In these States there is no real political party. There is nothing Republican in them except a few officeholders, absolutely under the direction and control of the administration.

"South Dakota polled 110,000 votes for Harding and is given 13 delegates. Michigan polled 762,000 Harding votes, 50 times as many as South Carolina and Mississippi, and is given only 33 delegates. Nebraska polled 350,000 Harding votes, nearly 18 times as many as these two Southern States, and has 19 delegates. Indiana with 606,000 Harding votes, 45 times as many, has 33 delegates; California, polling 625,000 Harding votes, 44 times as many, is given 29 delegates. New Jersey with 611,000 Republican votes is given 31 delegates.

"And so it runs throughout the list of Republican States. The Republican States are penalized. The Southern States, where there is no Republican Party, and where delegations sometimes are a farce and a scandal, are rewarded. The resolution of the national convention has been discarded, the will of the Republicans of the party flouted.

CALLS ACT REPUGNANT.

"This kind of politics needs no characterization. The campaign commences with an act repugnant to every sense of fair dealing and just representation."

It has not been determined whether or not the Johnson organization will carry the fight against the committee's action yesterday to the national convention, although Senator ROBERT B. HOWELL, Nebraska, who yesterday fought the committee's decision, believes that this could be done successfully. Senator HOWELL takes the position that the committee, having reduced the southern representation within a year, as ordered by the 1920 convention, had no power at its meeting yesterday to reopen the question.

JOHNSON OPENS CAMPAIGN WITH ATTACK ON WORLD COURT PLAN—INSISTS UNITED STATES WOULD ULTIMATELY BE DRAWN INTO LEAGUE; CALLS TAX REDUCTION ISSUE "SMOKE SCREEN"; FAVORS BONUS; CRITICIZES ARMS SALE.

[From New York Tribune, January 4, 1924.]

CLEVELAND, January 3.—Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, in a frontal attack on the administration, opened his campaign for the Republican nomination for President here to-day. His utterances were taken to be virtually the platform on which he will carry his fight throughout the Nation. The full text of his address follows:

"I have no apologies to make for the rôle in which I appear here to-night. As an American, I am exercising an American's prerogative. I am exercising that prerogative not only because it is my pleasure to do so, but in response to requests from practically every State in this Union. I am here to-night under the auspices of men and women whose citizenship is a real and precious thing to them, with whom service to their common country is superior to all else, and who, while Republicans, have ever maintained their political and their personal independence. I am proud under their auspices to speak in this city and to the citizens of this State.

"Our appeal is made primarily to Republicans, but it concerns all who believe in popular government, and who foresee that a successful assault upon popular government may shake the very foundation of our institutions.

BEGINS IN "GOOD HUMOR."

"I begin this contest wholly philosophically and in entire good humor; but during its progress I shall not hesitate, as in every other political contest in which I have engaged, to express myself concerning policies with such force and emphasis as I can command, and without regard to whether my words shall be pleasing or soothing to those in positions of power, who arrogate to themselves the right to rule the rest of us.

"I have recently observed that certain people, including the distinguished Detroit manufacturer, have deplored that we should have an election this year, and perhaps at all; and many politicians rather hysterically denounce me because I have interfered with the serenity of the occasion, and have not permitted their plans for a nomination by default to be consummated. These gentlemen look upon the fundamental American right of your participation and mine in our politics as a sort of lese majesty, an unwarranted interference with their prerogative to rule, and a sacrilegious effort to prevent the divine right of succession.

"I shall not concede that collectors of revenue, United States marshals, postmasters, and other officeholders and politicians, high and low, who 'bend the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning,' may themselves alone nominate candidates for the Presidency. I grant that they may sometimes succeed in nominating them, but I deny this is their exclusive privilege. And in the very inception, therefore, of this contest in a matter of utmost importance comes the clash of views.

"I demand that the rank and file of the Republican Party shall be consulted concerning the Republican nomination for President and that the will of the rank and file shall prevail. The leaders upon the other side, by manipulation and otherwise, would have a different rule, and they have demonstrated by their recent actions their contempt for the men and women who in reality constitute the Republican Party. I ask no more than that the Republicans of the Nation shall nominate their candidate for President. Republicans should accept no less.

FEARS "POLLUTION" IN NAMING DELEGATES MAY "TAINT VERY CONVENTION ITSELF."

"I believe in direct primaries and in direct legislation. Our opponents do not. I insist that the Republicans in Ohio shall have an equal right in determining the nominee for President with the Republicans in South Carolina. Obviously, our opponents do not so believe. At the initial stage of this campaign belief in popular government stands in opposition to belief that government belongs to the few who, because they possess it for the moment, ruthlessly perpetuate themselves in power.

"The selection of a President begins with the apportionment of delegates to a national convention. Just as pollution at the source of a stream will pollute the whole stream, wrong and injustice in the selection of delegates to a national convention will permeate and taint the very convention itself.

"The selection of delegates from certain of the Southern States had become so corrupt and had created so many scandals that finally the Republican National Convention in 1920 passed a resolution commanding within a year the Republican National Committee to adopt a 'just and equitable basis' of representation in future national conventions. The national committee obeyed and within the year acted, and while its action did not constitute 'a just and equitable representation,' nevertheless, it reduced the delegates in Southern States where there is no Republican Party.

ACTION IS NULLIFIED.

"The reduction was a mere step in the right direction. It did not do justice to the real Republicans, but it furnished the basis for further reductions. This work of the national committee solemnly done after full hearings a few days ago in Washington, under the orders of our opponents, was nullified, and the scandalous and unfair representation accorded Southern States in past conventions was again given them.

"I speak of this outrageously unfair selection of delegates because there is a real service that we can render both our party and the Nation and because there is a fundamental principle at stake. The service we may render is to have conventions which honestly express the will of the Republican Party, and beyond that the principle for which we strive is that this Government belongs to all its people, the Republican Party belongs to all its members, the people themselves are entitled to govern the country, just as the membership of the Republican Party is entitled to govern that party.

DISCREDITED OFFICEHOLDERS.

"Nine Southern States—Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia—polled 489,000 votes for President Harding. These nine Southern States have 134 delegates to the Republican National Convention. Ohio polled 1,182,000 votes for President Harding, and Ohio has 51 delegates to the Republican National Convention. Ohio polled two and a half times as many Republican votes as the nine Southern States, and these nine Southern States have more than two and a half times as many delegates as Ohio.

"The State of South Carolina polled for President Harding 2,600 votes and has 11 delegates to the Republican National Convention. Ohio polled 450 times as many Republican votes in 1920 as did South Carolina, and yet by the apportionment of delegates 1 Republican in South Carolina, where there is no Republican Party and where delegates are chosen by a few discredited Federal officeholders, equals more than 100 Republicans in Ohio in the councils of the Republican Party.

REPROACH TO PARTY.

"There is not the remotest possibility of a single Republican elector being chosen in any one of these nine Southern States, and yet the Republican National Committee recently, after it had reduced South Carolina to four delegates, and other Southern States in like fashion, with a hysterical fear of what would happen in States where there is the right of expression concerning the nomination for President, deliberately increased the representation again, contemptuously repudiated the mandate of the national convention of 1920, and broke faith with the rank and file of the Republican Party all over the land. These southern delegates are selected, as you know and as I know, by commands issued in the city of Washington to a very few Federal officeholders in the different States. A nomination by delegates thus selected, in number greatly disproportionate, is a reproach to the Republican Party.

"Our democracy is but an iridescent dream if year after year we permit a few bosses either to deny the right of expression to all the electors or where that expression is given to thwart it by hand-picked southern delegates. Popular government in those States where there are no primaries is a sham and a farce. A nomination made by delegates from States without presidential primaries in conjunction with purchased and hand-picked delegates from Southern States is not made by the will of the party but in spite of it. The recent action of the Republican National Committee is a reversion to the abhorrent conditions from which we thought we had emerged. It is this system upon which we war, and it is this system I challenge in this campaign. It is, in the last analysis, a test of popular government.

ATTACKS DECISION TO SELECT ALABAMA DELEGATES WITHOUT HOLDING PRIMARY.

"In Alabama the legislature has enacted a primary law. It is a peculiar law, doubtless designed to meet certain local conditions, but nevertheless it is a law under which the State guarantees an expression by its citizens of their preference for candidates for President. I have gone to the trouble, even in Alabama, to comply with that law and submit my candidacy to those who claim to be Republicans. Quite appropriately our opponents scoff at any right of ordinary people to participate in a nomination, and they have decreed that a State committee shall select Alabama's delegates to the Republican convention.

"In South Dakota it has taken two decisions of the supreme court of the State to enable me to get on a ballot. Our opponents were able to manipulate a small convention there, but fortunately that manipulation has forced them upon the ballot. I'll take my chances with the people of South Dakota, and we will demonstrate there in a primary that manipulation of a convention is totally dissimilar from the voting of a populace. We are in the open, asking only a chance for fair contest before the Republicans of the Nation. You may not sympathize with our aspirations, but as Americans loving fair play and the square deal you can neither sympathize with nor tolerate a system that makes a hundred of you only equal to one South Carolinian, and that would negative and nullify the free expression of those who make the Republican Party and win its victories.

"In olden days, when exactions and tyranny produced unrest and discontent which threatened internal dissension, kings invariably adopted the method of diverting or distracting the discontented and restless subjects by amusing them with foreign war. In the alluring picture of the glories of victory and the loot of conquest peoples forgot the wrongs they had been so eager to redress and monarchs again serenely went upon their way.

"In our day the modern policy for distracting and diverting the people, a little more subtle and perhaps more efficacious than that of olden times, is by appealing to cupidity and in the persuasive lure of material gain, causing all else to be forgotten. The philosophy of some powerful politicians to-day is that the 'tinkle of the guinea heals the hurt that honor feels,' and that the national conscience may be dulled, even dismissed, by the hope of money profit. I do not quarrel with the political strategy which transmutes what obviously had to be done, and would be done, into an entirely new discovery. I do not even criticise the other side of this contest for creating a beautiful mirage with a tax program which is designed to blind our people to everything domestic in character and obliterate the memory of our lack of foreign policy. The strategy, doubtless, from the standpoint of playing the game, is perfect. Is our intelligence sufficient to understand it?

TAX REDUCTION NO ISSUE.

"There can be no political issue on reduction of taxes. Everybody would reduce the expenditures of government to the least possible sum, and collect from the people only that sum. No one believes in high taxation. Everybody wishes low taxation and everybody believes in reduction of taxation. To inject as a false political issue into a campaign tax reduction is to cuttlefish the political waters so that nothing else may be seen. Let me ask the newspapers crying so loudly for the Mellon plan, the organizations that have been stimulated into activity for it without understanding it, and all the propagandists of big business, if you had to choose between reductions on small incomes and reductions on large incomes how would you stand? I venture the assertion that if the reduction of taxation of small incomes only were involved, there would be no propaganda, no pretended political issue about tax reduction."

URGES NATION CAREFULLY TO EXAMINE MELLON'S PLAN FOR TAX REDUCTION.

"Our Government overtaxed its people in the last year, and we find a surplus on hand of $350,000,000. It is perfectly obvious that no government has the right to overtax its people, and it is equally plain that with a surplus of $350,000,000 we should meet our just obligations and we should reduce taxation just as much as it can be reduced. We must correct the condition of affairs by which we collected more than we should have collected in taxation, and we can only correct this condition of affairs by reduction of taxation.

"Just after the adjournment of Congress last year, in March, I believe, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House wrote the Secretary of the Treasury upon the subject of the reduction of taxes. The Secretary of the Treasury delayed his answer and replied finally in November, seven months thereafter, just before the meeting of Congress, and since then we have had before us in one form or another suggested plans for the reduction of our taxation.

FORMER ESTIMATE WRONG.

"At the commencement of any discussion of this plan let me recall to you that the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury was that we would have a deficit of many more hundreds of millions than our present surplus amounts to, and upon this statement of a deficit the action of the late President Harding was predicated. Instead of a deficit we now have the surplus of $350,000,000. While, of course, the Treasury Department should not be subjected to criticism in any degree for an error in its estimate our experience with its former estimates would lead us as reasonable and prudent men to scrutinize with care its present estimates.

"We have never in this country had anything like the propaganda we now have in behalf of the so-called 'Mellon plan.' It was propaganda most carefully prepared and skillfully stimulated. It demands without the slightest knowledge of detail that the plan forthwith be adopted. We have encountered in this matter the very replica of what we encountered originally in the early days of the propaganda for the League of Nations. I recall how very good people would rush at us right after the promulgation of the league and hysterically ask if we did not wish to prevent war, and when timidly we responded affirmatively they would demand that we favor the League of Nations.

KNOW NOTHING OF PLAN.

"Recently interested parties have rushed at us concerning the tax proposition, demanded to know if we did not wish to reduce taxes, and when in common with all others we said that was our desire, they insisted forthwith the Mellon plan must be adopted. If we asked them what the Mellon plan was, none of them knew. But there was profit in it and profit is mighty appealing.

"There are 13,600,000 people in this country who pay taxes on incomes less than $10,000; there are only 330,000 who pay taxes on incomes over $10,000. The men who pay on incomes of $250,000 will save under the so-called 'Mellon plan' $49,000 a year. He who pays on $800,000 will save $63,000 a year; these who have incomes of $500,000 will be required to pay $117,000 less. The fortunate ones who have an income of $1,000,000 will save by the Mellon plan $252,000 a year, and the few who pay on an income of $5,000,000 will save $1,330,000 a year.

BELIEVES BONUS NO LONGER DEBATABLE, BUT SAYS TAXES CAN BE CUT, TOO.

"Who is it that is indulging in this propaganda that is sweeping over the country to-day, that is filling every newspaper and at the head of which are our bankers and the United States Chamber of Commerce? Do you imagine that it is the man who, by a reduction of taxes, will save $10 or $30 or $50 or $100, or do you think it is the individual who will save $30,000, $50,000, $100,000, $200,000, or $300,000? The concern of this tax scheme is not for the man of small income, who can least bear the burden, but the concern is for those of large incomes, who can best bear that burden. And they would have us forget our plighted faith and violate our promise in order that the full reduction sought might be accorded them.

"I would not have you misunderstand me at all.

"I would reduce the taxes of all of the people whenever it is possible to do so and keep our faith at the same time. In the matter of taxation, as in all other matters, I would be scrupulously just, to men of large incomes and of big business, but I recognize that great riches and big business have a happy faculty of looking out for themselves. Those of small incomes and small business must rely upon their Representatives. We would not be unjust to any, but we would begin tax reduction with the people who are least able to pay taxes.

BONUS NOT DEBATABLE.

"A part of the propaganda, particularly among those of big business interests, is directed against the so-called soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. From my standpoint this subject is no longer debatable. With very few exceptions the leaders of the Republican Party have pledged themselves and the party to the passage of this act. The late President Harding, just before the close of the campaign in 1920, in a speech at Cincinnati, unequivocally indorsed it. Subsequently, because of the Treasury estimate of a deficit, he vetoed it. It was denied then because we did not have enough to pay it. Upon the floor of the United States Senate the chairman of the Finance Committee pledged the Republican Party to the passage of the bill. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], speaking for the administration, said, in so many words, it would be passed at the next session of Congress. The leader of the Republican Party in the Senate, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], has declared himself and, so far as he could, his party for it. The whip of the Republicans in the Senate, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], has done likewise. The Republican Party has its faith avowed, and I would rather make no reduction in taxes upon large incomes than that our plighted faith should be violated. But we can pay the sums due under the adjusted compensation bill and reduce taxes, too. We have a surplus of $350,000,000.

URGES KEEPING OF PLEDGE.

"During the debate upon this adjusted compensation bill the estimate of the Treasury was that the first year the amounts to be paid under the adjusted compensation bill would be less than $100,000,000. We can reduce all of the taxes now existing on incomes under $10,000 exactly as in the plan presented, and we can reduce other taxes in some degree, and we also can keep our promise to pay the soldiers their due.

"The matter becomes, first, one of good faith and one of keeping a definite pledge. Before this extraordinary propaganda it was not difficult to argue for the adjusted compensation bill; but now, against our plighted word, is the saving suggested in a reduction of taxes upon incomes which do not necessarily require reduction.

"Let us not forget that the principle of adjusted compensation is a principle that our Government has already firmly established. We adopted that principle in regard to the business of the country. Congress passed a bill by which the compensation of those who were engaged in war contracts with the Government which ceased with the termination of the war was adjusted.

PRINCIPLE ADOPTED.

"We adopted the principle of adjusted compensation for the railroads of the land. The mining interests were taken care of by the war minerals act, and every business engaged with the Government during the war was compensated by the Government. Upon this principle of adjusted compensation we have paid out something near $3,000,000,000. Business insisted upon the principle of adjusted compensation, and business received the benefit of adjusted compensation. Business would now deny the same principle to the man who bared his body to shot and shell across the sea.

"When business sought to have its losses made good, and when the Government of the United States responded to its appeal, there was no cry about commercialized patriotism, no self-righteous stuff about fighting for the country's cause and seeking no other reward. There was the insistent demand by those dealing with the Government for compensation for money recompense for injury or loss or damage, although business during the war, you and I know, in many instances, profited far more than in any other period in history.

RECOGNITION DESERVED.

"This is not a question now of commercialized patriotism of the men who fought the war. This is a question of deserved recognition, in small degree, and that recognition is payment by the Government of an adjusted compensation. Contrast the $30 per month received by the soldier during the war with what those at home made during that period.

"O, ye business men, who protest against recognition of the soldier now, remember your attitude then, and remember you might not have had any business demanding that it receive its adjusted compensation from the Government but for the lad who was fighting in your behalf for $30 a month. Out of the $30 a month from many of them $15 were taken as an allotment for relatives and $6 a month to pay insurance, so that out of $30 a month the soldier had left, in many, many instances, an average of $9 a month, or 30 cents a day. He asks now pitifully small adjustment of the disparity in what was paid him and what was paid those who stayed at home; and he ought to have it in recognition of his service and his valor, his privations and his sacrifices, and it ought ungrudgingly to be given. And some business men paying taxes upon incomes of $100,000, $200,000, $500,000, or $1,000,000 per year would deny it.

ATTACKS MILLIONAIRES WHO "PRATE ABOUT COMMERCIALIZED PATRIOTISM."

"Not only was the principle of adjusted compensation recognized by our Government and accepted by our business men, and not only was the money paid to that upon that principle, but the Government of the United States during the war and for some months thereafter actually paid a bonus to its civilian employees.

"We paid $20 a month during the war as a bonus, and we have paid to our employees in this bonus more than double the sum that is asked by the soldiers of the Republic. Certain of the great captains of industry in this Nation, those whose incomes are beyond the dream of avarice of the ordinary man, prate and prate and prate again about commercialized patriotism. When these gentlemen have paid back into the Treasury of the United States the profits they made during the war they may be heard about commercialized patriotism, but until that day arrives let them keep silent on the pitiful sum that is asked by the men who sheltered them and their business and enabled them to make their unholy profits.

"And, remember, this adjusted compensation bill can be passed and the sums due under it paid by the Government and taxes reduced, too.

"In arguments concerning taxation the advocates of reduction upon large incomes often indulge in pessimistic statements concerning industry and enterprise, and apparently hint at a lack of prosperity in our country. And yet these same people, when speaking generally of success for the party of which we are members, exultingly describe our great prosperity and express their optimism for business future and, I am certain, of its destiny.

"The United States to-day is the most prosperous Nation on the face of the globe, and in the coming years that prosperity will not only continue but increase. One section of our country alone is in distress, and because of the general prosperity elsewhere more actually do we feel the distress and more readily would we relieve it. The farmer to-day suffers not only from low prices but from the high cost of production. What he sells is low and what he buys is high. His dollar is below par.

"This is especially true of the farmer in the interior, where the greatly increased freight charges stand between him and his market. The wheat farmer suffers most. During the war the Government held down the price of wheat to a lower level than other commodities. It insisted on greatly increased acreage. The resulting overproduction has added much to the farmer's difficulties. Conditions with him are not normal so long as he is not able to exchange his day's labor with all other kinds of labor. He is entitled to a fair wage and a reasonable return on his capital. He is not getting it.

COOPERATION NECESSARY.

"Credit schemes alone will not save him from bankruptcy. He must have a market for his products at a fair price. In the recent presidential message he is told to help himself. The Government apparently is cold toward him and turns from directions where he may be benefited. Cooperation, of course, would aid him, but cooperation of millions is a difficult thing after all. The innumerable agents and experts of the Government should aid the farmers in effecting cooperation among themselves, but there should also be effective cooperation of the Government with the farmer. Nothing could be more disastrous to our Nation than the continuance of the demoralization of our leading industry, for in the wake of this demoralization distress follows in every industry.

"It is not sufficient, therefore, to say to the farmer that he must lift himself by his bootstraps from the terrible predicament in which he finds himself. The Government must aid him. It must obtain for him lower freight rates. It must in effective fashion scrutinize the spread between production and consumption. It must not only promote cooperation among farmers themselves, but itself must sympathetically cooperate with them.

PROTESTS AGAINST FAKE POLITICAL ISSUES OBSCURING FOREIGN POLICIES.

"For some years past I have insisted upon a definite foreign policy for America. The lesson of the late war written in lurid red is the evil of secret diplomacy. Upon European nations the terrible lesson has been in vain. The same motives, the like interests, the very mode of promoting them, the age-old diplomacy by which governments entangled themselves and peoples pay the price still obtain there.

"The prosperity and the safety of our Republic must rest in a different policy. No selfish interests must be permitted to turn us from that enlightened policy which has brought us our vaunted prosperity and our proud world position. Our vigilance must not be relaxed nor our vision obscured by any fake political issue, no matter how tempting the bait of profit may be. Our international relations, our foreign policy, are of transcendent importance. Upon the kind of policy we adopt depends the very prosperity of which we boast and the very perpetuity of our institutions. In a campaign like this it is, therefore, not only appropriate but necessary to our welfare that our foreign relations be discussed and that our people register their will concerning them.

MUST REND VEIL.

"I am well aware our opponents have relegated international affairs to the obscurity of the State Department, and with their overwhelming power of publicity would have an inevitable tax reduction a smoke screen hiding foreign policy. An enlightened public opinion must rend the veil and clear the atmosphere, for inextricably interwoven with taxes is foreign policy. To-day the taxes levied are the aftermath of war. The amounts you are required to pay are the direct result of our participation in the great conflict. If with vigilance relaxed you are, either through the willfulness or ignorance or mistake of leaders, carried into the vortex of the European maelstrom, if by one specious pretext or another the first false step is taken by which you may become embroiled abroad, taxes instead of being reduced will be increased and added burdens will be yours. From the material standpoint, in the present condition of the world, your country's foreign policy deeply concerns you; from the standpoint of the safety of the Nation you love, it is all important.

FOREIGN POLICY UNKNOWN.

"The American people to-day do not know what is the foreign policy of our Government, and I have no hesitation in saying it is their right to know that foreign policy. It may be that we do not know our foreign policy, because we have none, but even the fact that we have none the American people have the right to know. A foreign policy, which, in words, according to the late presidential message, says, 'We attend to our own affairs,' and which, in deeds, attends to the affairs not only of our neighboring nation but the nations in Europe as well; a foreign policy toward Russia, which in the presidential message holds out a welcoming hand and through the Secretary of State turns it back; a foreign policy that denies activity upon the Reparations Commission abroad and then indirectly participation in that Reparations Commission; a foreign policy which says the League of Nations is a closed incident, and then attempts to take us into a part of the league; a foreign policy which speaks against permanent political alliances, and then practically allies us with existing powers upon this hemisphere constitutes a record of foreign policy which needs the obscuring screen of a tax-reduction scheme.

"The striking similarity between the concluding paragraphs of the presidential message and the nebulous phrases of the League of Nations covenant, the departure of experts to sit with the Reparations Commission abroad, the fact that our foreign policy is in the hands of a Secretary of State and a Secretary of Commerce who have been ardent League of Nations advocates, would indicate that the League of Nations is not a closed incident and that our foreign policy is a very live issue in this campaign. Apparently our Government drifts now one way and now another in its relations with Europe.

"The belief seems prevalent that we can not have a policy unless it shall first be promulgated by some confederation, association, organization, or league of foreign countries. We timidly advance a thought one day and apparently do something diametrically contrary another. And only in these last few days this kaleidoscopic foreign policy of the Nation maintained in such inviolable secrecy by the State Department has taken another startling turn. The United States is furnishing arms and munitions to Obregon in Mexico to fight a revolution there. It is done, as stated by the Secretary of State, 'to maintain stability and order and constitutional procedure in the neighboring Republic.'

"Our policy, expressed now in so many words, is that the United States frowns upon revolutions and will lend its mighty strength to maintain existing power upon this hemisphere. The merits of the contest raging in Mexico I do not know, and they are immaterial to this discussion. But, whatever the merits of the revolt in Mexico, I have no hesitation in saying our action is immoral if not illegal. What a departure from the policy America has ever pursued! What an anomalous and paradoxical position is ours to-day, we who were born in revolution! The United States Government finally says now to the people inhabiting this continent: If you dare fight for what you may deem to be right; if you raise your hand against oppression or wrong, the most powerful Nation in the world, its genesis armed resistance, will come to the aid of those you think your oppressors and will maintain existing power.

LIKENS SALE OF ARMS TO MEXICO TO POLICIES OF METTERNICH HOLY ALLIANCE.

"Without invidious intent, but as indicating a different philosophy of government, I have characterized the present administration as 'reactionary.' History has its parallel of our opposition to revolution and of what we have done in furnishing arms and munitions to Obregon. In the complete metamorphosis of American policy the administration has turned to historic Old World reaction. A hundred years ago there existed a league of nations in Europe, the Holy Alliance, which finally came under the control of the cunning and able master of secret diplomacy, Metternich, of Austria. The aims of this league, as expressed in words, were no less holy than the aims of those people who would to-day take us into Europe's controversies. Metternich, finally in absolute control of the league of nations of that day, definitely announced its policy no different from the policy now announced by our Government. Revolution by a long-suffering people in Piedmont Metternich ruthlessly stamped out with the armed forces of his league. A profligate monarch of Spain, who was driven from his throne by an indignant and outraged people, was restored again by the league's army, and was again—because he was constituted the authority—permitted to practice his exactions and cruelties, and it was all done upon the theory of maintaining the status quo. To-day we follow the Metternich policy of over a century ago, and free America announces the doctrine that revolution will be put down with our arms and constituted authority in neighboring nations will at all hazards be upheld.

SEEKS TO AVOID WAR.

"I abhor war. I will go to any length and make any sacrifice to preclude wars. I have fought these last five years in season and out, when I had few allies and again when I had many, for a consistent policy for our country which would preclude future wars. We who have been termed derisively 'isolationists,' who have been accused of lacking humanity, who have been denounced as without vision and wanting in love for our fellow kind have been actuated by the sole motive of humanity's welfare.

"To-day this country allies itself with war in Mexico. It does so through those who have talked eloquently of peace and of relieving humanity. Where are the leagues to enforce peace to-day, the organizations for outlawry of war, the individuals who talked, without understanding, of relieving the world's distress through a League of Nations court? Will they stand mute over this Mexican adventure that means a legacy of hostility and hatred for a generation to come? Will they have this country party to a little war that is a reality while pretending they desire to prevent future wars of their imagination? I will join with any association in this land, with any club or organization, with any league or association to protest against and to endeavor to prevent an American policy which makes us, because we furnish the arms and munitions, in reality a party to war."

CALLS LEAGUE TRIBUNAL FUTILE BODY WHICH IS REALLY NO COURT AT ALL.

"We stand upon such delicate ground to-day in our foreign relations that a single false step we may never be able to retract. Those who want to take us into Europe are anxious we should get in in any fashion. They would take us in by byways or indirection, confident that once started the irresistible force of circumstances and the inevitable logic of events will drive us further, until our old policy has been destroyed and we are inextricably involved. It is just this knowledge on the part of internationalists that makes them the advocates of the present administration. They pass with a smile the few words of the President on the league and seize with avidity his tepid indorsement of the League of Nations court. They know, just as you know, that we can not enter this creature of the league without ultimately being entangled with the league itself, and they know, just as you know, that once we are entangled with the league we are in Europe, and this is what they ardently desire. It is not a World Court we are asked to enter. It is the League of Nations court. It is a mistake to call it a World Court and a misnomer to call it a court at all. The President's description of it, 'The court is merely a convenient instrument of adjustment to which we could go but to which we could not be brought,' is the expression of its futility. What a naïve thing it is to say that it is a convenient instrument to which we could go but to which we could not be brought, for it is equally a convenient instrument to which other nations may go but to which they could not be brought. It is the confession that it can do nothing except by consent. It can sweetly request a wrongdoer to come before it, but the wrongdoer may refuse to come. It can not right a wrong committed by one of the powerful nations of Europe, because the offending nation can refuse to come, and then the matter is ended. Imagine such a court in your own community. Imagine that your neighbor commits a heinous wrong against you, and assume that you have appealed to the court, and your court then asks your neighbor to appear. Your neighbor, with the fruits of his wrongdoing, sits by and says, 'I don't propose to appear,' and the court responds, 'That ends the controversy.' Thus, the wrong exists, the fruits of it are possessed by the offender, and the innocent party has had the pleasure of appealing to a court that can not and will not help him. It is just that kind of a court the present administration proposes to take us into, and to take us into it under the guise that it is a court of international justice for the settlement of controversies between nations. The propaganda for this league court has been wholly misleading.

INSISTS ENTRY INTO COURT WOULD "FINALLY TAKE US INTO LEAGUE."

"Controversies between the great nations can not be settled by it. They can not even be brought into court without the consent of all parties. No wrong could ever be righted. The peace of the world can not be, in the slightest degree, affected by it, except so far as the nations concerned themselves agree. It is a terrible thing to tell our people that entry into the court would bring peace to a war-torn world and will settle controversies between grasping and contentious nations. And yet these very statements are echoed and reechoed throughout the land by public speakers, civic and religious associations, and really believed by many of the good people who pass resolutions in behalf of this misnamed court. If one of the powerful nations of Europe to-morrow seized with a lust of conquest should take by the storm arm a part of a neighbor's territory, the injured party could apply in vain until doomsday for relief from this league court.

HAGUE TRIBUNAL ACTIVE.

"In the present state of the world no one of the powerful exploiting nations will consent to have its wrong passed upon by the league court. Remember, we already have arbitration treaties with nearly every important country on earth, and by contract under these arbitration treaties all controversies are to be submitted to arbitration. The Hague Tribunal is in active existence now and is functioning with wider jurisdiction than the league.

"There is just one entry for our entry into the league court, and that is our entry will finally take us into the league. When we were first asked to join the League of Nations court last February, with reservations which the Secretary of State claimed would divorce it from the league, I said: 'If we now do what is asked the situation is this: We are wholly out of the league. We are in part of the league. By reservations we are out of the part of the league we are in. The part of the league we are in and from which by reservations we get out of functions as a part of the league with our assistance.'

"I received from one of the most earnest and intelligent advocates of the League of Nations in the West a letter in response. I do not indorse the statements in this letter. I would not assume to use its expressions, but it is refreshing in its intellectual honesty, and for that reason I dare quote it.

CALLS SCHEME ILLOGICAL.

"'You are quite right. Your strictures on the Hughes-Root-Taft plan to sneak into the back door of the League of Nations are "partly true." Hughes's arguments for it are at most partly true. The whole scheme is illogical, impractical, insincere, and cowardly. And I am for it. But not for these reasons. You, from your standpoint, will be quite right in being against it. There is no present practical situation calling for action. It is a purely academic, theoretical proposal. There are theoretical arguments for it, which are "partly true." You can make others, as good, against it. I am for it, because, as an opportunist, if the Government has not the courage to walk into the league by the front door, I am willing not to approve, but to submit to the alternative policy of sneaking in the back door. It will ultimately get us in. That is the final reason why you should be against it, and I for it. But in your immediate strictures on the manner of it I agree with you.'

"I quote this letter to you because it reveals the mind of the internationalist and states the case frankly, clearly, and exactly.

"Entry into the league court ultimately will get us into the league. An issue concerning the former of necessity makes the issue upon the latter. The difference is in the mode of going into the league, whether directly or by indirection. I am opposed to the league with or without reservations. But if this country is to be taken into it, I prefer to go in with full understanding by our people and in consonance with the honor and dignity of the Republic.

NOT AN "ISOLATIONIST."

"It is futile to call those who believe in our time-honored policy 'isolationists,' and it is worse to accuse us of a lack of humanity. This country has never been and never will be isolated from the rest of the world. In business, in finance, socially, commercially we are not isolated from Europe at all. There is just one sort of isolation which has been ours and upon which we now insist. It is isolation from the quarrels and controversies, the selfishness and the intrigue, the exploiting and the wars of Europe. No other isolation ever has been thought of, none could ever occur, and this sole form of isolation should continue not alone for our benefit but for the benefit of all humanity. We can not aid war-torn people by becoming a party to their wars. We can not utilize our moral force, if such a thing be ours, by throwing it into a heterogeneous unmoral mass.

"We can only play our part and aid humanity by being ourselves and remaining free, unfettered, and independent, and it is upon this very theory that some of us have maintained the long and difficult struggle for our distinctive American policy. I would aid suffering humanity in whatever land it might be. I was proud of the ready response of our country to the great catastrophe in Japan. I am very proud to-day that under the auspices of General Allen funds are being collected in America to relieve want and destitution in Germany. I commend to you, just as I commend to the American people, the beneficent and generous efforts of General Allen and his colleagues to have this country do its part for the suffering German people. The war has long since passed for me. The destitution of the country which was our late enemy, children hungry there, women and the weak suffering, appeals to me with like force with suffering humanity the world over, and I would have our people extend them relief just as they have ever relieved the needy and the destitute, the hungry, and the suffering of peoples everywhere.

WANTS AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY MADE BY UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT ALONE.

"The question after all of our foreign policy resolves itself into our wish for a distinctive American policy promulgated alone by ourselves, or a policy deferred for European conference and adopted abroad. I resent the timidity of this great Nation which precludes it from announcing a policy unless it shall be either in consonance or concert with foreign nations. We are differently situated from people beyond the sea, different geographically and different racially. There across shadowy borders the feuds and the hatreds of centuries are kept alive. Here a beneficent Creator has enabled us to work out our own salvation, apart from traditional vendettas and without the taint of virus of racial hatreds. Over there a single nationality is within the borders of a country. Here we have a heterogeneous mass of all nationalities. There by a common impulse a single nationality acts. Here we are endeavoring to weld into a homogeneous people those of every race and clime on earth.

"When we participate in controversies in Europe we invite among those who come from abroad the same controversies at home. And thus by entering Europe's troubles we become not only a part of them but we transplant them, too, in our own land. It is but natural that though men forswear allegiance, they do not forget the land of their birth, and when that land is embroiled with other foreign countries strong sympathies, hot enthusiasms are aroused. We want no race hatreds in our country. We want no imported traditional feuds. We invite them if we engage in Europe's controversies. We have traveled a single road for 130 years. Our path has been illumined by a definite policy under which we have grown to be the greatest and most powerful, the cleanest and the most moral Nation in the world. To turn aside now into an unknown and untried path and become a part of that from which our forefathers separated themselves, and between which and us the Lord put 3,000 miles of ocean, would mean the destruction of the one hope of civilization and humanity and the hazard of our own destiny."

JOHNSON DENOUNCES COOLIDGE POLICIES—CALIFORNIA SENATOR DECLARES ARMS SALE IMMORAL AND TAX REDUCTION A SCREEN—OPENS HIS FIGHT IN OHIO—HE SAYS THAT OFFICEHOLDERS ARE PICKING SOUTHERN DELEGATES TO DEFEAT HIM.

[From the New York Times, January 4, 1924.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO, January 3 (Associated Press).—A sharp attack on the Republican National Committee for increasing southern delegate representation in the national convention, a criticism of the administration for supplying arms and ammunition to the Obregon forces in Mexico, and a challenge to the Ohio Republican State Committee, which indorsed President Coolidge's candidacy, marked the opening address of Senator HIRAM JOHNSON of California in his campaign for the presidential nomination here to-night.

Senator JOHNSON scored the foreign policy of the administration, reiterated his Chicago speech in so far as it referred to his favoring a soldiers' bonus, cautioned the people to look carefully into the Mellon tax-reduction plan, although advocating a reduction in taxes, urged help for the farmers by the lowering of freight rates and the work of the cooperative societies, and finished with a scathing arraignment of the World Court.

"I have recently observed that certain people, including the distinguished Detroit manufacturer, have deplored that we should have an election this year," said Senator JOHNSON, "and perhaps at all; and many politicians denounce me because I have interfered with the serenity of the occasion and have not permitted their plans for a nomination by default to be consummated. I shall not concede that collectors of revenue, United States marshals, postmasters, and other officeholders may themselves alone nominate candidates for the Presidency.

"The leaders on the other side have demonstrated by their recent actions their contempt for the men and women who in reality constitute the Republican Party. Our opponents do not believe in direct primaries and direct legislation. I insist that the Republicans in Ohio shall have an equal right in determining the nominee for President with the Republicans in South Carolina. Obviously our opponents do not so believe."

SAYS COMMITTEE TOOK ORDERS.

Senator JOHNSON reviewed the action of the 1920 Republican convention in reducing the southern delegations, and said that it was "a step in the right direction," as it was a basis for further reductions. He told of the recent action of the national committee in Washington "under the order of our opponents" in giving the Southern States the original representation and termed it "scandalous and unfair."

"These southern delegates," he said, "are selected by commands issued in the city of Washington to a very few Federal officholders in the different States. The action of the national committee is a reversion to the abhorrent conditions from which we thought we had emerged."

Senator JOHNSON said that he had complied with the law of Alabama and expected his name to go on the ballot there, but that his opponents were trying to defeat the intent of the law by preventing the primary from taking place. He declared that it took two supreme court decisions to put his name on the ballot in South Dakota.

He threw down the gauntlet to the Ohio Republican State Committee by saying that no committee, "no matter how influential or how rich," could dictate to the people of Ohio as to who should represent the State at the national convention.

Referring to the "United States furnishing arms and munitions to Obregon in Mexico to fight revolution there," he said:

"It is done, as stated by the Secretary of State, 'to maintain stability and order and constitutional procedure in the neighboring Republic.' Our policy is that the United States frowns upon revolutions. The merits of the contest raging in Mexico I do not know, and they are immaterial in this discussion. But whatever the merits of the revolt, I have no hesitation in saying our action is immoral, if not illegal.

"What an anomalous and paradoxical position is ours to-day, we who were born in revolution. The United States Government finally says to the people inhabitating this continent: 'If you dare fight for what you deem to be right, if you raise your hand against oppression and wrong, the most powerful Nation in the world will come to the aid of those who you think are your oppressors and will maintain existing power.'"

The Senator compared this attitude with that of Metternich, of Austria and the Holy Alliance, saying:

"To-day we follow the Metternich policy of over a century ago, and free America announces the doctrine that revolution will be put down with our arms."

He then opened his guns on the administration's foreign policy.

"It may be that we do not know our foreign policy because we have none," he said. "But even the fact that we have none the American people have the right to know."

The Senator declared that the recent message of the President said, "We attend to our own affairs," but that in deeds we attend not only to the affairs of our neighboring nation but those of the nations of Europe. Though the message held out a "welcoming hand" to Russia, the administration, through the Secretary of State, "turns its back" on Russia.

"A foreign policy," said the Senator, "that says the League of Nations is a closed incident and then attempts to take us into a part of that league constitutes a record of foreign policy which needs the obscuring screen of a tax-reduction scheme.

MELLON BILL PROPAGANDA CHARGED.

"There can be no political issue on reduction of taxes. Everybody would reduce the expenditures of government to the least possible sum and collect from the people only that sum. No one believes in high taxation.

"We have never in this country had anything like the propaganda we now have in behalf of this so-called Mellon plan. It was propaganda most carefully prepared and stimulated. Under the Mellon plan the men who pay on $250,000 will save $49,000 a year; he who pays on $300,000 will save $63,000; those who have incomes of $500,000 will save $117,000; the fortunate one who has an income of a million will save $252,000; and the few who pay on $5,000,000 will save $1,330,000.

"Who is it that is indulging in this propaganda? Do you imagine it is the man who by a reduction will save $10 or $30 or $50 or $100, or do you think it is the individuals who will save in the thousands?

"I would not have you misunderstand me at all. I would reduce the taxes of the people whenever it is possible to do so and keep faith at the same time. I would be scrupulously just to men of large incomes and of big business, but I recognize that men of great riches and big business have a happy faculty of looking out for themselves. Those of small incomes and small business must rely upon their representatives."

Of the World Court he said:

"We can not enter this creature of the league without ultimately being entangled with the league itself. It is not a World Court we are asked to enter. It is the League of Nations court."

The Senator commended the work of General Allen and his colleagues in behalf of starving women and children in Germany.

JOHNSON SAYS UNITED STATES FOLLOWS IMMORAL POLICY IN MEXICO—MAY ALSO BE ILLEGAL, SENATOR HINTS; SEES A GRAVE POLITICAL CHANGE—AGAINST WORLD COURT; FOR SOLDIERS' BONUS—BUSINESS MEN, HE ASSERTS, MUST REPAY WAR PROFITS BEFORE TALKING PATRIOTISM.

[From the Washington Post, January 20, 1924.]

EVANSVILLE, IND., January 19.—The foreign policy of the Coolidge administration was attacked from two angles by Senator HIRAM JOHNSON of California here to-night. He not only reiterated his opposition to the World Court and the League of Nations, with or without reservations, but he objected strenuously to the selling of arms and munitions by the United States Government to the Obregon forces of Mexico.

"Our action in Mexico is immoral if not illegal," Senator JOHNSON said. "What a departure from the policy America has ever pursued. What an anomalous and paradoxical position is ours to-day, we who were born in revolution. The United States Government says to the people inhabiting this continent, 'If you dare fight for what you deem to be right, if you raise your hands against oppression or wrong, the most powerful Nation in the world, its genesis armed resistance, will come to the aid of those you think your oppressors and will maintain existing power.'

CALLS FOR WAR PROFITS.

"Without invidious intent, but as indicating a different philosophy of government, I have characterized the present administration as 'reactionary.'"

Senator JOHNSON declared that the bonus should be voted and given to our World War soldiers.

"Contrast the $30 per month received by the soldier during the war with what those at home made during that period," said the Senator. "Oh, ye business men who protest against recognition of the soldier now, remember your attitude then.

"Not only was the principle of adjusted compensation recognized by our Government, but the Government during the war and for some months thereafter actually paid a bonus to its civilian employees. Certain of the great captains of industry, whose incomes are beyond the dreams of avarice of the ordinary man, prate and prate about commercialized patriotism. When these gentlemen have paid back into the Treasury of the United States the profits they made in the war they may be heard about commercialized patriotism, but until that day arrives let them keep silent on the pitiful sum that is asked by the men who sheltered them and their business and enabled them to make their unholy profits.

CAN CUT TAX WITH BONUS.

"And remember this adjusted compensation bill can be passed and the sums due under it paid by the Government and taxes reduced, too."

Senator JOHNSON then went into the tax situation and contended that the Mellon plan worked in favor of the man with large income. He said there were 13,600,000 persons who pay taxes on incomes of less than $10,000, while 330,000 pay taxes on incomes of more than $10,000. He gave figures that purported to show that men who paid on incomes from $250,000 to $5,000,000 would save amounts ranging from $49,000 to $1,330,000 under the Mellon plan.

The Senator repeated his previous attack on the Republican National Committee restoring the number of southern delegates in the national convention.

JOHNSON CHARGES MIRAGE IN TAX BILL—CALIFORNIAN SAYS THE ADMINISTRATION IS USING IT AS A COVER FOR OTHER DEFECTS.

[From New York Times, January 19, 1924.]

CHICAGO, January 18.—In two Chicago speeches to-night Senator HIRAM W. JOHNSON attacked the Coolidge administration's handling of the Mellon tax-reduction plan more bitterly than he has done in his previous platform appearances since he became a candidate for President.

These, boiled down, are some of the descriptions which he applied to the subject:

"A false political issue.

"A beautiful mirage to blind our people.

"Cuttlefish inking the political waters.

"An appeal to cupidity."

The Senator spoke to a large meeting at the Broadway Armory, in the uptown section, and later at the Wendell Phillips High School, on the South Side, where the audience was largely colored.

In general, he followed the lines of his Cleveland talk, the first big speech of his campaign. He denounced the administration's political organization and the "rotten borough" decision of the Republican National Committee. The soldiers' bonus, he said, was no longer debatable. He condemned the sale of arms to Obregon, demanded assistance for the farmer, and combated all suggestion of compromise on the decision to keep aloof from the League of Nations.

"In olden days," he said at the Broadway Armory meeting, "when exactions and tyranny produced unrest and discontent which threatened internal dissention or revolution, kings invariably adopted the method of diverting or distracting the discontented and restless subjects by amusing them with foreign wars.

"In our day the modern policy for distracting and diverting the people, a little more subtle and perhaps more efficacious than in the olden times, is by appealing to cupidity, and in the persuasive lure of material gain causing all else to be forgotten. The philosophy of some powerful politicians to-day is that the jingle of the guinea helps the hurt that honor feels and that the national conscience may be dulled, even dismissed, by the hope of money profit.

"I do not quarrel with the political strategy which transmutes what obviously had to be done and would be done into an entirely new discovery. I do not even criticize the other side of this contest for creating a beautiful mirage with a tax program which is designed to blind our people to everything domestic in character and obliterate the memory of our lack of foreign policy. The strategy, doubtless, from the standpoint of playing the game, is perfect. Is our intelligence sufficient to understand it?

"There can be no political issue on reduction of taxes. Everybody would reduce the expenditures of Government to the least possible sum, and collect from people only that sum.

"To inject tax reduction as a false political issue into a campaign is to cuttlefish the political water so that nothing else may be seen.

"Let me ask the newspapers crying so loudly for the Mellon plan, the organizations that have been stimulated into activity for it without understanding it, and all the propagandists of big business, if you had to choose between reductions on small incomes and reductions on large incomes, how would you stand? I venture the assertion that if the reduction of taxation of small incomes only were involved there would be no propaganda, no pretended political issue about tax reduction.

"I am well aware that our opponents have relegated international affairs to the obscurity of the State Department, and with their overwhelming power of publicity would have an inevitable tax reduction as a smoke screen hiding foreign policy. An enlightened public opinion must rend the veil and clear the atmosphere, for inextricably interwoven with taxes is foreign policy."

Senator JOHNSON branded the sale of arms to the Mexican Government as "immoral if not illegal." He will speak to-morrow night at Evansville, Ind.

JOHNSON RENEWS 1920 BID FOR MICHIGAN VOTE—CONDEMNS MEXICAN ARMS SALE, WORLD COURT, LEAGUE, MELLON PLAN; URGES BONUS AND TAX CUT, IN DETROIT—HITS NATIONAL COMMITTEE—WILL NOT PERMIT COLLECTORS AND UNITED STATES MARSHALS TO NOMINATE, HE SAYS.

[From the New York Tribune, January 18, 1924.]

DETROIT, January 17.—Senator HIRAM JOHNSON of California, who won Michigan's support in the 1920 presidential preferential primaries, renewed his bid for the favor of Wolverine Republicans to-night in an address here.

In a speech which followed closely one recently made in Cleveland, Senator JOHNSON condemned the sale of arms to the Obregon government in Mexico; he assailed the World Court as the "creature of the league," and he reiterated his opposition to the league, "with or without reservations." He unqualifiedly advocated a soldiers' bonus, and was equally vigorous in favoring a reduction in taxes, at the same time expressing opposition to the Mellon tax plan.

HITS RESTORATION TO SOUTH.

Other high points in his address were his fling at the Republican National Committee for restoring to Southern States the representation taken from them by the 1920 convention, and his criticism of Henry

Ford and others for their statements that it would be better if no presidential election were held this year.

"Some politicians have rather hysterically denounced me," Senator JOHNSON said, "because I have interfered with the serenity of the occasion and have not permitted their plans for a nomination by default to be consummated. These gentlemen look upon this as sort of 'lese majeste.' I shall not concede that collectors of revenue, United States marshals, postmasters, and other officeholders may themselves alone nominate candidates for the Presidency."

Payment of a bonus, the Senator said, should be made "not as a question of commercialized patriotism, but as a question of deserved recognition in a small degree." With $350,000,000 surplus in the Treasury he believed it would be possible not only to pay the initial installment on the bonus but reduce taxes as well.

SAYS MELLON PLAN IS FOR RICH.

The Mellon plan drew the fire of the Californian's guns. He said persons of large incomes would benefit by the Treasury Secretary's program. "The concern of this tax scheme is not for the man of small income," he said, "but for the man of large income, who can best bear the burden. I would reduce taxes of all the people wherever it is possible to do so and keep faith at the same time."

Senator JOHNSON said he did not know the merits of the contest now raging in Mexico, adding that "they are immaterial in this discussion." The principle of the present administration's attitude toward the Obregon government, however, brought forth a broadside of criticism. "Free America," he said, "announces the doctrine that revolution will be put down with our arms, and constituted authority in neighboring nations will, at all hazards, be upheld. What an anomalous and paradoxical position is ours to-day, we who were born in revolution! Our Government says to the people who inhabit this continent: 'If you dare fight for what you may deem to be right, the most powerful nation in the world will come to the aid of those you think your oppressors and will maintain existing power.'"

JOHNSON AGAIN BIDS FOR MICHIGAN VOTE—CALIFORNIA SENATOR URGES BONUS AND OPPOSES MELLON PLAN.

[From the New York Herald, January 18, 1924.]

DETROIT, January 17.—Senator JOHNSON (California), who won Michigan's support in the 1920 presidential preferential primaries, renewed his bid for the favor of the Wolverine Republicans to-night in an address here.

Senator JOHNSON condemned sale of arms to the Mexican Government; he assailed the World Court as the "creature of the league," and reiterated his opposition to the league. He unqualifiedly advocated a soldiers' bonus and was equally vigorous in favoring a reduction in taxes, although opposing the Mellon plan.

He took a fling at the Republican National Committee for restoring to Southern States the representation taken from them by the 1920 convention, and criticized Henry Ford and others for their statements that it would be better if no presidential election were held this year.

Payment of a bonus, the Senator said, should be made "not as a question of commercialized patriotism, but as a question of deserved recognition in a small degree." With $350,000,000 surplus in the Treasury, he said, it would be possible not only to pay the initial installment on the bonus but reduce taxes as well.

The Mellon plan drew the fire of the Californian's guns.

"The concern of this tax scheme is not for the man of small income," he said, "but for the man of large income, who can best bear the burden. I would reduce taxes of all the people wherever it is possible to do so and keep faith at the same time."

Senator JOHNSON said he did not know the merits of the contest raging in Mexico.

"Free America," he said, "announces the doctrine that revolution will be put down with our arms, and constituted authority in neighboring nations will, at all hazards, be upheld. What an anomalous and paradoxical position is ours to-day, we who were born in revolution. Our Government says to the people who inhabit this continent: 'If you dare fight for what you may deem to be right, the most powerful Nation in the world will come to the aid of those you think your oppressors.'"

The World Court is objectionable to the California Senator, he said, "because we can not enter it without being entangled in the league itself."

The Republican National Committee's action in restoring to Southern States the representation taken from them by the 1920 convention, he said, gives 134 delegates to nine Southern States, polling 489,000 Republican votes, while Ohio, where 1,182,000 vote the Republican ticket, will have only 51 delegates at the convention.

PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT BY EX-OFFICIALS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate Resolution 179, relative to the prosecution of claims against the Government before the Shipping Board or Emergency Fleet Corporation by ex-officials of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, and they were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2189. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Department of North Carolina to construct a bridge across the Peedee River in North Carolina between Anson and Richmond Counties;

S. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution for the appointment of one member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers;

S. J. Res. 84. Joint resolution making appropriation for contingent expenses of the United States Senate, fiscal year 1924; and

H. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution to provide an appropriation for the prosecution of suits to cancel certain leases, and for other purposes.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5078, being the Interior Department appropriations bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

POLITICAL SPEECHES OF PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before the consideration of the appropriations bill proceeds I desire to address the Senate for just a moment, not upon the point of order but relative to the precedent set by the chairman of the Committee on Printing, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], in reading into the RECORD a political speech purporting to have been delivered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] at some point in the country last night.

Mr. President, I objected to the insertion in the RECORD of the speech for a reason which I believe to be sound, and which I believe Senators who have respect for the proper proceedings of the Senate will indorse. It establishes an objectionable precedent. I have not the slightest objection to a free and full discussion of the conduct of any man who has been a Democratic political officeholder, and I think it right and proper that those who have avowed themselves candidates for the office of President of the United States should express their views touching the issues which they think may reflect upon the merits of their candidacy. This is not the proper forum to determine the propriety of conduct attributed to candidates.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], however, has posed as the protector of the RECORD. He has now set the precedent of inviting the insertion in the RECORD or the reading into the RECORD of political addresses delivered by various candidates for President of the United States. Of course, the purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire is manifest to everyone present who observes his conduct. It is a manifestation of the kind of statesmanship which usually characterizes debate upon the part of the Senator from New Hampshire, and it is an illustration of his views as to how the business of the Senate of the United States should be conducted. The Senator from New Hampshire is welcome, so far as I am concerned, to any consolation that he may derive by reason of the criticism of one Democratic candidate for the Presidency by another; but let me point out to the Senator from New Hampshire the distinction which the Senator from Missouri made in his speech, a distinction that is worth while—I doubt if the Senator from New Hampshire can comprehend it; but, nevertheless, it is a distinction proper to be made—and that is, the Senator from Missouri did demonstrate one fact, that Democratic Cabinet members when they want to make money get out of the Cabinet and Republicans when they want to make money get into the Cabinet. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I can hardly permit the hour to pass without saying a word in reply to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. He seems very much delighted—in fact, overjoyed—at finding that something has been said in criticism of a prominent Democrat. In the multitude of Republican officials who have been besmirched by their own bad conduct and wrongdoing, it must have been refreshing to the Senator from New Hampshire to find that somebody was speaking in criticism of a Democrat who had formerly held a Cabinet office.

As the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has said, I have no objection to turning on the light. I think that any candidate and every candidate for the office of President ought to be able to stand up before the searchlight; he ought to have the spotlight put on him, and unless he is such a man as should be exalted to that high place he ought to be rejected. If the spotlight had been turned on certain Republicans, we would not have the trouble and scandal that we now have.

It seems that there has been wrongdoing in every department of the Republican administration, and Senators, like the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], have been offering resolution after resolution in regard to this department and that department; he, a Republican, is crying out to have the light turned. So we have several investigations going on. Why? Because of the misconduct of Republicans now in office. The Senator from New Hampshire rises in his place and talks about something that a Democratic ex-Cabinet member has done in the private walks of life. I am not defending his acts; he will answer for himself; and if he has been guilty of wrongdoing let it come out; but the Senator from Arkansas has correctly sized up the situation. When a Democrat in office feels that he wants to make money he turns over the office with a clean record and gets out and enters some business as a private citizen to make money, while some Republicans seek to get into office for the purpose of making money, and when they get in they open the door to property that has been intrusted to their care and permit people to come in and help themselves, and there is a little toll left at the gate as they depart with the loot.

Cabinet officers who have been in office under Republican rule are rich now. Nobody knows how much money Fall got. A hundred thousand dollars, in my judgment, will not touch it, nor $200,000 nor $500,000, for I believe he got a million and more, and I do not believe Fall is the only one of them who got money. I think there were drippings from the oil sanctuary all down the line, and that they were getting theirs, more of them than Fall. These things are going on under a Republican administration.

Now, while the Senator from New Hampshire is gloating over something said about a Democrat who once held office in the Nation and who is seeking to hold another office, and who must have his claims passed upon at the judgment bar of the great Democratic Party, let him inquire what is the President doing this day toward stopping Doheny from pumping oil out of the wells yonder in California. That oil belongs to the Government. We have said the naval reserve leases were fraudulent; we have said they ought to be canceled; we have appointed two lawyers to have them canceled; and yet Doheny is here flourishing in the Capital, his pumps are running now, Sinclair's pumps are running, and the oil is being taken out every day by the thousands of barrels. I should like the Senator from New Hampshire to give his attention to that situation, and I should like to ask him to call the attention of the President to it. I did so on yesterday, and I am going to ask again now, What is the President doing to protect this property of the people? What is he doing to keep them from getting away with this great oil treasure that belongs to the American people?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. In addition to that, Mr. President, what is the Department of Justice doing and what are the two lawyers, whom we have confirmed at the request of the President, doing toward bringing these criminals to justice? The proof is almost positive that Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Doheny have bribed Mr. Fall and that Mr. Fall has accepted those bribes.

Weeks and even months have passed away, and there has not been a sign of any proceeding to bring these men to an accounting. No indictment has been returned, and, so far as I have been able to see in the public prints, no indictment is even being thought of against these men who the world knows are guilty, and they ought to be prosecuted.

I want to say again, if the Senator will permit me, that it is the duty of these lawyers that we have employed, it is the duty of the Department of Justice, to have indictments brought against these men, give them a speedy trial, and let the country know whether they are guilty or not guilty; and if they are guilty, as I believe they are guilty, they ought to be sent to the penitentiary like other criminals. It is an outrage that something is not done with these rich criminals. Have we come to such a pass that the criminal laws of our country are executed only against the poor people of the country and not against the rich? These men should be brought to justice, and brought to justice speedily.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Senator from Tennessee for his suggestion. Mr. President, it has gotten to be common knowledge that the poor man and the poor woman do not escape when they offend against the law; but these fellows high in financial circles can buy their passports into any sort of crooked deal and get away with it. Money, money! You worship at the shrine of Mammon.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HEFLIN. I gladly yield to my friend from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it not worth while, also, to remember what has been taking place in the Veterans' Bureau? What has become of Forbes? A strong indictment has been laid down here with reference to the frauds, the crookedness, the graft, the corruption in the Veterans' Bureau. Who has been prosecuting Forbes?

Mr. HEFLIN. That is a very pertinent suggestion that the Senator has made, and I want to say here what I have said once before: I have heard it said that one man who has been under investigation in that matter has stated that he dared the Attorney General to indict him. I imagine that he means by that that the Attorney General dare not indict him because of some knowledge that the Attorney General has, and some knowledge that he has in this connection regarding the Attorney General.

Mr. President, it is an awful situation that we have in this country.

There is going to be a house cleaning in this Nation. It ought to be had. As I said on yesterday, we ought all to pull together to that end, and not try to throw any chunks in the way of this investigation. We ought rather to help it along and say, whether they be Democrats or Republicans, "Turn on the light!" Let that become the national slogan. In addition to the slogan "Turn on the light," let us add "and turn the rascals out."

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] gets into print this morning. If I recall correctly, he has been speculating in oil stocks. He is on slippery ground. Oil is a very slippery proposition, and yet they tell us that he has been dealing in oil. He suggests that whenever a Democrat gets up here and assails a Cabinet officer, some Republican on the other side runs up and tells the President to call for his resignation. I must admit, in view of that suggestion, that we are making some progress, because when we went after Denby, he never had you running up there then. You went up there to keep us from getting him out, but he knew more about it than you thought he did, and he got out. He got out when he was saying he would not get out. He got out when the President was saying he would not let him get out; but this thing called public opinion, aroused indignant public opinion, drove Denby out; the truth is mighty and it did prevail. Now, I submit if leaders on the other side are going up and telling the President that he ought to let these men out of the Cabinet, we are making some headway.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] suggests that he understands we have Mr. Mellon next on the rack. Well, that is not so bad. The Senator from West Virginia suggests that Mr. Weeks, Secretary of War, is next in order. Well, he seems to think that we are going down the line. Fall, Denby, Daugherty, Weeks, Mellon—call the roll! Who is it in this administration that can stand up with clean hands and say "Turn on the light"? Who is it?

In order that the Senator from New Hampshire may not get too far astray, I might ask him how the President came to appoint two oil attorneys first to handle this property of the Government. He appointed Mr. Gregory and Mr. Strawn.

I showed Mr. Strawn's connection with the oil people, and these two appointments were set aside. Why were these men selected at the outset? Did anybody think that we did not know or that somebody else did not know their connections? Why were these men first selected? I can ask that with more pertinency now, since Doheny has come to the Capital and is taking the rôle of leader of the Republican Party, and urging the country to stand by a Republican administration. May I not ask why were these two oil attorneys first named, and not set aside until we pointed out that they were oil attorneys? Let the Senator from New Hampshire ponder these questions as he goes along.

Another question, Mr. President, might be pertinent now. When Mr. Coolidge became President—cunning, cold, calculating, cautious Cal—they said: "Of all men, he is the best fitted. He has been in the Senate, presiding over that great body. He has heard the debates on everything. He is familiar with Congress and the action of Congress. He knows it all; and not only that, but he has been sitting with the Cabinet. He is, therefore, familiar with the duties of President, just the same as if he had really been President. He, above all men, is fitted for this place." Then, when he came into the office of President and these billion-dollar oil reserves of the Navy came up for consideration and it was found that a Republican Cabinet where he had been sitting had discussed it, they said: "Why, he did not know anything at all about that. You will have to excuse him"; but as to all the other matters that did not amount to much he was right there when they were discussed. Then they said: "What about the debates in the Senate?" The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said: "Why, he was sitting in that chair when I discussed my resolution and went into it in detail"; and still some people talk about the President not knowing anything about this oil matter.

I want to remind the Senator from New Hampshire again, and remind the investigating committee again, that William Boyce Thompson, a stockholder in the Sinclair company, borrowed, with part of the securities of the Sinclair company, $3,000,000 on a dummy note while he was treasurer of the Republican campaign committee in New York in 1920. If that is not a fact, call witnesses before that committee and prove that it is not a fact. He borrowed $5,000,000 in all. Three million dollars of it was borrowed on a dummy note. Who got the benefit of that $3,000,000? The Republican campaign committee, the Republican Party.

So, Mr. President, from time to time, in order to keep the record straight and for the benefit of my friend from New Hampshire, it may be necessary to inject into the RECORD some of these very pertinent matters.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edwards	Ladd	Reed, Pa.
Ashurst	Elkins	La Follette	Robinson
Ball	Ernst	Lenroot	Sheppard
Bayard	Ferris	Lodge	Shipstead
Borah	Fess	McKellar	Shortridge
Brandegee	Fletcher	McKinley	Simmons
Brookhart	Frazier	McLean	Smith
Broussard	George	McNary	Smoot
Bruce	Glass	Mayfield	Spencer
Bursum	Gooding	Moses	Stanfield
Cameron	Hale	Neely	Stanley
Colt	Harris	Norbeck	Swanson
Copeland	Harrison	Norris	Trammell
Couzens	Heflin	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Howell	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Johnson, Minn.	Pepper	Warren
Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Watson
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Wheeler
Dill	Kendrick	Ralston	Willis
Edge	Keyes	Ransdell

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before the question of order is submitted to the Senate I will ask the Chair to let me make another point of order, which I think involves one of the greatest questions which has come before the Senate in a long time. That question is, Have a few men sitting in the Treasury Department the right to submit to the Senate, in order to make it in order, an appropriation suggested by some Senator or some outsider who has more influence than I or other Senators have? Can some Senator or some outsider have an estimate submitted which is not authorized by law? If there is that power, we had better abdicate our powers as legislators and allow those men to estimate what some Senator or some outsider may get them to estimate through his influence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair regards it as his first duty to submit to the Senate the question of the relevancy of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to the Chair submitting that proposition to the Senate, but I do not want to lose any right to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair on the first proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There will be abundant opportunity for an appeal.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to an appeal from a decision of the Chair, I give notice that I shall urge that the time for an appeal has gone by and it is too late to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin is a fair man and wants to do what is right. He will remember that these rulings were all made just before adjournment, at one time, and really we did not have time enough to appeal. I hope the Senator will not raise that point.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly the Senator from Wisconsin does not desire to be technical, but I appeal to the RECORD on that.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator can appeal to the RECORD, but he knows without appealing to the RECORD that it was just before adjournment, and the Chair said, "We will let this matter go over until to-morrow." I myself suggested that we were just on the point of reaching 6 o'clock, that we had been here all day, and that we had better adjourn until to-day.

Mr. LENROOT. Upon the question of the germaneness, frankly, I had no thought that there was any intention to appeal from the decision of the Chair, because there was nothing to indicate it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I can make another point, which I intend to do, which, I will say, involves this question. The point of order I made was under paragraph 2. I have not made a point of order under paragraph 1, but I intend to do so. That is the matter in connection with which I say the very integrity of the Senate is at stake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the view of the Chair the question now is, Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is not debatable, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That question is not debatable.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. As I recall the rule, an appeal can be taken from a decision of the Chair until intervening business shall have interposed. There has been no intervening business since the ruling of the Chair late yesterday afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not ruled upon the question at all.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that. The parliamentary inquiry I desire to propound is this: Would the taking of a vote on this division of the proposition be intervening business? It would be a part of the ruling of the Chair, would it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is very clear that that is not intervening business.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Chair holds, then, as I understand the Chair's ruling, that he will not permit me to submit this point of order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the rule requires the submission of this question to the Senate——

Mr. OVERMAN. Before any other point is made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And if other points of order are to be made and other questions arise, after the point is submitted, the Chair will endeavor to deal with them at the time they arise. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to take an appeal at this moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President. I want to take an appeal on some rulings made yesterday, which I did not think I was precluded from taking, because we were just on the point of an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, as stated by the Chair, Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Chair state the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the amendment?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, has the Chair ruled upon the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not permitted to rule. The standing rules of the Senate require that this question shall be submitted to the Senate without debate. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, though I was straining my ears to hear the statement of the question, I really do not know what the proposition is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has stated the proposition.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; but what is the subject matter to which the point of order relates?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin germane or relevant to the subject matter of the bill?

Mr. BRUCE. What is the subject matter to which the amendment relates?

Mr. LENROOT. The appropriation of $370,000 for Howard University.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], in his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DALE. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE], and if present and permitted to vote would vote "nay."

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER]. If present, he would vote "yea." I also desire to announce the following pairs:

The senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. ROBINSON. The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call resulted—yeas 54, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—54.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 54, the nays are 19. So the Senate holds that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is germane and relevant, and the Chair overrules the point of order made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. OVERMAN. What point of order did the Chair overrule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from North Carolina made a point of order yesterday, and thereafter the Senator from Arkansas amplified the point of order and made another point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is correct. I made but one point of order, and that was under paragraph 2 of Rule XVI. Now I make the point of order, and I think it involves a very vital question, under paragraph 1 of Rule XVI, which provides that no amendment shall add a new item of appropriation made unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty, stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or is proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law. I make the point of order that this appropriation has not been estimated for in pursuance of law. That is the point of order I make.

Mr. LENROOT. I make the point of order that that question has already been decided by the Chair and the point can not be renewed. That was one of the express points made by the Senator from Arkansas yesterday. It so appears in the RECORD, as follows:

> Mr. ROBINSON. I think perhaps the Chair did not hear my point of order. I make the point of order as follows:
> First, that the amendment is not in order because it is not proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

The Chair ruled upon that last night. The Chair overruled the point of order and submitted the question of germaneness. The RECORD shows what then transpired.

Mr. OVERMAN. But that point of order was made under paragraph 3 of Rule XVI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the point of order that is now made by the Senator from North Carolina is exactly the point of order made by the Senator from Arkansas yesterday. The Chair expressed its opinion with regard to that point of order yesterday, as also the point of order raised under paragraph 3, that the amendment constituted general legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Under the circumstances that occurred, which the Chair remembers as well as everyone else, when the suggestion was made that we let the matter go over until today for such action as we should desire to take, does the Chair hold that I can not now take an appeal?

Mr. LENROOT. I appeal to the RECORD upon that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, read the RECORD.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to read the entire RECORD on that subject. I read as follows:

> Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think we might just as well determine other points of order which are deemed to be applicable. I make the point of order, if it is in order to do so now, that the amendment is not in order because, first, it is not proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law; second, because it is not germane or relevant to the subject matter in the bill.
> Mr. LENROOT. The Senator understands that the last point must be decided by the Senate; it can not be decided by the Chair.
> Mr. OVERMAN. Another ground on which a point of order might be based is that it is general legislation.
> Mr. ROBINSON. I think perhaps the Chair did not hear my point of order. I make the point of order as follows:
> First, that the amendment is not in order because it is not proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.
> Second, because the amendment proposes general legislation.
> Third, because it is not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill.
> The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had occasion to give some study to this matter a few days ago upon the point of order raised by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. It is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment is proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law. That disposes of any objection that can be made to the amendment so far as being in order is concerned under the first paragraph of Rule XVI. It is not objectionable to paragraph 2 because it is not moved by a standing or select committee of the Senate.
> There remains to be considered the point of order just made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] under paragraph 3, which provides that—
> "No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid upon the table without prejudice to the bill."

The Chair overrules the point of order so far as it raises the question of the amendment being proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law. It overrules the point of order so far as it relates to general legislation, because the Chair is of the opinion that it is not general legislation.

In accordance with the rule, the Chair submits to the Senate the question as to whether or not the amendment is germane. The question is, Shall the point of order be sustained because the proposed amendment is not germane to the provisions of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is pretty late. I think we had better let it go over until to-morrow.

There was not a suggestion of an appeal, but the pending question was the germaneness of the amendment, and that was all.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is very evident that I had no time to appeal, as the Chair was stating the question to the Senate, and I rose and asked, as I understood, that the whole matter go over until to-day.

Mr. LENROOT. I read the Senator's language. Then the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] said:

I have an amendment to offer that is very important, and there will be no discussion on it.

There was no suggestion or thought upon the part of anyone on the other side of the Chamber of an appeal.

Mr. MOSES. We have a question before the Senate.

And that question was only the question of germaneness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not permitted.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will not the Senator from Massachusetts withhold that motion until to-morrow? It is late this evening.

Then there followed a discussion as to an adjournment or a recess, and there was no suggestion of an appeal upon the part of anybody. That being so, I submit that it is both too late to appeal, and the identical question having been decided by the Chair yesterday it can not now be renewed. There is an amendment pending which it has been decided is germane.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Wisconsin made a point of order to the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina. The matter that is now pending is his point of order. Is not that right?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no point of order pending as the Chair understands.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that the Senator from North Carolina had taken an appeal from a ruling of the Chair on yesterday afternoon and that the Senator from Wisconsin had made the point of order against the Senator taking an appeal at this time because it was too late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not so understood it.

Mr. LENROOT. No. The Senator from North Carolina this morning has not suggested an appeal, but he made a point of order that the matter was not submitted in pursuance of an estimate in accordance with law. I thereupon made the point of order that the question had been decided already by the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from North Carolina can make the point of order when th bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that I can do so, but I thought we might as well settle it now as at any time. A Senator does not usually take advantage of another at such a time on the eve of an adjournment. I did not think the Senator, with all due respect to him, for I like him, would make that point at this time.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very frank to say to the Senator from North Carolina that I think it is always in order to protect the rules of the Senate, which I know to be clearly against an appeal in these circumstances. I do not care in this particular case, however, because the Senator knows that he can take his appeal later on.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the point of order that ought to be made is that there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States nor in the laws nor in the rules of the Senate authorizing us to donate money for this purpose. I know there is no use making such a point of order, but it ought to be permissible. Our devotion to the Constitution ought to preclude us from giving away the taxpayers' money. Further, if the Treasury is so full of funds that we are to be donating money to the schools of the country, it would serve a better purpose to divide it up equally and contribute to help build up military schools, so that we can train our young men to defend the country in time of need.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will state the inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Chair to rule that where a decision had been made by the Chair an appeal could be taken from that ruling in all cases except where intervening business had been interposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not ruled upon that question at all.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Chair to so express himself; that that was a correct construction of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair said the question of an appeal had not arisen.

Mr. HARRISON. I take an appeal now from the decision of the Chair on yesterday afternoon, and on that proposition I submit there has been no intervening business. The only thing that has been done was a motion to adjourn yesterday, and it was understood that the only reason why an appeal was not taken yesterday and that the matter was not fought out was because of the lateness of the hour and that the point of no quorum could be made and we would not be able to get a quorum at that time.

Yesterday, on page 3094 of the RECORD, occurred the following:

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator offer that amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. LODGE. It has been ruled on already.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I presume that a point of order will be made to get a quorum here if this amendment is pressed. Why can it not go over until to-morrow?

Mr. LENROOT. I am perfectly willing.

Throughout the discussion it is shown that the only reason why it was not proposed yesterday was because a point of order would be made and an appeal would be taken from it and the yeas and nays would be ordered. I submit that we can take an appeal from the decision of the Chair at any time except when intervening business has come up, and there has now been no intervening business. There is nothing in the rules to show that we have to take a appeal immediately. An appeal from the decision of the Chair will be taken, and no harm will be done by an appeal now being taken from the decision of the Chair, because the matter will not be discussed any more. Of course, a point of order can be made when we get the bill into the Senate, as has been suggested, but in view of what happened yesterday and the way the matter went over because of the lack of a quorum, it does seem to me that we ought to have the right to take an appeal on the first proposition.

Mr. BROOKHART. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that he ask unanimous consent that an appeal be considered at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that an appeal may be ordered by the Senate and that we vote on that proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection to that course being taken, but I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi, and I take this opportunity of saying, that I can not agree at all to his contention that there must be intervening business in order to prevent an appeal. If the Chair rules on any question and debate goes on for a week the Senator would not say that an appeal could be taken a week later. There is no such rule as to intervening business.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I must object to the request of the Senator from Mississippi. I think we ought to transact some business here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has reached a very definite conclusion in regard to the matter. The Chair would be very slow to prevent an appeal upon any decision the Chair might make and therefore the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And upon that there is no debate as the Chair understands the rule.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Chair can hear me, I suppose. He has the right to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Not on an appeal.

Mr. OVERMAN. On a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to debate the question?

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to inform the Chair, and perhaps after he hears my statement he will reverse his ruling.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled upon the question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that, but sometimes occupants of the chair reverse their rulings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There may be an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but, as the Chair understands, the question is now for the Senate to determine. It is not a debatable question.

Mr. OVERMAN. The question is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a debatable question.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. OVERMAN. Why not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can appeal from that decision also.

Mr. OVERMAN. An appeal is always debatable.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am sure the Chair wants to be fair, and is fair, but I am certain he is temporarily in error. An appeal from the decision is debatable. I beg pardon of the Chair for the bald statement. I know that the Chair is uniformly fair, and wishes to be fair in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to decide all questions in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. With due deference to the Chair, I think the appeal is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On further consideration the Chair is inclined to think that the Senator from North Carolina is right and that the question is open to debate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to be unduly persistent in this matter, but I do desire that my position in reference to it shall be known. I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations for about 15 years. I have sometimes been called "the watchdog of the Treasury," but not so, Mr. President. However, I, together with my colleagues on the committee, have saved the Government millions of dollars by having such items as this cut out of appropriations bills. And I am sorry we did not cut this appropriation out in committee.

In order to show that I am not prejudiced in the matter, I desire to say that for 15 years I have supported every appropriation which has been proposed for Howard University. I was very much gratified on Friday last when three prominent colored men, representatives of leading churches of the city, came to me and said, "Mr. OVERMAN, we have always understood that you were the colored man's friend." I asked, "Where are you from?" They replied, "All three of us were educated at a college in your town." I have supported that college with my purse and with my sympathy.

I was reminded that 40 years ago, when the question came up of segregating the funds derived from taxes so that those which were paid by the white men should be used only for educating white people and only the funds derived from the taxation of colored people should be used for educating colored people, I fought the proposition, and succeeded in killing it. Those people remembered that. So the colored people in my State have been treated fairly and squarely; they have been educated and encouraged in every possible way. That statement of my position, Mr. President, shows that I am honest in this matter, and that I am now opposing this appropriation because there is no authority in law for it. Indeed, it is admitted on this floor, Mr. President, that there is no authority for this appropriation.

What is the history of this proposed appropriation? In the Appropriations Committee we found an estimate for $800,000 for the support of Howard University. I voted for an appropriation of $300,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The total estimate was for over $900,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. The total estimate, as the Senator from Utah suggests, was over $900,000. I voted for an appropriation of $125,000 for the salaries of officers, professors, and teachers, and for ice and stationery, and so on; for an appropriation of $30,000 for tools, material, salaries of instructors, and so forth; for an appropriation of $9,000 for the medical department; for an appropriation of $5,000 for material and apparatus, and so forth; for an appropriation of $3,500 for books, shelving, furniture, and so forth; for an appropriation of $20,000 for improvement of grounds and repair of buildings; for an appropriation of $15,000 for fuel and light; in short, for everything that was asked for the maintenance of Howard University.

Mr. President, I know there is a crying need and there has been a clamor for public buildings in every State and town in the Union; that there is a clamor for great buildings here in Washington; that there is a clamor for the soldiers' bonus; and the present condition of the Treasury caused me to raise the point that this appropriation had not been authorized by law. Apparently somebody stepped into the Treasury Department and suggested that General Lord and the Budget Bureau send the estimate down for the purpose of making the amendment in order.

Who did it? Was it done by any Member of Congress? The Budget Bureau ought to be investigated. They have no more power than have I to send down to Congress an estimate for an appropriation that is not authorized by law, and thereby seek to make it in order, for there is nothing in the law which gives them that right. The law prescribes what they shall do. The law prescribes that they shall compute and ascertain the probable amount of the revenues of the Government, then ascertain what is needed for the legitimate expenses of the Government under authorization of law, and send that information down to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, ever since I have been here, for 15 years, I have fought to hold down appropriations to the legitimate ends of government and to supply the legitimate needs of the Government. Now it is proposed that we shall appropriate $500,000 for a purpose that Congress has not authorized. I apprehend the appropriation has been suggested by some one at the Treasury Department and perhaps by somebody higher up than the Budget Bureau. Why should we do it? Why not appropriate $500,000 for the erection of a public building in some State? Why not appropriate for the soldiers' bonus? Why not appropriate other millions of dollars which are asked for instead of keeping the appropriations down to the legitimate ends of the Government.

Mr. President, from my course here, which I have related, much as I dislike to do so, it is evident that I am not prejudiced in this matter. I have been in favor of the colored man being educated. I have helped him; I have encouraged him. The fact that three of them from the college in my town came here and expressed entire satisfaction with my course in this matter demonstrates the rectitude of my position. When I told them I had voted for the appropriations I have mentioned they stated that they were perfectly satisfied; that they had not at first understood my position; that they had been misled by what they had seen in the newspapers to the effect that I was fighting the appropriation for Howard University. Those three men, who were my friends, whom I had helped, stated that they were satisfied.

I believe from the evidence that Doctor Durkee himself was satisfied with what we gave him and did not ask for this additional appropriation of $500,000.

I am going to read from his testimony. I wish to say, with the permission of the Senate, that those representing Howard University did not press the $500,000 appropriation. In the House, on a point of order, the item of $207,000 was stricken out, and that is what those representing the university were interested in, and they came before the committee in the effort to have that item restored. I voted for it, but I repeat they did not, before the committee, press for the $500,000 appropriation. I shall not read all the testimony, but Doctor Durkee, a very good man, an able man, and a great preacher, came before the committee and testified. He referred to what the House had done in reference to knocking out the item of $207,000 and requested that it be restored, but said hardly a word about the $500,000. I quote from his testimony before the committee:

Senator SMOOT. Was there anything else, Doctor Durkee, that you wanted to say other than that which is printed in the House hearings?

Doctor DURKEE. It was simply, sir, to request that the amount——

Senator SMOOT. You want the amount restored which the House committee recommended?

Doctor DURKEE. Just restored, sir. We are not asking for anything more.

That is the testimony of Doctor Durkee himself; he was requesting merely the item of $207,000. He wanted that item restored, and said they were asking for nothing more.

One of the members of the committee asked him about the House hearing, where he did go into the question of the $500,000 appropriation. He referred to that and said he would like to have it and supposed it was in order because it had been estimated for. I quote again from the hearings:

Senator SMOOT. It was never acted on.

Doctor DURKEE. The $500,000 was never acted on; but as, of course, the Budget makes report to the Senate, I presume it is entirely competent for the Senate, if it cares to do so, just to examine the whole thing; but we have been particularly pleading that the amount of $207,500 be restored, or else it will mean crushing the university.

Take this testimony and read it and it will be seen that all he asks for is the item of $207,000. As I have said, I voted for it, and the committee allowed it. Then, however, by a majority of one vote, the Committee on Appropriations proposed to allow $500,000 more for an item which, although it has been sent down here, is not authorized by law.

Mr. LENROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish the floor in my own right.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish to indorse to the very fullest extent all the Senator from North Carolina has said with reference to his own attitude concerning appropriations generally and his service upon the Appropriations Committee. I am sure that no Senator who is acquainted with his service feels otherwise than that he has no ulterior motive in making the point of order, but it has been made in accordance with his general rule of protecting the Treasury.

But, Mr. President, the question presented by the Senator from North Carolina is a very important one. If this were the only instance in which the Budget may have sent an estimate to Congress that was not authorized by law—in other words, that did not have a legislative foundation—I should be very much inclined to agree with the Senator from North Carolina, but I want to call his attention to the fact that in this very bill there are no doubt dozens and dozens of items—and the same thing is true of every appropriation bill—for which estimates are submitted but for which there is no authority of law. The Senator must know that in the House of Representatives, under the rules that obtain there, very often there are stricken out on points of order whole pages of appropriations that have been reported in appropriation bills, but they are always restored in the Senate and are estimated for by the Budget. So that, Mr. President, if we adopt a rule that no appropriation shall be made, although the estimate comes in from the Budget Bureau, unless there is authority of law for the appropriation, we will be kept very busy in considering each appropriation bill striking out appropriations which are absolutely necessary to carry on the Government. The Government, I say, could not run efficiently if that rule were applied strictly to all the appropriations that are made by the Congress.

That being so, Mr. President, I am inclined to give to the rule the construction, not that it relates back to authority of law to make the estimate, but that it relates only to the estimate being sent to the Congress in the manner authorized and directed by law, and that has been done in this case. Therefore it satisfies the requirements of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The Chair will ask the Senator from Mississippi on what question the appeal is taken.

Mr. HARRISON. The question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair of yesterday touching the question that the estimate was not submitted in accordance with law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, therefore, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. LENROOT. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DALE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on a previous vote, and the same transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called.) I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ERNST. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. My colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] is paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER]. If present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

I also desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—49.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I now offer a further amendment. At the end of line 21, page 102, I move to insert the following:

For equipment for additions to medical school buildings, $130,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 102, after line 21 and the amendment just agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

For equipment for additions to medical school buildings, $130,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question concerning the salary of the Governor of Hawaii. Seven thousand dollars is appropriated for that purpose, and I find that the law provides for a salary of $10,000. Will the Senator explain why the law is not carried out?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not looked up the law, but I do know that the appropriation of $7,000 has been made for years and years past. It is estimated at $7,000, and no question has ever been raised before the committee about increasing it.

Mr. LENROOT. I think probably it arises through error, because the organic act was amended in 1921, and I want to read section 92:

That the following officers shall receive the following annual salaries, to be paid by the United States: The governor, $10,000.

Of course, there would be a claim for the difference, and it ought to be appropriated for, that being the fixed amount prescribed by law.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there never has been a claim made for the higher amount. We have never received a letter on the subject from the governor, and I know that we have only appropriated $7,000 per annum for the governor since long before that law passed, and also since it was passed.

Mr. LENROOT. What does the Senator say about the fixed salary being provided for by law and our not appropriating for it? There certainly is a claim against the Treasury for the additional $3,000. I suggest that the matter go to conference, and I will offer an amendment making it $10,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I will accept that amendment with the view of going to conference with it, and then we will find out just why there has not been a claim made for it.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well, I offer the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 98, line 8, after the word "Governor," it is proposed to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$10,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Utah be as good and kind to me as he was to the Senator from Wisconsin, and accept an amendment to go to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that I will do anything in the world I can for him.

Mr. HARRISON. This is a good time to test the Senator. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 47, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

For the construction, equipment, and maintenance of a hospital for Indians at Philadelphia, Miss., and for incidental and all other expenses necessary for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, $25,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say that these poor unfortunates are in distress. They have no palatial school buildings. They have no equipment already installed. There is nothing to take care of them. There are just about 2,000 unfortunate Indians down there in Mississippi who need some relief. This amendment carries an appropriation of only $25,000 to erect a hospital for them. In view of the action of the Senate in just appropriating some half-million dollars to erect buildings out here for Howard University, I am quite sure, to keep up a consistent record, that they will give $25,000 to these unfortunate Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. I must keep up a consistent record, and, of course, I am compelled to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very sorry the Senator makes the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I am compelled to do it.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not as fortunate as the Senator from Wisconsin was. I have not been able to bring pressure to bear on the departments of the Government to induce them to give me an estimate to go to the bureau, and consequently I have no estimate provided. If the Senator, with the strong influence that he exerts, wants to raise the point of order, I have to submit; but my poor people down there go without hospital facilities.

Mr. SMOOT. I am compelled to make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, while we are discussing the question of schools, I desire to state that I have been informed that some of the public schools in this city are still short of sufficient lighting facilities, and that is a matter which should be taken up and remedied.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, yesterday an item on page 84, a committee amendment, engaged the attention of the Senate nearly all afternoon, and I have no disposition whatever to revive the question, if I could, but I am going to propose an amendment, so that it may go to conference. It has relation to the building of a road from the village of Main, on the old Santa Fe trail, up to the south boundary of the Grand Canyon. It in no sense revives the controversy which my worthy colleague and I had yesterday. I have submitted the amendment to him, and he advises me he is prepared to vote for it. It does not in any way, form, or fashion, here or elsewhere, revive the controversy which we had yesterday. It reads:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of an approach road from Main, Ariz., to the south boundary of the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000.

The item on page 84 for the purchase of the Bright Angel trail will, of course, be in conference. It seems to me that the conferees ought to have liberty of movement and action, and that it would be wise to have this amendment go to conference also. Of course, I do not apprehend, do not want, or expect, that $200,000 would be appropriated or agreed upon by the conferees, but I want them to have full liberty of action. Therefore, I offer the amendment, in order that it may go to conference to be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am compelled to make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be reported.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. The Senator has just read it.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Arizona proposes to insert, in the proper place, the following:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of an approach road from Main, Ariz., to the south boundary of the Grand Canyon National Park, $100,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course, if my friend, the able Senator from Utah, makes a point of order and resists, and with contempt rejects, any approach I make looking toward a settlement of the question I can not help it. I have done my best, and I have been acting in good faith, so that when he gets into conference he will not be hedged into a Procrustean bed of fixity, but will have some latitude in which he can move as a conferee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only thing I object to is the Senator's statement that I reject this amendment with contempt. I have no contempt about the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator has not toward the item, but from the gesture with which the Senator made the point of order it looked as if he spurned any suggestion of settlement or compromise.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not spurning it.

Mr. ASHURST. I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah make a point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. That it has not been estimated for.

Mr. ASHURST. I freely admit it is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ASHURST. I have one other amendment to offer, Mr. President, and I will take but a moment of time on it. In 1916 Congress authorized the construction of a diversion dam, with necessary controlling works, to irrigate 55,000 or 60,000 acres of Indian land, not an acre of land owned by whites, but all Indian land. The project is nearly complete. It requires about $300,000 more to complete it. The force is at work now. Their appropriation is about exhausted. If the force doing the work shall be scattered, if the teams of horses are taken away, it will cost the Government nearly $70,000 to reassemble this force to resume the work.

I have here a letter signed by President Coolidge urging this appropriation, which I will read. It is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 15, 1924.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1924, pertaining to the Indian Service, amounting to $300,000.

The details of this estimate, the necessity therefor, and the reason for its submission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget transmitted herewith, with whose comments and observations thereon I concur.

Respectfully, CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Then here is a letter signed by H. M. Lord, Director of the Bureau of the Budget, as follows:

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, February 15, 1924.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration, and upon your approval for transmission to Congress, a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1924, for completing the dam, with bridge superstructure, across the Gila River on the Gila Indian Reservation in Arizona, amounting to $300,000.

In support of this estimate the Secretary of the Interior, in a letter dated February 13, 1924, states as follows:

"Construction of the project was authorized by the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stats. 129), and by the act of February 14, 1920 (41 Stats. 408), the cost was limited to $400,000. Actual construction work was started in the spring of 1922 and has been continued as rapidly as conditions would permit. The available funds out of the sums appropriated will be exhausted about the 1st of April.

"This project consists of a floating or Indian type weir, the fore apron of which is [illegible]ed to protect the piers supporting the bridge. Water is prevented from passing around the exposed end of the structure by a guide bank extending up the river at nearly right angles to the dam. This guide bank is of earth fill, heavily armored with rock. The dam is protected on the downstream face by a broad, heavy talus of rock, and the dam rests on two rows of sheet piling totaling 3,000 feet in length. The bridge piers are supported by some 300 piles. At the present time all the piles have been driven and the guide bank and talus have been completed, which contains 120,000 cubic yards of rock. The work remaining to be performed is the placing of the concrete forming the dam and bridge and the construction of the necessary dikes to complete the structure. The work is now protected by temporary dikes, and unless construction work is continued there is grave danger of floods destroying that which has been accomplished.

"At the time the original estimates were prepared for this project there was a distance of 1,200 feet between the banks of the river. Due to erosion this distance has been increased to 2,400 feet, which doubles the quantity of work required in the construction, and since the cost of material, labor, and freight has greatly increased, it will be necessary to obtain additional funds to complete the project.

"The closing down of the work on the 1st of April, which will be necessary if funds are not made available, will result disastrously in that no benefit can be derived from the money already expended, and there will be grave danger, by reason of floods, of total destruction of the work already accomplished, making the total sum expended a complete loss. You will therefore see the exigency of the item."

The cost of this work is at present limited to $400,000. This amount has been appropriated and will be exhausted in a short time. The reasons for the increase in cost are given in the letter from the Secretary of the Interior quoted above. The additional amount of $300,000 is for the completion of the project. On the assurances of the Indian Service that the work will be fully completed on or before June 30, 1925, the estimate contains provisions increasing the limit of cost to $700,000 and making the additional $300,000 available until the end of the fiscal year 1925.

The above estimate of appropriation is required to meet an unforeseen contingency arising during the fiscal year indicated and since the transmission of the Budget for that year.

Approval of the estimate is recommended.

Very respectfully,

H. M. LORD,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDENT.

I can say no more. The argument is fully stated there, without the loss of a word, and I can say nothing else. Let this go to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I agree with every word in this report, and I have no doubt but that the appropriation will be made, but it will be made in regular order. To-day the House is holding hearings on the first deficiency appropriation bill, and this is an appropriation for a deficiency of 1924. We are appropriating in this bill for the year 1925; I assure the Senator from Arizona that I am in full accord with every word that is said here. I have no doubt but what it will be in the deficiency bill, and will be passed before the 1st of April.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore, I shall have to make a point of order against it; or, if the Senator will withdraw it, I would prefer to have him do that.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw the amendment, because the Senator has so frankly and so manfully stated that he believes and thinks it will become a law before the 1st of April. I will not put him to the trouble of going into the RECORD with a point of order, and I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, on page 34, lines 13 to 17, there is provided an appropriation of $5,000 for the operation and maintenance, including repairs, of the Toppenish-Simco irrigation system, on the Yakima Reservation, Washington.

This is a part of a project that was provided for several years ago. When it was first provided for, my recollection is that it was estimated that the part that was to be taken up at that time would cost $200,000, and appropriations have been made to that extent, and to that extent the project was completed. This $5,000 is for maintenance and operation. As I said, however, that is only a part of what it was intended should ultimately be reclaimed, and there are about 17,000 acres more which it is possible to reclaim, and which ought to be reclaimed.

The Department of the Interior recommended to the Budget an appropriation of $200,000 for the extension of this project, but that was not submitted by the Budget to Congress.

The situation on that project, however, is pressing. These lands are very productive, and their reclamation for the benefit of the Indians is extremely important. I have a telegram here relating to the matter, in which it is stated:

Failure to get construction funds for Toppenish-Simcoe unit of Wabato project this would mean waiting another year for eleven hundred people eleven hundred years wasted life department recommended $200,000 Budget cut to $75,000.

The sender of this telegram was mistaken in that last statement. The Budget estimated $25,000, but that was for operation and maintenance and not for extension. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. McKELLAR. What did the original law provide, and has it been fully carried out? Could these extensions be made under the law?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The original project, which we authorized to the extent of $200,000, has been appropriated for, and what was to be done with that money has been completed. The $5,000 proposed here is for maintenance and operation of that part of the work. The amendment I have offered proposes an extension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The READING CLERK. On page 34, line 13, after the word "for," insert the word "extension," and in line 17 strike out "$5,000" and insert "$55,000," so as to read:

For extension, operation, and maintenance, including repairs of the Toppenish-Simcoe irrigation system, on the Yakima Reservation, Wash., reimbursable as provided by the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L. p. 28), $55,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I am compelled to make the point of order against the amendment that it has not been estimated for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What has the Budget estimated upon the matter?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Budget has estimated $25,000 for operation and maintenance, including repairs. I must say that it has not submitted any estimate for extension of the project. I am sorry that I have to admit that, but it is the fact. I am sorry the Senator from Utah feels that he has to make the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. It is just the same as a point of order made against other projects that have been presented on the floor during the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. If there be no further amendments to propose as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 52) for the relief of the drought-stricken farm areas of New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 52.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution for information.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Cummins	Gerry	McKellar
Ashurst	Curtis	Glass	McNary
Bal:	Dale	Harris	Moses
Bayard	Dial	Harrison	Neely
Borah	Dill	Heflin	Norbeck
Brandegee	Edge	Howell	Norris
Brookhart	Elkins	Johnson, Minn.	Oddie
Broussard	Ernst	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman
Bruce	Ferris	Jones, Wash.	Pepper
Bursum	Fess	Kendrick	Phipps
Cameron	Fletcher	Keyes	Ransdell
Copeland	Frazier	Ladd	Reed, Pa.
Couzens	George	Lodge	Robinson

Sheppard	Spencer	Warren	Willis
Smith	Stanley	Watson
Smoot	Trammell	Wheeler

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 52.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The reading clerk read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 52), which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico obtained the floor.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to his colleague?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. I am just in receipt of a telegram relating to the joint resolution now pending, from the farmers and business men of Mountainair, N. Mex., which reads as follows:

MOUNTAINAIR, N. MEX., February 23, 1924.

Hon. H. O. BURSUM,
United States Senate, Washington:

Condition of farmers and merchants in Estancia Valley exceedingly critical and serious. Local banks unable to assist. The absolute financial requirements for feed, seed, and groceries can not possibly be met by local financing institutions. Some relief must be had immediately or 75 per cent of farmers must leave this valley. We urgently implore you to use every effort possible to secure the passage of JONES's Joint Resolution No. 30, and we heartily indorse your bill authorizing War Finance to extend practical assistance.

ROMUNDO ROMERO,	J. J. WHITE,

JOHN H. DOYLE,	W. R. ORME,
M. B. CONDREY,	FREDERICO CHAVEZ,
G. O. CALDWELL,	MARSHALL ORME,
D. T. MCCULLOH,	Relief Committee.

I have another telegram, dated at Albuquerque, from the Albuquerque Chamber of Commerce, as follows:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., February 23, 1924.

Senator HOLM O. BURSUM,
Washington, D. C.:

Our farmers in Estancia Valley badly in need of funds for planting crop this year. Plenty moisture for a good crop but no funds. We would appreciate your efforts in securing Jones measure providing loan.

ALBUQUERQUE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
D. B. MCKEE, Secretary.

I also have another message from Albuquerque from the Nash Electrical Supply Co., which is as follows:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., February 24, 1924.

Senator H. O. BURSUM,
Washington, D. C.:

We respectfully request you use your utmost endeavor to secure passage of the Jones bill now before Congress. Entire farming population Estancia Valley in desperate need of immediate financial assistance for seed and personal needs until new crop is made.

NASH ELECTRICAL SUPPLY CO.,
By M. NASH.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, we had this joint resolution before the Senate for consideration two or three weeks ago, and there intervened the various discussions to which we have all listened during the days when we have had before the Senate the appropriation bill which has just been passed. At the time the joint resolution was previously under consideration I made rather an extended statement regarding its merits. I do not care to impose upon the Senate any lengthy statement now unless it should be absolutely necessary.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We had extensive hearings before that committee, and the joint resolution now comes before the Senate with the unanimous report and support of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The facts and circumstances were gone into at that time. I have on my desk now a number of telegrams and letters regarding the situation which the resolution is designed to meet, and I have never been acquainted with a situation which came with such touching appeal as does the one which is now presented to the Senate. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate in the discussion of the joint resolution, but I am willing to do that if any Senator should desire to have further information upon the subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have been informed that an emergency condition exists in the State of New Mexico and that that condition is practically State-wide; that there have been a large number of bank failures; that it is impracticable to resume farming operations unless some arrangement is made to finance such operations from outside of the State; and that the crop failures, incident to the lack of moisture during recent seasons, have brought about a situation that justifies an extraordinary remedy. Is that correct?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Arkansas is correct; and he would be justified in putting all the emphasis possible upon his statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am fully aware of the awful drought which has visited New Mexico not only during the past year but during the previous year also. I have not the least objection to this proposed appropriation, but I think there are one or two provisions which should be changed. I notice the joint resolution provides—

And not more than $15,000 may be used in the District of Columbia by the Secretary of Agriculture in the administration of this act.

Mr. President, that sum, I think, is altogether out of proportion. I do not think it will require $15,000 to hire people here in the District of Columbia to administer the proposed loans. The Senator from New Mexico knows that it would not cost half that to have a bank attend to the matter.

Not only that, but I do not think we ought to take any money out of this appropriation other than that which is absolutely necessary. The entire amount should be available for loans. It does seems to me, therefore, with no office rent to pay and, perhaps, no extra help to employ but merely assigning the work to some division of the Agricultural Department, $7,500 would be sufficient to cover every possible necessary expenditure. I do not wish to put the amount too low, but I should like every dollar of the money proposed to be appropriated to go to the purpose which Congress has in view, and that is to help the farmers in New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I fully appreciate the expressions of the Senator from Utah, but I will say that the amount for administration carried in the joint resolution was fixed after conference with the Department of Agriculture. I know nothing about what it will cost, but the amount was suggested by the Department of Agriculture. If the Senator from Utah believes that the matter can be handled for less, I am quite willing to accept his judgment in reference to the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that if the $15,000 be appropriated by the joint resolution to be expended by the Department of Agriculture it will be very easy, indeed, to have some one who is doing other work assigned to administer the provisions of the joint resolution and pay him out of that sum.

Mr. President, I wish it distinctly understood that I would not cramp the department for the need of a dollar; but I do not see how it is possible for the department to expend more than $10,000. I therefore offer an amendment to strike out "$15,000" and to insert "$10,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In section 2, page 3, line 1, after the words "more than," it is proposed to strike out "$15,000" and to insert "$10,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I now ask that the committee amendment to the joint resolution may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the committee amendment.

The READING CLERK. In section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "seed," it is proposed to strike out "and such other purposes" and to insert "feed, food, and for actual farming expenses, not including the purchase of equipment," so as to read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the spring and fall planting of 1924, to make advances or loans to farmers in the drought-stricken areas of New Mexico, where he shall find that special need exists for such assistance, for the purchase of seed, feed, food, and for actual farming expenses, not including the purchase of equipment, as he may find need for the cultivation of farm lands within the said State, not to exceed in any instance the sum of $6 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I understand the joint resolution proposes to authorize a direct loan to the individual. Is that correct, I will ask the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from South Carolina is quite right in his statement.

Mr. DIAL. Who is going to make the loan? What machinery is proposed to be set up for that purpose?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The whole matter is to be handled by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the loans are to be made in his discretion for the purposes specified in the joint resolution.

Mr. DIAL. Then will it not be necessary to employ local help in order to make the individual loans?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I doubt if it will be necessary to employ any local help to do so, but it may be that it will. The Secretary of Agriculture will be authorized under the joint resolution to do so, but he can get all the voluntary help he desires if he cares to use it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no doubt but that this appropriation will be administered in precisely the same way in which the appropriation for fertilizer was administered in the years past. We have at different times passed three or four appropriation bills for the sale of nitrates that came from Chile, and I do not think the department ever had any trouble about the matter. I think the work of administration has been done by the department itself, without asking for an additional appropriation.

Mr. DIAL. Were not the nitrates sold to the farmers for cash at cost? It was not a sale on credit to individual farmers.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there was a credit, the cash being subsequently paid by the individual farmers.

Mr. SMITH. No, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that the individual farmers did not pay for the fertilizer.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to state to the Senator from Utah that I was the author of the law covering the matter to which he has referred. The law provided that the nitrates should be sold for cash, and the cash was paid simultaneous with the delivery of the nitrates, but the Government did not use any outside help for the administration of the act. The Government used the agricultural demonstration agents, who were in the community, for the purpose of receiving and distributing the nitrates.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the department utilized the agents of the Agricultural Department?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; in order to help the Department of Agriculture in the administration of the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, whatever employees the Agricultural Department has in New Mexico could be used for this purpose.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. BURSUM. I desire to suggest that every county in the State has an agricultural agent under the agricultural college, and there is no trouble to obtain intelligent cooperation as well as reliable information through the several county agricultural agents in the State who may cooperate with the Agricultural Department.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Since the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has asked his question, I desire to say that I have had my mind refreshed upon the matter which he has discussed. I now state that the Department of Agriculture in handling previous loans has done so through the agricultural agents who are already in the employ of the Government, principally the agents of the farm-loan banks. The same machinery would be used in regard to these proposed loans as has been used with regard to other similar loans.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question. As I understand the cost of the administration in the District of Columbia is now limited to $10,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that cost to be absorbed by the borrowers from this fund, or is it to be a loss to the Government?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Secretary of Agriculture will charge interest on the loans, but the whole expense will be taken care of under the general appropriation of a million dollars. As I take it, however, the department will get back sufficient interest to have a margin to cover the expense.

Mr. GEORGE. But it would not get back as principal the $10,000, or so much of it as might be expended in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The interest upon the loan would come back to the Treasury.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that; but the question I ask is, Is the cost of administration in the District of Columbia to be apportioned among the borrowers?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There is no provision in the joint resolution for that.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator an additional question?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Is this money to be loaned throughout the State or in a particular portion of the State?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is to be loaned throughout the State where, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is necessary.

Mr. GEORGE. Then the same emergency condition exists throughout the State?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Indeed it does. I can assure the Senator of that.

Mr. GEORGE. Would the Senator be kind enough to state the extent of bank failures in the State of New Mexico?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am very glad to furnish the information. I must say, however, that it is disheartening even to recall the situation. I have before me a typewritten page, closely written with single space lines, listing the bank failures in New Mexico. The names of the banks are all given and the dates of the failures. I have here also a statement of how the banking capital and resources have been reduced.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator the totals there?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have the totals. For the national banks during the last year the banking resources were reduced from $40,000,000 to $35,000,000, a decrease of over $5,000,000; and for the State banks the banking resources decreased from $22,000,000 to $15,000,000, a decrease of about $7,000,000 in banking resources. In addition to that, further to assure the Senator as to the necessities of the situation, I may say that all the banks which are left have their resources absolutely tied up in a way that will not enable them to make additional loans even in cases where security is offered. The people whom it is desired to aid, however, are without security. For two years they have suffered under the extreme drought conditions there.

The livestock industry has been in a very depressed, indeed disastrous, condition. The cattle growers are nearly all bankrupt. The sheep growers were nearly in that condition, but they have been coming back, if I may use that expression; but owing to the bank failures, the banks have had to conserve all of their resources. I have telegram after telegram from the few banks which are operating and from the governor of the State appealing for this aid.

It was only a few days ago that the Federal reserve system, by airplane, sent into one community there a half million dollars to save the largest bank in the State. There is such a situation there, I believe, as has never existed anywhere else. If a calamity of any kind and of the most serious nature could ever appeal to the Congress of the United States, no more serious situation could be presented than that which exists to-day in my State. It is with exceedingly great regret that I feel called upon to make these statements, for we have resources there; but the population is sparse, and we have been afflicted by this calamity, which does call upon the Congress of the United States for assistance at least as much as the call to feed the starving people of Russia or any other foreign country for whom we have appropriated money from the Treasury.

Talk about the disasters in San Francisco of a few years ago! They had something to come back with. We are utterly without the means of coming back; and I appeal to the Senator that in justice to these people and to a great element of the citizens of this country the relief should be afforded, and thus enable those people to preserve their homes, raise something, and bring back their resources, and give them an opportunity to progress in that State. It has been estimated by one of the bankers in the city of Santa Fe that the use of this $1,000,000 would mean at least $30,000,000 of crops to the people of that State.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator available statistics indicating the number of farmers who would possibly be served by this appropriation?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have an estimate by the representative of the Government at the Agricultural College of New Mexico. He is the statistician and in charge of the county agents. He estimates the number at between five and six thousand people.

Mr. DIAL. People or families?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Families—that is, farms.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I sympathize deeply with those people. That goes without saying; but I believe that instead of making this loan it would be better policy to donate some money to those people.

In the debate the other day it developed that the people of New Mexico already owe the United States Government sums heretofore advanced which have not been paid back, I think something like $1,000,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. DIAL. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is in error about that. None of these other loans has ever been made to the people of New Mexico, that I recall; and I want to state this: The Federal farm loan banks have made very large loans, in the aggregate, to the people of New Mexico; and until last year their repayments—their payments of interest and obligations to the Federal farm loan banks—put New Mexico at the head of the list as the State coming nearest to being absolutely free from any further obligations to the banks, which had matured. Those people simply want an opportunity to make something for themselves, and there is not the slightest question but that they will come just as near making their repayments as any people in all this land.

Mr. DIAL. Then I unintentionally fell into error. My recollection was that the Senator from New Mexico said the other day that they were behind some 60 per cent of the payments on some loans.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That statement referred to the loans made up in the northwestern part of the United States, up in the Dakotas, in Kansas, and out in the State of Washington, I believe—eastern Washington—and in some of those Northwestern States.

Mr. DIAL. Loans that had been made by the Government?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. By the Government.

Mr. DIAL. I got it mixed up with the Senator's State.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if there is any security other than the crop required to secure the loan?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There is none provided for. That is the one security which is offered.

Mr. DIAL. That seems to me to be a very loose way for the Government to do business.

As I understand, this bill goes further than any bill that has ever heretofore passed Congress. In the case that my colleague cited awhile ago, where fertilizer was sold to the farmers at cost, they paid cash before delivery. That is indeed quite a different principle from this one. That was proper and should have been done; but for the Government to go into business, into the banking business or into the pawnbroking business, I might say, established a very dangerous precedent.

As we lawyers know, hard cases make bad law. Bad precedents will rise up here to plague us in the future, and I can not give my consent to the passage of this joint resolution.

I do not feel that we have the legal right or the moral right to donate the money of the taxpayers, or to go into the business of banking or merchandising, or the lien business, as we call it down South, lending money on a crop to be raised, and a crop that is not yet planted. I can not see where that will lead us to. The end would not be in sight.

I hope the joint resolution will not pass; and while it would be violating my conscience somewhat, I would vote to donate those people half a million dollars, and I am not strong on donations. My friend refers to the Russian donation. I voted against it and spoke against it. I did not feel we had a right to do it. This is simply paternalism run mad, and we will be here many days and many months and many years to meet similar bills if this precedent is established.

The condition in my State is not dissimilar from this, but I have not thought it was right to introduce a bill here to lend Government money directly to the farmers or to the merchants or to any other class of our people. Why not lend it to the fertilizer manufacturers, to the mill interests, or to the shoe factories, or to other industries over the country, to keep them from closing down and throwing people out of employment, if we are going to lend it to one class of people?

In my State during the last few years 9,000 farmers quit their farms and moved to town, to mill towns and other towns, anywhere they could get work. They absolutely failed at farming. Everything that they had was sold out. The boll weevil simply ate us up for several years down there, and is still continuing its ravages. One acre out of every six in South Carolina that was in cultivation two or three years ago was not in cultivation last year.

Why, Mr. President, a great many people just abandoned their farms and left their crops. They could not farm at all. That is the case all over the South. It is not peculiar to one section of our country alone. I can not see where we will end if this precedent is established; and then we might just as well let the United States Government go into the general banking business, and take care of everybody who has some misfortune. I hate to say anything against this measure. My good friend from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] is a sound legislator, and I venture to say that it took him a good, long while to get his own consent to advocate this principle. So, Mr. President, the fate of this measure is left to the Senate; but I must enter my protest against it. I do not feel that we are doing our duty to the taxpayers of this country in making a new departure, going farther than we have ever gone heretofore, at the very time when we are trying to get business stabilized and get people back on their feet, and at the time when we are trying to reduce taxes and see if we can not lessen the burdens of the people, so that we will bring back prosperity all over the country.

I hope the joint resolution will not pass.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I beg to assure my very warm friend from South Carolina that I should not be advocating this joint resolution unless the necessity were extreme.

Mr. DIAL. The necessity is great, no doubt.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. At the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 2, line 12, I move to strike out the period and insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 12, after the word "designate," it is proposed to insert the following:

and to give a valid lien on the growing crops to be produced from money obtained through such loan or advance in manner and form as required by the laws of New Mexico, which said lien, when recorded, shall have priority in payment over all other liens or encumbrances of whatsoever kind on such crops.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether there is any provision whereby these loans can be supervised, to see that the money is not diverted to some other use, and to see that it is not advanced more rapidly than the requirements of the crops will justify?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Secretary of Agriculture is given complete jurisdiction of all those matters. The loans are to be made at his discretion, and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico desire the preamble adopted or stricken out?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I move the adoption of the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution as passed is as follows:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 52) for the relief of the drought-stricken farm areas of New Mexico.

Whereas many sections of New Mexico are impoverished because of a continued drought that has persisted for the past three years, and farmers so affected have borrowed money from all sources until now their credit facilities are exhausted, and they can no longer obtain funds to continue the cultivation of their farms; and

Whereas weather conditions now prevailing in New Mexico point to a very successful year for farming providing the farmers of these drought-stricken areas can obtain the necessary funds to operate their farms and thereby be able to recuperate their losses caused by repeated crop failures: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, for the spring and fall planting of 1924, to make advances or loans to farmers in the drought-stricken areas of New Mexico, where he shall find that special need exists for such assistance, for the purchase of seed, feed, food, and for actual farming expenses, not including the purchase of equipment, as he may find need for the cultivation of farm lands within the said State, not to exceed in any instance the sum of $6 per acre. Such advances or loans shall be made upon such terms and conditions and subject to such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, including an agreement by each farmer to use the money obtained by him for the production of such crops as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate, and to give a valid lien on the growing crops to be produced from money obtained through such loan or advance in manner and form as required by the laws of New Mexico, which said lien, when recorded, shall have priority in payment over all other liens or encumbrances of whatsoever kind on such crops. A first lien on the crop to be produced from money obtained through this loan or advance made under this act shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security therefor. All such loans or advances shall be made through such agencies as the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate, and in no instance shall any portion of funds obtained through the administration of this act be used for the payment of obligations other than those incurred under the regulations as provided by the Secretary of Agriculture in the administration and in accordance with the provisions herein contained.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be immediately available, and not more than $10,000 may be used in the District of Columbia by the Secretary of Agriculture in the administration of this act.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall knowingly make any false representation for the purpose of obtaining a loan or advance under the foregoing section upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

PROMOTION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. NORBECK. I move that the Senate take up for immediate consideration Senate bill 2250, to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, it is the intention of the Senator from South Dakota to have this bill made the unfinished business, and then temporarily lay it aside?

Mr. NORBECK. That will be entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2250.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, and that only unobjected bills be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, only unobjected bills to be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether it is his purpose to proceed with other business after the conclusion of the calendar, if it shall be concluded?

Mr. CURTIS. I thought we would run with the calendar for about an hour, and then ask for an executive session, and after that adjourn.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRUCE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland objects.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in accordance with the order previously made, adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 27, 1924, at 11.45 o'clock a. m.

EXTENDING ARBITRATION CONVENTION WITH THE NETHERLANDS.

In executive session this day, the following agreement was ratified and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, I transmit herewith an agreement signed between the United States and the Netherlands on February 13, 1924, extending from March 25, 1924, for a further period of five years the arbitration convention concluded between the two Governments on May 2, 1908.

For the information of the Senate I transmit also copies of notes exchanged between the Secretary of State and the minister of the Netherlands at the time of the signature of the agreement.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 18, 1924.

THE PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, an agreement between the United States and the Netherlands, signed February 13, 1924, extending, from March 25, 1924, for a further period of five years the arbitration convention concluded between the two Governments on May 2, 1908.

At the time of the signature of the agreement notes were exchanged between the Secretary of State and the minister of the Netherlands confirming an understanding between the two Governments that in the event that the Senate gives its assent to the proposal made to the Senate by the President on February 24, 1923, that it consent, under certain stated conditions, to the adherence by the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, under which the Permanent Court of International Justice has been created at The Hague, and the Government of the Netherlands will not be averse to considering a modification of the convention of arbitration renewed by the agreement, or the making of a separate agreement providing for the reference of disputes mentioned in the convention to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Copies of these notes are inclosed for the information of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 15, 1924.

EXCHANGE OF NOTES.

The Secretary of State to the Netherlands Minister.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 13, 1924.

SIR: In connection with the signing to-day of an agreement for the renewal of the convention of arbitration concluded between the United States and the Government of the Netherlands May 2, 1908, and renewed from time to time, I have the honor, in pursuance of our informal conversations, to state the following understanding, which I shall be glad to have you confirm on behalf of your Government:

On February 24 last the President proposed to the Senate that it consent under certain stated conditions to the adhesion by the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, under which the Permanent Court of International Justice has been created at The Hague. In the event that the Senate gives its assent to the proposal, I understand that the Government of the Netherlands will not be averse to considering a modification of the convention of arbitration which we are renewing, or the making of a separate agreement, providing for the reference of disputes mentioned in the convention to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Jonkheer Dr. A. C. D. DE GRAEFF,
Minister of the Netherlands.

The Netherlands Minister to the Secretary of State.

No. 475. LEGATION DES PAYS-BAS,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1924.

HON. CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

SIR: With reference to your note of to-day I have the honor to state that the Royal Government has instructed me to inform you that in the event of the adhesion by the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, under which the Permanent Court of International Justice has been created at The Hague, the Government of the Netherlands will be willing to consider a modification of the convention of arbitration between the Government of the Netherlands and the United States, which we have renewed to-day, or to make a separate agreement providing for the reference of disputes mentioned in the convention to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

A. DE GRAEFF.

The Government of the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, desiring to extend for another five years the period during which the Arbitration Convention concluded between them on May 2, 1908, and extended by the agreement concluded between the two Governments on May 9, 1914, and further extending by the agreement concluded between the two Governments on March 8, 1919, shall remain in force, have respectively authorized the undersigned, to wit:

Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and Jonkheer Dr. A. C. D. de Graeff, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands at Washington, to conclude the following agreement:

ARTICLE I.

The Convention of Arbitration of May 2, 1908, between the Government of the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, the duration of which by Article III thereof was fixed at a period of five years from the date of the exchange of ratifications, which period, by the agreement of May 9, 1914, between the two Governments was extended for five years from March 25, 1914, and was extended by the agreement between them of March 8, 1919, for the further period of five years from March 25, 1919, is hereby extended and continued in force for the further period of five years from March 25, 1924.

ARTICLE II.

The present agreement shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by Her Majesty the Queen of the Netherlands, and it shall become effective upon the date of the exchange of ratifications, which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible.

Done in duplicate in the English and Dutch languages at Washington this 13th day of February, 1924.

[SEAL.] CHARLES EVANS HUGHES.
[SEAL.] DE GRAEFF.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Keep us very near to Thee, blessed Lord, as we meet the duties and responsibilities of this day. May we be responsive to all that is good and true and turn aside from all that is evil and false. Be present and cause us to yield ourselves to Thy will; thus shall our examples and influences be reflections caught from Thee. Help us to learn wisdom from failure. Cheer us with the truth that he who never makes a mistake never makes a discovery. Deepen in us the virtues of reverence and gratitude and direct all the questions of our minds and the longings of our hearts. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, the Immigration Committee has presented to the House and country a bill selective in principle, restrictive as to numbers, and humane in operation. It is intended as a permanent immigration policy of the United States. The act of 1917 is our basic immigration law. It seeks to exclude the undesirable, the physically, the mentally, and the morally unfit. The quota law, which expires June 30, 1924, as well as this bill, limits as to numbers. It applies to the nationals of the countries of Europe, Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and western Asia.

IMMIGRANT CERTIFICATES.

Under the provisions of the bill the intending immigrant must present with his passport a sworn statement as to his personal and family history, his physical condition, his ability to speak, read, and write, and his purpose of coming to the United States. For the first time in the history of our country our consul has the right to refuse to visé if in his opinion the immigrant is not admissible. The weaklings are weeded out before they start. Selection is made abroad of the best who apply. If admissible, in the opinion of the consul, the passport is visèed, and the immigrant is given an immigration certificate. Not more than 10 per cent of the total number allotted to each country may be issued in any one month, and a certificate is void two months after the date of its issue. The counting is made abroad and not at ports of entry. There will be no more racing of steamships across the oceans, as the immigrant's admission is not contingent upon the time of his arrival. This method will result in an even flow through Ellis Island throughout the entire year and thus eliminate the hardships and suffering from crowded conditions. The final inspection and medical examination will still be made at the ports of entry, but in a more thorough and careful manner.

NONQUOTA CERTIFICATES.

The bill permits and assists in the reuniting of families of American citizens. It is provided that an immigrant who is an unmarried child under 18 years of age, a father or mother over 55 years of age, husband or wife of a citizen of the United States may be admitted outside and irrespective of the quota. Application is made by the citizen to the Commissioner General of Immigration, who, if he finds it in order, shall, through the Secretary of State, authorize the consul to issue a nonquota certificate.

PERMIT.

If a resident alien wishes to visit his native land for a temporary visit, he may, before leaving, obtain a permit from the Commissioner General to reenter the country, and in such case he is not counted within the quota. At present such aliens are often prohibited by their own country from returning until the quota of his country is filled, as otherwise he is counted in the quota.

NONIMMIGRANTS.

Government officials and their families and aliens visiting the United States for business or pleasure need no certificates and are not subject to quota limitations and restrictions.

NATIONALITY.

Nationality is determined by place of birth. The bill seeks to amend the law by providing that the nationality of a minor child is fixed as that of its accompanying parent. It also provides that if the nationality of the wife is different from that of her husband, and if the quota for her country is filled, she shall be counted as of the husband's but without increasing the quota for his nation. This prevents the separation of families because of diverse nationality and quotas under the law.

PERSONS INELIGIBLE FOR CITIZENSHIP.

Immigration may be regulated by treaty or by law. I prefer the latter, as the law may be altered at any time to suit the needs of this Nation without the consent of the other country. When Roosevelt was President the Pacific coast was being flooded with Japanese laborers. The people protested. He negotiated the famous "gentleman's agreement" with Japan, not by the treaty or by law but through diplomatic communications.

This correspondence has never been published. By its terms we learn that Japan agreed to issue no passports to its nationals who are laborers seeking to come to the United States. However, their laborers do come to Mexico and are smuggled into our country over the border. President Taft altered its terms by a treaty so that the merchants and their families of Japan are permitted to enter. No other nation except Japan is permitted to regulate immigration of her nationals to the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States recently decided that a Japanese being a member of the yellow race is not eligible to citizenship. The question resolves itself into this: Shall we admit those who by law can not become naturalized? The committee said no and so stated in their bill.

Secretary of State Hughes has suggested placing Japan on a quota basis of the census of 1890 and thus admit annually but 246 Japanese. Such an act would constitute a surrender of our Japanese policy. To recognize their right to enter is the first step toward amending our naturalization laws to permit those of the yellow race to become citizens. Besides we are not sure that the census of 1890 will be adopted. The Senate Committee last week voted for the 1910 census and this would admit six times as many. If in the future the percentage plan of regulating immigration should be repealed or extended to a later census, the United States would then have a more difficult problem to solve. America has no room for those who can not become citizens, who can not and will not adopt our institutions and ideals. We have no place for those whose loyalty and allegiance is to another. Uncle Sam has a right to limit his household, both in numbers and in nationality.

ALIEN SEAMEN.

Several thousand aliens enter the United States unlawfully under the provisions of the seamen's act. By the terms of the proposed immigration bill it is the duty of the owner or master of the vessel upon arrival to hold on board, under penalty, all alien seamen until there may be a personal physical examination by the medical inspectors. If found to be admissible, each seamen is given a landing card for his temporary stay in the United States. If he stays beyond the expiration of the time stamped on the landing card, he is subject to arrest and deportation.

TWO PER CENT INSTEAD OF THREE PER CENT.

The present law calls for a 3 per cent quota. The proposed bill reduces the number to 2 per cent on 1890 census, or from 357,803 to 170,000. There are many reasons for this reduction, chief of which is the fact that we need no additional labor. There is to-day a large number of unemployed. This statement is based on reports received by the Department of Labor from their representatives stationed in every State in the Union.

Mills are closing and the workers are unable to find employment elsewhere. Many railroad and other shops and factories are being operated on part time a few days a week. From Massachusetts, for example, there comes the report that there is a slackening of industry and unemployment is on the increase. Nearly all of the textile mills are operated on part time and with reduced forces. There is not sufficient employment in other lines to absorb this surplus.

In Ohio there are a great many without work. In Pennsylvania there is a surplus in all classes of skilled mechanics as well as common labor. In the Philadelphia district a large number of married women have been seeking employment because their husbands are out of work. In the West the farm-labor supply is more than sufficient to meet the demands.

The United States has passed the point of assimilation. Of the 14,000,000 of foreign born residing here less than half are American citizens. The naturalization process averages 10 years. One and one-half million of our foreign population can not speak English. Alien colonies have sprung up in the large cities, where the circulation of foreign press papers runs into 6,000,000. Seventy-five per cent of those who come from other countries to the United States live in large cities. The population in many cases is one-third foreign born. In the States of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania 35.4 per cent of the male population 21 years of age and over is foreign born; in the New England States 38.2 per cent; in Massachusetts, 41.9 per cent; Boston, 46.3 per cent; and in New York City, 53.4 per cent. These large alien colonies still hold to their foreign ideas and institutions. Our Nation is dotted with unassimilated groups—"alien islands" they may be called. It is thus necessary to reduce immigration.

Without restriction we would have a veritable migration of people from Europe. We have no work for them, no homes for their families, and no schools for their children. Conditions here are already crowded.

Mr. Nathan Grosshandler, of Youngstown, Ohio, was a witness before our committee. He is a publisher of several papers, two of which are in the foreign-language list. Last summer he visited Europe to study immigration. He himself had come to this country as an immigrant.

Part of Mr. Grosshandler's testimony was as follows:

I was in Bulgaria, Croatia, Serbia, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Austria, Poland, France, London, and God knows I was traveling so fast and working so hard that often after every two hours of travel I was in a different country. I was primarily interested, Mr. Chairman, in the countries that we have drawn labor from—Austria, Hungary, Italy, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Yugoslavia, and Rumania. * * *. Then, of course, I may make it broader, so it will give you a conception and give you the psychology of the masses that prevail in Europe to-day. I might just as well say to you honestly, you ask a hundred men if they want to come to America and you get a response ninety-nine times out of a hundred that they want to come to America. Those are the conditions. When you meet these conditions, Mr. Chairman, you have no more questions to ask, because everybody wants to come to America.

I quote also from Mr. Lothrop Stoddard, of Brookline, Mass.:

As I say, the number of people who desire to come to America is practically limitless. They must be numbered, taking Europe and the Near East together, literally by the tens of millions, and that pressure will increase, in my opinion, in the next 10 years. In other words, we have not a temporary condition but we have a permanent condition that is facing us in regard to the pressure of immigration, a waxing rather than a waning factor. And whatever dikes we set up against that flood, the pressure will be so great that, in my opinion, only legislation of a drastically restrictive nature, with no loopholes, will suffice to keep out the floods of people, largely of an undesirable character, and every loophole, in my opinion, must be carefully plugged, because it is a law of hydrodynamics that if you have a dike subjected to a great pressure the slightest crack in the dike will be sufficient to let the flood through.

Mr. Stoddard testified that he visited England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Turkey, Syria, Palestine, Transjordania, Egypt, and Italy, and that he made the same inquiries of the nationals of every nation that he visited.

Our duty lies first with the foreign born who are here. It begins rather than ends with their admission. Close to 7,000,000 are not American citizens. The facilities of an education should be extended to them. Give them a chance to study. Open our night schools to the men. Send trained teachers into the homes for the women, for the wife and mother can not always leave her household duties to attend the evening schools. Permit them to learn our language, our history, and the ideals of this Nation, the duties and benefits of citizenship. It means the building of a bigger and a better America.

Further restriction of immigration is necessary because of the increase in the population of those who are here. The Bureau of the Census estimated that in 50 years hence we will be a Nation of 183,000,000, and in 100 years we will be one of 254,000,000 of people. There is no new land in the world to which our people, because of overpopulation, can migrate.

THE CENSUS OF 1890.

The present quota law is based on the census of 1910. The bill changes this to 1890, resulting in a reduction of the number of quota immigrants who may come from the south and east of Europe. A cry of discrimination has been raised because of this change. The quota of a country should not be determined by the number of foreign born who may happen to be here at a particular time, but should be based on the entire racial composition or cross section of our population. Each country should be entitled to a quota on the basis of the national stock of that country in the United States as it bears to our total population. This is clearly explained in an article appearing in the New York Times, March 1, 1924, written by Mr. F. H. Kinnicutt, of that city, a student and an authority on immigration problems, part of which is as follows:

I should like to point out that a careful study of the census figures shows that the discrimination is not in the proposed quotas, but in the existing quotas. The present law bases the quotas on the enumeration in the census of 1910 of the foreign born of each European country then alive in the United States, and takes no account of the racial elements by stocks in the country to-day. According to that law it is only the number of actual immigrants from each quota country here in 1910 which determines the quotas. No credit is given to any country by reason of the fact that the number of persons derived by descent from that country is greatly in excess of those who actually immigrated thence in the present generation. For instance, under the law of 1890 the joint quota for Great Britain and Ireland is 77,342. If it were apportioned according to the census figures of 1910 between England, Scotland, and Ireland, respectively, the quota of England and that of Scotland would be less than the quota of Russia, Poland, or Italy. In fact, during the last fiscal year in which the British and Irish quotas were exhausted before the end of the year fewer immigrants were allowed to enter the United States from England, fewer from Scotland, and fewer from Ireland than were permitted to enter from either Russia, Poland, or Italy. This result is certainly extraordinary. It amounts to a clear discrimination against the very peoples who principally settled the American Colonies and founded our civilization, and whose descendants constitute at least 50 per cent of our present white population, in favor of peoples who have only come in any numbers to the United States within the last 30 years.

Perhaps the greatest need in immigration legislation to-day, and certainly one of the prime considerations in the minds of Members of Congress in framing the pending bill, is the maintenance of at least that degree of racial homogeneity which the American people possess to-day. Judged by this principle, it is the present law—not the pending bill—which is open to objection. The former gives 44.6 per cent of our total quota immigration to the countries of Southern and Eastern Europe, including Asiatic Turkey and Palestine—an amount vastly in excess of what they could claim on any theory of proportional representation by races, with reference to the racial elements in our present population.

This will appear from an examination of the official figures of the 1920 census, which show that the total number of people of foreign stock in the United States in that year derived from the countries of southern and eastern Europe (including Asiatic Turkey and Palestine) is approximately 12,266,115, or 11.7 per cent of the total population of the United States in 1920. The above figure is reached by adding to the number of the foreign born from those countries the number of native born both of whose parents were born in those countries and one-half of the native born one of whose parents was born in those countries. Under the provisions of the Johnson-Lodge bill, 15.3 per cent of the total quota immigration would be apportioned to these same regions in southern and eastern Europe and near Asia. Obviously, this would be a liberal allowance, but in addition thereto the "newer immigration" would get the lion's share of the exemptions for near relatives of United States citizens, who, under the new bill, are exempted from quota restrictions. It is clear that the newer immigration, represented by the great wave from southern and eastern Europe since 1900, must have many more of these near relatives than the representatives of the older immigration now alive in this country, most of whom came over before 1900. It may incidentally be noted that the total number of foreign born from southern and eastern Europe alive in the United States to-day is only 6,422,727.

The figures given above show indisputably that the charge of unfairness and discrimination, as applied to the pending bill, which bases the quotas on the census of 1890 is entirely unfounded. That bill, in fact, merely preserves the racial status quo in the United States with respect to immigration more nearly than can be done by taking any other census as the basis. In other words, the proposed legislation, far from being aimed at any particular race, is based on broad considerations of public policy and the welfare of the country as a whole.

We should not disregard the descendants of those immigrants who settled our country, who fought bloody battles with the Indians, who won independence, formulated our Constitution, and developed this country across the Alleghenies and the Rockies to the Pacific coast. I refer to the Scotch, the Irish, the Welsh, the English, the Dutch, the Germans, and the French. Immigration from those countries began with our Colonies and continued ever since, but decreased in large numbers prior to 1910. The use of that census discriminates against their nationals. The foreign born from Ireland decreased over 500,000 in number between 1890 and 1910, and the foreign born from Germany decreased 474,000 in a like period of time. The coming in large numbers of the new immigration checked the flow of the old. The 1890 census is the one that gives to the nationals of all countries the fairest proportion of immigration based on the racial stock of those already here. In addition I call attention to the fact that Italy as a nation regulates her emigration. She permits her men to come here while prohibiting the wives and families. The provisions in the bill admitting fireside relatives of American citizens outside of the quota will reunite more families coming from southern and eastern Europe than the rest of quota countries.

This country clearly has a right to regulate immigration, to say who may come and who are not desirable. Certain foreign countries have deliberately given passports to such of their nationals as they wish to get rid of, and we have been taking them as immigrants. Experience has taught us that it is impossible to colonize our farm land.

Canada has attempted this, with the result that while 88,000 were encouraged to immigrate to that country last year and settle on the farms, yet in the same period 117,000 left Canada for the United States. The farmers in America do not need additional farm labor so much as they do a price for their products commensurate with the price they must pay for the articles they purchase. There is a surplus of farm products in the United States to-day. A large influx of immigrants to work on the farms might cut the cost, but it would not increase the price received and therefore would not benefit the farmers, besides such a proposition would be used as a subterfuge, as the immigrant nine times out of ten would move from the farm into the city. To compel him to remain on the farm under threat of deportation would constitute a form of peonage and we have no room in America for that.

We should not permit foreign Governments and their representatives in this country to dictate to us in the matter of voting for a good, selective, restrictive, and humane immigration bill. In the words of our President—

American institutions rest solely on good citizenship. They were created by people who had a background of self-government. New arrivals should be limited to our ability to absorb them into the ranks of good citizenship. America must be kept American.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have reproduced in the RECORD a series of resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Auburn, Nebr.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not catch the request of the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. It is so very odd I feared it might meet objection. It is a series of resolutions by a chamber of commerce actually in favor of the adjusted compensation bill. It is the only one of its kind in the world, and I wanted it to appear in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman's appeal touches my heart, and I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, under permission of the House I insert herewith as a part of my remarks the following resolutions:

OFFICE OF CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Auburn, Nebr., February 20, 1924.

Resolution.

Whereas adjusted compensation is an obligation owing from the United States Government to the former soldiers of the World War, long past due and unpaid; and

Whereas it is our judgment that adjusted compensation can be paid and Federal taxes at the same time be reduced; and

Whereas methods used by the forces opposing the enactment of the adjusted compensation bill are in our opinion unjustified, unfair, and un-American: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of Auburn, Nebr., hereby heartily indorses and urges the Members of Congress and Senators from the State of Nebraska to exert every effort to bring about the immediate passage of the American Legion fourfold adjusted compensation bill; and be it further

Resolved, That said Chamber of Commerce condemns tactics of selfish interest in seeking by forced propaganda and unfair methods of coercion to bring about the defeat of the adjusted compensation bill.

UNITED STATES HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, before this debate becomes partisan I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the tendency of the time seems to be to cast slurs upon those in public life. Criticism is passing to and fro, but I believe in giving credit to those to whom credit is due. It is natural for me to repeat it, because, as I have said several times, and my Republican friends know it, I am a partisan Democrat. However, when anyone is entitled to credit, I feel they should have that credit. I read a few days ago a very short statement written by one of the best newspaper writers in my State, if not in the South, a young man who served in the war, in which he congratulated the Congress and the Government upon the present way our hospitals are being conducted. In order that those who are now in charge of the Veterans' Bureau may know that at least one ex-service man appreciates what has been done for him, without taking up any further time, I ask unanimous consent that I may include this short article as an appendix to my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The newspaper article referred to is as follows:

NEWSPAPER MAN OUT OF HOSPITAL—FRANK L. HUFFAKER, OF TAMPA, PRAISES UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU.

[From the Jacksonville Times-Union, February 20, 1924.]

Fully recovered from a physical breakdown resulting from spinal injury received while serving in the American Tank Corps in France, Frank L. Huffaker, of Tampa, for years one of Florida's best known newspaper men, reached Jacksonville Monday from Gulfport, Miss., where he has been undergoing treatment at one of the numerous veterans' hospitals of the Nation. He spoke with characteristic interest of his experiences, and particularly of the determined and increasingly effective efforts being made for rehabilitation of disabled veterans by the United States Veterans' Bureau and medical men cooperating with that organization.

"Were I to write the story of these hospitals, large and small," said Mr. Huffaker, "I'd do so under the heading, 'Cities of hope-deadened men.' This for the reason that thousands of these nerve-tied and otherwise disabled fellows, in spite of their efforts to express their ideals and earn livelihoods without Government support are, like too-tightly reined horses, thrown backward to find not treatment alone but food and beds as well in the Government hospitals, the efficiency of which is steadily growing. But for these places of refuge thousands of veterans, including muchly decorated men, would be better off had they been left on Flanders fields. Chief aids of the personnel of all these hospitals are the 'little mothers' of the 'greatest mother in the world,' the American Red Cross Society, and the equally capable and willing 'little fathers' of the Knights of Columbus. I only wish the American people could realize the noble and effective work representatives of these organizations are doing.

"The experiences of these men, a majority of whom suffer stoically and with an ever-ready display of good humor, was never so thoroughly typified to me as during memorial services held in honor of Woodrow Wilson in the Red Cross recreation hall at the Gulfport Hospital. I visualized the herculean efforts of that great soul to cast aside the shackles of a broken body in a last effort to thrust forth a world ideal, and then I realized that my fellow patients and therefore his minions in lesser degree were passing through the same throes because of their efforts to 'make the world safe for democracy.'"

EX-ATTORNEY GENERAL GREGORY.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a statement which was handed out at the White House some time ago, including a letter from ex-Attorney General Gregory to the President, and the President's comment thereon. My warrant for asking this is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] some week or 10 days ago made some remarks in the House that seem to reflect on ex-Attorney General Gregory, and I think it is fair that this statement which was handed out at the White House be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I beg to submit the following:

On February 1, 1924, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] addressed the House and discussed the Teapot Dome and Doheny oil leases on the naval oil reserves. In the course of his remarks the following transpired:

Mr. FOSTER. When it is rumored that the President of the United States consults a Democratic member of the Supreme Court of the United States, and who recommends to him another Democrat from your State—a former Attorney General—and it then develops that such former Attorney General was an attorney for the Doheny interests, then President Coolidge should not appoint former Attorney General Gregory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. The Democrats would have picked some attorney wholly disconnected with oil leases.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have just read a statement from the White House that the President is not going to appoint him. [Applause.]

In justice to Hon. T. W. Gregory, former Attorney General of the United States, to whom reference was made by the two gentlemen from Ohio, it is only fair that the RECORD should contain the letter from Mr. Gregory to the President on the subject, and the President's comment thereon, as contained in a statement issued at the White House on February 2, 1924. They are as follows:

FEBRUARY 2, 1924.

Mr. President, on last Tuesday night, when I was in Austin, Tex., you stated to me over the long-distance telephone that you wished to employ me in the investigation of the leases of the naval oil reserves. You will recall that after expressing my appreciation I stated that I was not in close touch with the developments in the matter; that nothing occurred to me that would prevent me from serving, but that I would be in Washington Saturday afternoon—to-day—and would then confer with you on the subject. I had no idea that in saying this I was accepting an appointment or that you so understood it. I assumed that that would be decided when we conferred, and that in the meantime I would have an opportunity to go through my books and correspondence to see whether in the course of my private practice I had ever had any employments which might stand in the way. It was also my desire, before definitely committing myself, to confer with Senator WALSH of Montana, who has conducted the investigation of the Senate committee. I was very much surprised to read in the Texas newspapers the next morning that I had been appointed, but did not feel at liberty to make any public statement, and consistently declined to do so until I had seen you.

Of course, if it had been in my mind at the time of our telephone conversation that I had been employed by Mr. Doheny, directly or indirectly, or at any time, near or remote, that would have ended the matter at once, because I would have realized that however free from criticism such employment might have been, it would have disqualified me from acting as your counsel on the present occasion. I have no recollection of having seen or communicated with Mr. Doheny in my life, and at that time did not recall ever having had any business connection with him or with any company controlled by him.

I returned to Washington as quickly as possible, for the purpose of keeping my engagement with you, and arrived here this afternoon.

Yesterday while on the train my attention was called to a statement made the day before to the Senate Public Lands Committee by E. L. Doheny, to the effect that his company and several others employed me "to represent them before the President in regard to getting permits to drill oil wells in Mexico," and that "the Island Oil Co. billed us for $2,000 as our share of the fee that they paid Judge Gregory for this particular work."

I would have been at a loss to know what he was referring to except for his mention of the Island Oil Co. I remembered perfectly my employment by that company, although some of the details had passed out of my mind. I have now refreshed my recollection by examining data in my office. The facts are as follows:

In the fall of 1919 the firm with which I was then associated had among its regular clients the Island Oil & Transport Co., which is evidently the Island Oil Co. referred to. It was a small independent company without any connection whatever, so far as I have ever known, with either Mr. Sinclair or Mr. Doheny.

The Island Co. asked me to act for it in the concerted effort then being made by American oil companies to get the State Department to take action to prevent the threatened confiscation of their properties in Mexico, the Carranza government having refused to grant them permits to drill on their own property unless they accepted the provision of the new constitution vesting title to oil and other minerals in the Government.

The purpose was to secure some character of diplomatic action by the United States Government which it was hoped would place American oil companies on the same footing as those of Great Britain, the latter having been allowed to continue development. The facts in regard to all the interested companies were about the same, the law as to all was the same, and there was general cooperation among them in attempting to obtain relief.

I gave the matter attention for some months, and the Mexican authorities finally extended to the American companies the privilege enjoyed by those of Great Britain.

This result was brought about in December, 1919, or January, 1920, and my employment in the matter ended then and there. I rendered a bill to the Island Co. for $15,000, which it paid.

At some stage of the transaction the Island Co. stated that the work I did redounded to the benefit of other companies besides itself, and that, it being a small company, it would try to induce several of the others similarly situated to make contributions to the fee charged. I understood that some of them did so. The Huasteca Petroleum Co., which was controlled by Mr. Doheny, was one of these, and no doubt paid the Island Co. the $2,000 referred to by Mr. Doheny.

This phase of the matter had entirely passed out of my mind. But even at the time I never thought of my employment as an employment by Mr. Doheny or his company, and he evidently did not, as his testimony before the Senate committee, as reported in the press, is to the effect that he knew nothing about my connection with the transaction until within the last few days.

I have never felt that the transaction involved the slightest necessity for apologies, nor even for explanation, but for the unusual conditions which have arisen.

It is obvious, nevertheless, that the fact that one of Mr. Doheny's companies bore a part, however indirect and however small, of the expense of my employment by the Island Co. makes it inappropriate for me to act as your counsel in this matter.

Respectfully yours,

T. W. GREGORY.

To the PRESIDENT.

STATEMENT FROM THE WHITE HOUSE FEBRUARY 2, 1924.

The attached letter was made public at the White House to-day, accompanied by the following statement:

FEBRUARY 2, 1924.

The statement in the letter of Mr. Attorney Gregory to me regarding the conversation between him and me over the telephone and the inferences to be drawn from it are correct.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

It will be noted from the correspondence set out above that Mr. Gregory, in the long-distance conversation referred to, was not employed by the President to conduct the prosecutions in connection with the leases on the naval oil reserves, and that it was not understood by the President that Mr. Gregory had agreed to accept such employment conditionally, but that the only agreement arrived at was that the President and Mr. Gregory should confer upon the arrival of Mr. Gregory in Washington on February 2. On February 1, at the very moment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] was making his address, and at the very moment when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was making the statement that he had just read a statement from the White House that the President was not going to appoint Mr. Gregory, the ex-Attorney General was on the train en route to Washington, approximately a day's journey from the Capital.

The statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] coming as it does from the Republican floor leader in the House of Representatives, and quoting a statement from the White House, must be deemed as authoritative. Its significance, however, lies in the fact that the White House gave out a statement to the effect that the President was not going to appoint General Gregory without consulting him, and without waiting for the conference which had been agreed upon between them. It seemed subject to the inference that the haste of the White House had been the cause of doing an injustice to Mr. Gregory, in thus terminating the matter without giving him an opportunity on his own accord to decline the employment, which he did upon arrival in Washington, at his conference with the President.

Mr. Gregory is a distinguished citizen of Texas, and for many years has occupied and now occupies an enviable place at the bar of that State. He served as Attorney General of the United States and his administration of that high office was characterized by great ability and by unflinching fidelity to the public interest. Both in public and in private his conduct in the practice of law has always been in accord with the highest and purest standards of professional honor and ethics. Though he declined employment in the naval oil reserve lease cases, through a fine sense of propriety, it may be said that had he accepted employment the Government would have had an able, fearless, honorable, and thoroughly ethical representative of its interests, capable of meeting any adversary in any forum.

RECKLESS DRIVING OF AUTOMOBILES.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the gentleman having this opportunity, but I shall object to anything further.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I would not have brought this up, but it is a matter of life and death. There are too many people killed around here by automobiles. I want to cite this situation to the House. This morning a poor woman in the employ of this House was, about 5 o'clock, going to her work. She got off the street car at the main door and a Cadillac machine, operated by two men, came by at 50 miles an hour and hit her. It dragged her for a block and a half, left her in a pool of blood on First Street, with one broken leg and one broken arm, with probably death hanging over her, and got away. I have introduced a resolution to offer $500 reward for the arrest and conviction of the drivers of the car, which I hope in due time will come before the House. I call the attention of the House to the absolute and almost total indifference to human life among the automobile people around this town.

I think that this poor woman is entitled to just as much protection as the Speaker would be, and I hope the House will take advantage of this opportunity to offer this small reward so as to catch them. I think I know how to get detectives after them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, believing this to be an important subject of discussion, I make the point that there is no quorum present. I think the point should be made at this time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that the best way to protect human life in the future is for the District of Columbia to adopt some title system for automobiles, so that they can not be transferred promiscuously from one person to another without some record being made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. KOPP, be excused for the day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. KOPP, be excused for the day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Berger	Dominick	Kent	Rouse
Britten	Dupré	Kopp	Stalker
Burton	Edmonds	McFadden	Strong, Pa.
Carew	Fredericks	MacLafferty	Sullivan
Carter	Free	Martin	Taylor, Colo.
Cole, Ohio	Funk	Miller, Ill.	Thomas, Ky.
Corning	Geran	Morin	Tydings
Cramton	Gifford	Nolan	Vare
Cullen	Hayden	Porter	Vinson, Ga.
Curry	Hull, William E.	Reed, W. Va.	Wilson, La.
Dempsey	Kahn	Romjue	Winslow

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eighty-seven Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled House joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution to provide an appropriation for the prosecution of suits to cancel certain leases, and for other purposes.

REVENUE ACT OF 1924.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6715) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6715) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, during the discussion that occurred last evening on the amendment I offered with reference to the gift tax it became fairly apparent, as I thought, that the House was not disposed to agree to the rates I presented in that amendment, but it also seemed to me that the Members of the House were disposed to agree to similar rates with similar intentions to those imposed upon inheritances. I, therefore, Mr. Chairman, withdraw the amendment which I offered last evening and will offer an amendment in place of it.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, I take it, asks unanimous consent.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman has the right to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. TILSON. I have no objection to the gentleman withdrawing it by unanimous consent, but he has not the right to withdraw without the consent of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman has not the right to withdraw it without the consent of the committee, but the gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the gentleman from Iowa, having submitted the well-considered and thought-out plan that he submitted last evening, now proposes to withdraw it and offer another?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MILLS. Do I understand that he now desires to withdraw that and offer a substitute?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman from New York would spare his sarcasm, I would say, "Yes."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 150, after line 24, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 319. On and after January 1, 1924, a tax equal to the sum of the following is hereby imposed upon the transfer of property by gift, whether made directly or indirectly, by every person, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States:

"One per cent of the amount of gifts not in excess of $50,000;

"Two per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $50,000 and do not exceed $100,000;

"Three per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $100,000 and do not exceed $150,000;

"Four per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $150,000 and do not exceed $250,000;

"Six per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $250,000 and do not exceed $450,000;

"Nine per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $450,000 and do not exceed $750,000;

"Twelve per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $750,000 and do not exceed $1,000,000;

"Fifteen per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $1,000,000 and do not exceed $1,500,000;

"Eighteen per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $1,500,000 and do not exceed $2,000,000;

"Twenty-one per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $2,000,000 and do not exceed $3,000,000;

"Twenty-four per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $3,000,000 and do not exceed $4,000,000;

"Twenty-seven per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $4,000,000, and do not exceed $5,000,000.

"Thirty per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $5,000,000 and do not exceed $8,000,000.

"Thirty-five per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $8,000,000 and do not exceed $10,000,000.

"Forty per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $10,000,000.

"SEC. 320. The amount of the gifts subject to the tax imposed by section 319, in the case of residents, shall be the sum of all the gifts made by such resident during the calendar year, and in the case of nonresidents the sum of all gifts so made of property situated within the United States. If the gift is made in property, the fair market value thereof at the date of the gift shall be considered the amount of the gift subject to the tax,

"Where property is sold or exchanged for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, then the amount by which the fair market value of the property exceeded the consideration received shall, for the purpose of the tax imposed by section 319, be deemed a gift and shall be included in computing the amount of gifts made during the calendar year.

"SEC. 321. For the purpose of this tax the amount of the gift subject to the tax imposed by section 319 shall be determined—

"(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the total amount of such gifts—

"(1) An exemption of $50,000;

"(2) The amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year to or for any donee or purpose specified in paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) of section 303, or to the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act; ,

"(3) Gifts the aggregate amount of which to any one person does not exceed $500.

"(b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the total amount of such gifts—

"(1) The amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year to or for any donee or purpose specified in paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) of section 303, or to the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act;

"(2) Gifts the aggregate amount of which to any one person does not exceed $500.

"SEC. 322. In case a tax has been imposed under section 319 upon any gift, and thereafter upon the death of the donor the amount thereof is required by any provision of this title to be included in the gross estate of the decedent then there shall be credited against and applied in reduction of the estate tax, which would otherwise be chargeable against the estate of the decedent under the provisions of section 301, an amount equal to the tax paid with respect to such gift; and in the event the donor has in any year paid the tax imposed by section 319 with respect to a gift or gifts which upon the death of the donor must be included in his gross estate and a gift or gifts not required to be so included, then the amount of the tax which shall be deemed to have been paid with respect to the gift or gifts required to be so included shall be that proportion of the entire tax paid on account of all such gifts which the amount of the gift or gifts required to be so included bears or bear to the total amount of gifts in that year.

"SEC. 323. Any person who within the year 1924 or any calendar year thereafter makes any gift or gifts of an aggregate value in excess of $10,000 shall, on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of the calendar year, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, listing and setting forth therein all gifts and contributions by him made during such calendar year, and the fair market value thereof when made, and also all sales and exchanges of property owned by him made within such year for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, stating therein the fair market value of the property so sold or exchanged and that of the consideration received by him, both as of the date of such sale or exchange.

"SEC. 324. The tax imposed by section 319 shall be paid by the donor on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of the calendar year, and shall be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject, in so far as applicable, to the same provisions of law as the tax imposed by section 301."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is identical with the one which I offered last evening with the exception of a change in the rates and another change which I shall mention. The rates are made the same as in the inheritance tax, with an exemption of $50,000 to start with and then graded up by the same progression as in the tax upon inheritances. I have also made one further change, that of exempting entirely gifts to a single person to the extent of $500, made during the year, which Members of course understand would exempt such persons, no matter how many there were of these different persons. I have included this exemption for the purpose of avoiding any objection on the ground that the tax otherwise might apply to small charities and bonuses given by certain business concerns, or anything of that kind, although the exemption of $50,000 would be likely to be sufficient for that purpose.

Having made this statement, Mr. Chairman, I will now listen to the "carefully considered" objections of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, it is, of course, impossible to make carefully considered objections to a measure which is submitted to you one minute before, and I do not propose to do so. But I want to congratulate the nominal chairman of the Ways and Means Committee on having obtained the consent of the acting chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and leader of this House to pass this amendment.

On yesterday the gentleman from Iowa introduced one of his pet measures, the so-called gift tax, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the real leader in the matter of revenue legislation [applause], got up and informed the gentleman from Iowa that the form in which he submitted the amendment was unsatisfactory to him. Whereupon the gentleman from Iowa consulted the gentleman from Texas; the gentleman from Texas then rewrote the amendment for him [applause], and now having obtained the Garner stamp of approval, it is brought to the House this morning.

I want to say to my friend from Texas that I think he has much improved the amendment. As offered by the gentleman from Iowa yesterday this ridiculous situation might occur: A man might give his son $10,000 to set him up in business the first of the year, and thereupon—throughout the year, if you please—if he gave two pencils to his little daughter with which to go to school he would have to make a note of it and pay a tax; if he took his wife to the theater at any time during that year he would have to note that he paid $2 for the theater ticket and paid the tax, and every tip given to a bell boy or waiter would have to be carefully noted and be subject to the tax.

Of course, acting under the guidance and suggestions of the distinguished gentleman from Texas—who can improvise a tax law on the floor of this House, and he has done so in the last week [laughter and applause]—the matter is in fair shape.

I want to point out to the gentlemen of this House that that is exactly what we are doing. If the gentleman from Texas were the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee he would not introduce a gift tax or an inheritance tax without holding hearings, considering the matter, and submitting a report to this House; but as we are doing business to-day the gentleman from Texas has all the power, apparently, of the leader of a majority party without recognizing any of its responsibilities. [Laughter.] And, therefore, he has undertaken to write a revenue bill on the floor of this House. He has done so. That is the bill we are going to be called upon to vote on this week—not the bill reported by the committee, because this does not vaguely resemble the bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee, but is a bill written on the floor of this House by improvisation. You have heard of great musicians sitting down at a piano and improvising a tune. The gentleman from Texas sits at that table and improvises a revenue law and the House is asked to adopt it.

Why, gentlemen, in the future, if this practice is to be followed, this is what I would suggest; That the Ways and Means Committee report a bill with only the title, and that thereupon each Member of the House shall write on his cuff what he deems to be a wise measure of taxation; that the cuffs shall be handed to the gentleman from Texas and with his O. K. they shall be handed in at the desk and then voted on cuff by cuff. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, there are some obvious objections to this method of procedure——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In view of the action of the recent Democratic caucus, might not a collar be more suitable? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MILLS. I accept the suggestion. Now, as I say, there are some very obvious objections to this method of procedure, and before the gentleman from Texas gets through——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for such time as he desires. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for such time as he may require.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is out of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that request and ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 10 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall require more than two minutes, and I apologize to the House for taking up so much of its time; but I can not resist making this observation to my friend from Texas: That his method of procedure, while in some ways admirable and really a tribute to his genius, is bound, before he gets through, to involve him in very serious difficulty; and I have never seen a man more earnestly trying to get out of the pit he has dug for himself than the gentleman from Texas. He has created a great big deficit, and he knows that when he comes to the automobile taxes, whether he admits it or not, he is going to create a greater deficit. He has managed, by abandoning the fundamental principle of Democracy, namely, the rights of the States to be independent of the Federal Government and to have revenue which properly belongs to them, by abandoning that principle yesterday and depriving the States of one of their great sources of revenue he managed to gather in some $20,000,000. That helps a little, but only very little. Before the morning is out the gentleman is going to suggest a tax, I think, on cigarettes. I want to say to my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that he is not even going to get $20,000,000 more. He is not going to get anything more from that suggestion.

I want to make this further prophecy now. When the gentleman from Texas gets through framing this Garner bill, improvised on the floor of the House, his $300,000,000 deficit will be increased to $325,000,000. Not only that, but he will have framed a bill for which your party will have to assume entire responsibility. [Applause.]

I do not know how my colleagues on the Republican side feel, but I want to say here and now that as the bill is written I can not support it, and will not support it [applause]; and it will be up to my friend from Texas to explain to the country how, in spite of his brilliant improvisation, he has passed through the House of Representatives a measure which will create a deficit of $325,000,000, at least, in the Treasury, and which may for that reason never become law. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to congratulate my friend from New York on the magnificent argument he has made against this amendment. If he had any reasons to show why it ought not to be adopted, and I suppose he has because he will vote against this amendment, he did not present them. Instead of that he indulged in a flight of his imagination with reference to what had been going on between myself and the gentleman who is the leader upon the other side so far as this bill is concerned. The gentleman's imagination is such that it is not as usefully employed on the floor of this House as it would be if he were writing some novel or romance. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman is using his energies in the wrong direction. I offered this amendment last night and I offered it after careful consideration, but the Members of the House did not seem disposed to accept the rates I had in it at that time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman let me ask one question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Just a moment, and then I will gladly yield to my friend from Virginia. If this amendment either as presented last night or as presented now was a useful and proper amendment, then the gentleman from New York ought to be using his powers to support it, if it is a good amendment. If it is not a good amendment, he ought to be able to give us some reason why it should not be adopted. The gentleman from New York with all his brilliancy, and he has brilliancy, has been found in this House here on every occasion, when we sought to introduce anything that would prevent evasion of a tax and its payment on a basis of fairness, equality, and justice, opposing those amendments or at least voting against them. [Applause.]

Just one word more and then I will yield to the gentleman. The gentleman talks about leadership. Who has been assuming leadership on this side? Why, the gentleman from New York, in the committee and elsewhere, has been usurping the powers of the chairman of the committee or those that ought to belong to the chairman of the committee. [Applause.] When I state that, I state only something that has been well known to everybody. In fact, he has gone further. He has been the whole committee.

Mr. WEFALD. The country knows it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the country does not know it, it is time they did know it.

Mr. WEFALD. The country knows it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, gentlemen can take their choice. So far as I am concerned, I do not care whether a matter is approved by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] or whether it is approved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS]. I will support it if it tends to prevent evasion under this law, and I will use my best endeavors to put it in the bill. [Applause.] Ever since I was connected with revenue matters, ever since I have been on the Ways and Means Committee, I have been endeavoring to get a gift tax inserted in the law. I proposed it at the first session when I was a member of that committee some 10 years ago. Ever since that time I have been laboring to get it inserted in the law, because I knew just exactly what would happen, namely, that these big estates would be gradually split up into different parts, thereby defeating both the income tax and the inheritance tax, and that is the reason our revenues are so rapidly decreasing from the big estates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may have five minutes more in order that I may ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that there was before the Ways and Means Committee a bill which included a tax upon estates and also a tax upon gifts, the Ramseyer bill, and whether or not those matters were the subject of more or less discussion in the committee?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; they were not subjects of discussion in the committee; but I will say that they were the subject of discussion at a meeting which the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] attended in my own office right off of this room.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from New York has evidently recognized the very general feeling throughout the country in opposition to the accumulation of great wealth and the feeling in the country that it ought to be more generally distributed, and is it not true that the gentleman seems to feel that that objection can be removed by dividing up these great bodies of wealth among the members of the family and for the purpose of escaping taxation? [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is entirely right.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just one word more. As I stated yesterday, it is perfectly idle to increase the rates on the great incomes and it is perfectly idle to increase the rates on these big bequests if you do nothing in the way of checking the evasions that are continually going on. The amendment which I have offered is simply a corollary to the inheritance tax and goes necessarily with it. I want to say frankly that this amendment will not produce any considerable amount of revenue.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What are the exemptions, if my friend will tell us, please—up to what amount?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Fifty thousand dollars each year is exempted and then $500 gifts to any number of single individuals.

Mr. HUDSPETH. There was some confusion in our minds about that, and that is the reason I asked the gentleman the question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Fifty thousand dollars is exempted to start with.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Why is the amount put at $500?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Five hundred dollars to any one individual in the course of a year, no matter how many separate individuals it may be given to.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. If I am supporting a dependent relative and paying more than $500 a year, perhaps $1,000 a year, do I pay on that amount spent for support?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Such payments are not excepted, but you would have an exemption of $50,000 to start with, but if you paid more than a total of $50,000, you would be taxed.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. YATES. Have you made any attempt to estimate the amount of revenue that would be received by the gift tax?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have just stated that I do not think that this amendment as a direct tax would produce any considerable amount of revenue. I doubt whether it will produce more than a million dollars. Its main purpose is not to produce a revenue, but is to stop evasion on the part of men of great wealth who are able to give away large sums of money. Indirectly, I think it will bring us a large item into the Treasury.

Mr. FREAR. And catch it in an inheritance tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; or income tax.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment in line 5 by striking out the figure "1" and inserting the figure "2."

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment read as it would read if amended?

Mr. MILLS. Let me say to the gentleman that that is of no importance.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee should feel that I have in any way attempted to assume the responsibilities of leadership. Nothing could be further from my thoughts. I have noted, however, on the Democratic side the affirmative, aggressive, partisan, Democratic character of the leadership offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. Personally, as a partisan, I commend the gentleman from Texas for the loyalty with which he is supporting his party. I want to say that I oppose the partisanship of my friend from Texas with what I consider to be a 100 per cent brand of Republicanism. [Applause.]

I have supported this bill with all the energy and enthusiasm and ability that I have because I believe in it, and if I have erred on the side of being too earnest about it I have no apologies to make. A man's duty on the floor of this House is to present his views, what he believes to be the views of his constituents, to the best of his ability, and when he does that I deny that he is subject to the criticism of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee or anyone else in this House. [Applause.]

Now, the gentleman wants to know why I treat with levity the proposition which is now before the House. It is because, gentlemen, it is impossible to treat it in any other way. You can not treat it seriously because it accomplishes no serious purpose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I can not yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How many times does the gentleman want to speak on this subject?

Mr. MILLS. I decline to yield. The gentleman wants to know why I oppose this amendment. Because it is wholly ineffective. The gentleman says he wants to prevent the splitting up of large estates to avoid an inheritance tax, and that he has submitted a plan that will do it. It is preposterous. A man could give away $49,000 to his son for 10 years and yet not pay one nickel of tax. He can give his son $100,000 for 10 years, and give him a million dollars, and only pay $5,000. The whole thing is a joke. It is a jest. I may disagree with some of the gentlemen here, and I know that I do on various tax measures.

But everyone will agree that the one kind of legislation which is bad and indefensible is legislation that kids the people into believing that you are accomplishing something when there is not the slightest chance of accomplishing anything. You can drive a horse and wagon through this amendment every year and every day in the year in so far as it purports to help the enforcement of the inheritance tax is concerned, and that is the reason it should be opposed.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I will.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman outline the kind of a gift tax that he would support and that would be effective?

Mr. MILLS. That question illustrates the difficulty of trying to write a bill on the floor of the House. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] yesterday stated that when the Democrats were in control in the Ways and Means Committee they considered a gift tax very seriously and ran into so many difficulties that they abandoned it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I will.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. May I correct the gentleman? It was not while the Democrats were in charge, it was in 1921. If the Democrats had been in charge we would have written it into the law. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLS. I want to say that it is enormously difficult to improvise a tax of this kind and write it overnight. Here is the first thing that occurred to me: Why do you impose a tax on the donor? Here is a man who is parting with his property When you impose an income tax you impose it on the man receiving the income. When you impose an inheritance tax the tax comes out of the estate and the legatees. But here is an extraordinary form of taxation where you impose the tax on the man that parts with the property and try to attach a lien on the property in the hands of the new owner. I do not know to-day, from the reading of this bill, whether the lien shall attach in the hands of the party who buys it from the donee in good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, what I told you in the opening of this debate has been confessed on the floor of the House this morning, and that is that Mr. MILLS, of New York, wrote this bill in the Ways and Means Committee and that 10 of his colleagues joined him in the report. I regret to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] state that the bill has been amended to the point where he can not support it. What amendment has been placed in this bill that brings Mr. MILLS to that conclusion? If Mr. MILLS and his associates in the beginning of the consideration of the Mellon bill had submitted it to their conference under the leadership of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], I undertake to say that a close tab on that conference would have revealed the fact that he would get only 108 Republicans to indorse the Mellon plan.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. How many Republicans on the teller vote voted for the so-called Treasury rates?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. One hundred and fifty-two, it is true, but I said in the beginning, before the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] and before the Treasury Department got in their work. Then there were only 108 Republicans that you could find that would agree to support the Mellon plan. Is not that so, Mr. LONGWORTH? Now, gentlemen, since you have said that this is a Democratic bill and that we are responsible for it, I want to let the country know and the Republicans of the country understand that you wrote this bill. Why didn't you call in Mr. HAWLEY—he is the next one, if you did not want Mr. GREEN? Why didn't you call in Mr. TREADWAY, the next one? Why didn't you call on some other Member, older in service than the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], to write this bill?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. While I consider it a great credit to have written the bill, I want to say flatly to my friend from Texas that I did not write it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I know the gentleman did not write it in his own handwriting.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But the gentleman dictated the provisions of this bill more than any other man, practically.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no. I say to the gentleman from Texas that that is not so.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I shall ask every member of the committee if the gentleman from New York was not the most potential factor in the committee? Does any gentleman rise and say, "No"? Not a one. He helped to frame it at the Treasury Department. You will not deny that? The Secretary of the Treasury finds it necessary to summon the only man on the Ways and Means Committee who has the viewpoint that he has and who can approach him in money to write a bill, and then that gentleman comes in here and because, forsooth, we as the representatives of the people, whose duty it is and who the Constitution requires shall enact legislation, when we have seen fit to change a portion of the bill, rises in his place this morning and tells the world, "You have changed this; it is no longer the Mellon bill and my bill, and I do not propose to vote for it." I dare the people on the Republican side to follow the gentleman from New York on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. CRISP. Is it not true that the only fundamental changes made are that they adopted the so-called Garner rates instead of the 25 per cent rate and also authorized committees of the House and Senate by a majority vote to see income-tax returns?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is all. They say that this amendment is a joke. Do you suppose if OGDEN MILLS thought this was a mere gesture, he would be up here trying to ridicule it out of court? He knows what it will do.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman from New York knows that this amendment if it is adopted will prevent the transferring of large estates and avoiding paying estate taxes, that it will prevent the dividing up of large estates, and therefore escape from the high surtaxes. Those are the two things it will do, and in doing that in my opinion it will raise $25,000,000 in the Treasury next year. I say that it will raise that in the way of protection only, increasing the taxes on both estates and the surtaxes of those estates which have been divided up.

Let me ask you Republicans a question. You say you are not going to vote for this bill now. You surely will not say that, and when this bill comes up on its final passage I want to see how many of you are going to follow Mr. MILLS, because when you do that you are going to make a record, and when you go back home you have to meet that record, and the question is, and the question will be, "Do you like this law for the reduction of taxes better than the present law," and you can not make any other issue out of it to save your life. I do not think there is a single constituent in the United States that does not think we ought to have a tax reduction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman has said that this gift tax would raise $25,000,000. The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee says that it would raise a million dollars. You gentlemen must have your wires crossed.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Here is what the gentleman from Iowa says. He said it would raise probably a million dollars in taxes. I say that it will raise $25,000,000 by preventing the escape from other taxes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I said that it would not raise very much as a direct tax.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Certainly. Of course the gentleman from New York can not see that, because he does not want to see it. The New York viewpoint is such that it can not see anything outside of Wall Street.

Mr. SNYDER. Oh, let me tell the gentleman that I am in favor of this amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I am very glad to know that, and I take it all back, if it will do any good.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I hope the gentleman will limit his definition of a New York viewpoint.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I mean where they make the districts long and take in Fifth Avenue as a backbone.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We have other streets in New York than Wall Street.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. There is one good thing about this occurrence this morning, and it is some consolation to those who believe this bill ought to become a law and passed as it has been written. The confession of the gentleman from New York, I imagine, is reflected by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. I imagine my friend from Ohio is very much weakened this morning about the ultimate success of his famous compromise.

Nobody knows what it is. Mr. FREAR has been asking for it half a dozen times through the press and on the floor of the House, but he has never given it to anybody. He is keeping it off with great secrecy, hoping to spring it suddenly and have all the Republicans follow. Gentlemen, are you going to do that when the time comes for the final passage of this bill? You have to go on record on the amendment. That is one thing certain. You have to go on record as between 44 and 25. You can not get away from that. That part of it you can not avoid. Your record is made. You can not avoid that.

Suppose you strike out 44 or fail to adopt 44 and leave 25. How many of you will support the motion to reconsider? How many Republicans on this side will it require to make a majority of them, a majority on this side of the Chamber against the Mellon plan? I make that statement, and I make it advisedly.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, there comes the substitute whip on the Republican side. [Laughter.] I guess I shall have to yield to him.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman from Ohio would rather be the substitute whip on the Republican side than be the whip on the minority side. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do not doubt that; I do not question that.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is mistaken when he says a majority on this side are against the Mellon plan, because I know a majority on the roll call is on the other side; a majority is in favor of the Mellon bill, and a decided majority.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. How many? How much? Name them.

Mr. BEGG. Wait until you call the roll, and then you will find out.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Tell us how many.

Mr. BEGG. We had 152 on the only opportunity we had to get a vote, with 13 absent.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Does the gentleman say he has 152 to vote on the Mellon plan on the roll call?

Mr. BEGG. Absolutely, and more than that. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do not believe it.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas another question.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Does not the gentleman think he should give the whip a chance?

Mr. BEGG. I do not mean to step back for the whip.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. Are you not doing just exactly as we prophesied would happen when this great rule was put over in the rules, namely, when anybody can offer an amendment on the floor? We are now in passion legislating against Mr. MILLS because he happens to be wealthy.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the gentleman wants to make a speech I will get him time.

Mr. BEGG. Get me time. And in passion on the gentleman's side, when he stood up in his caucus and appealed to the Republicans to vote with the Democrats; and that has produced chaos. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is about as much information as the gentleman ever gives anyone, and that is none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment; a substitute for the Mills amendment.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment pending, and I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DAVEY. This is an amendment to the amendment. Section 320——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is reminded that there is an amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TREADWAY. I rise in opposition to it.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer a substitute for the Mills amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is at least entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to recognition if he has an amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He wishes to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he would recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts. If any gentleman offers an amendment to the amendment as a substitute, he would have the right to offer it, on which further debate could be had on the amendment itself.

Mr. BLANTON. I appeal to the parliamentary rules, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask for recognition as a member of the committee on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think, on inspection of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas, that it is a substitute.

Mr. BLANTON. Why is it not? I offer an amendment to change the rate.

Mr. TREADWAY. It makes no difference how the gentleman offers it. Let the Chair rule upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. It looks to the Chair as if this were simply an amendment to the amendment, and it looks to the Chair as if it would not be in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Here is the situation——

Mr. TREADWAY. The Chair knows the situation, and has ruled. I claim that the gentleman from Texas is out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair knows the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the gentleman from Texas make his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The fifth line starts out, "1 per cent above $50,000." The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] offered to strike it out and make it 2 per cent. I offer a substitute to strike out "1 per cent" in the bill and make it "one-half of 1 per cent." That is a substitute. If it is not, I do not know how to write one.

Mr. TREADWAY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that is an amendment to the third degree, and out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he understands what it is. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] reads as follows: "Strike out '1 per cent' and insert 'one-half of 1 per cent.'" That is not a substitute amendment.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I always enjoy following the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. I realize that he is more entitled to the floor than I am, but it is a great pleasure occasionally to have a little sport with him, even when we are discussing serious matters, and this is a serious matter, which he has discussed in a spirit of great levity.

The gentleman from Texas asks whether or not we are going to dare—he used the word "dare"—vote against the Garner amendment when it comes to final passage. He thinks there are very few, but I want to join that small group, and I do dare vote against the Garner amendment and I intend to do it on a roll call. [Applause.] There are at least 152 others who will do the same and we expect to be joined by some who were not present. So the gentleman from Texas can not get away with that facetiousness about the majority of the Republicans not being for the rates in the bill; they have been for them from the start, and, except for the confusion worse confounded which the gentleman from Texas has thrown into the steering gear of this machine, there would be no trouble about passing the bill; he is the one who is making the trouble, not the Republicans. [Laughter.]

Now, there has been considerable said here about leadership, and our distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has taken exception to those who differed with him on this bill. I am one of those who differed with him and that is the reason he has not had control of our committee; he has not stood for what the majority of his party wanted to be written into the bill. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] has not assumed leadership in the committee, and it was extreme discourtesy to make such a statement as that. Nor has he written this bill. I defy the gentleman from Texas to bring forward the slightest proof that the gentleman from New York has had the writing of this bill. As a matter of fact, he has not had the writing of it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I shall be very glad to yield. If the gentleman from Nebraska wishes to take the place of the Democratic leader, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I am not competent to do that.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the gentleman is, and he is assuming his place now.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. In his absence I do not intend to let the gentleman get away with a bluff.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no bluff about it, as I am merely stating facts. I shall be very glad to hear the gentleman's question, if it is a question, but not a speech.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. The question is this, my friend——

Mr. TREADWAY. Thank you.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. And I am. [Laughter.] The gentleman distinctly stated that he dared the gentleman from Texas to prove a certain proposition.

Mr. TREADWAY. I repeat it.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I call to the gentleman's mind the fact that only two minutes ago the gentleman from Texas stood there and challenged any Member on your side to rise and disprove his statements.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; and in doing that he broke the confidence of an executive session of the committee. [Applause.] And that is the reason why nobody took the dare. When the gentleman from Nebraska is a little more familiar with procedure here he will ascertain that all committee matters are not supposed to be debated on the floor in the way they have been debated for the last week or so.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I am sufficiently familiar with JOHN GARNER to repel the insinuation that he broke any confidence. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. But we know the way in which he can insinuate and break confidences. Nobody has a higher respect for the gentleman from Texas than I have; I assure you of that.

There have been some very unfair insinuations on the part of the gentleman from Texas against the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS]. The insinuations are that he is influenced by his personal interests in regard to this bill. The gentleman from Texas makes that insinuation when he continually refers on this floor to the gentleman from New York as being a man of means and that, therefore, he, as the Representative of the people, would so far debauch his oath of office as to consider his personal interests in preference to his duty as a Congressman. I resent that insinuation. [Applause.] It is natural that the gentleman from New York should not be the one to reply in reference to his own affairs. I do not know anything about the gentleman's bank account, nor do I know anything about the bank account of the gentleman from Texas. But the insinuation that any man here would pretend or would dare to be so governed in his conduct in writing a measure of this kind and in assisting in its preparation would be influenced by his personal bank accounts is beneath the gentleman from Texas, and he should withdraw those statements and never make them again. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks permission to modify his request and make it 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON as a substitute for the Green amendment: The Green amendment amended as follows: On page 1, line 5, strike out 1 per cent and insert in lieu thereof one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas can not do by indirection what he can not do directly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk did not read all of my substitute. I have put it in the form of a substitute, and if the Chair will inspect it he will see it is in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If my friend simply wants to speak, why does he not get recognition and go ahead?

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I am trying to do now, but I am trying to do it in an orderly way under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is rather informal but the Chair assumes it constitutes a substitute, unless objection is made to its form. The gentleman seeks to adopt the Green amendment with the change of certain language which he specifies.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not want to have to rewrite the whole proposition; that is all.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I have not the amendment before me, but is it not a change of the very paragraph that the gentleman from New York attempted to amend by his amendment, and if so, it is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it is a substitute, Mr. Chairman, pure and simple. But if it will better please the gentleman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. TILSON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I insist on my substitute, Mr. Chairman, as it is clearly in order.

Mr. TILSON. There is already an amendment and an amendment thereto pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the substitute is in order. It is informal, but in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, my object is to use five minutes on this pending question. I know that a belief has lodged itself unfortunately in the breasts of many of our distinguished members of the Ways and Means Committee that no one else here is interested in tax legislation but members of that committee, and that we other Members are guilty of lese majesty in attempting to speak on tax legislation. I know that idea seems to prevail. I am sorry to see it exhibited in such a broad-minded man, usually, as our friend from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] would have us believe that only he and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and Mr. Secretary Mellon are interested in this revenue bill. Why, there are 435 Members of this Congress now framing this revenue bill in this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. There are 110,000,000 people in the United States who are interested in it, and I want to say to the gentleman that when this bill is passed finally it is not the Mills bill or the Mellon bill or the Green bill or the Garner bill; it is the American people's measure when it becomes the law of the land. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] intimates that he is going to vote against it, and therefore further intimates that the President will veto it after the House and Senate pass it.

Here is the situation: The people of the United States do not care how you designate this bill. They do not care how you name it. They do not care whether it is the Mellon bill or the Mills bill or the Green bill or the Garner bill or the Frear bill, but what they are interested in is the wording of its provisions and the fact that it reduces their taxes. That is the main point they are interested in, and I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from New York and every member of his party that if this bill passes as it is written, reducing the taxes of every citizen of the United States who pays an income tax, reducing it under the amount payable under the present law—I want to say to him and to his party that if his President vetoes it they are going to hear the biggest howl from the American people that they ever heard before, because the people are not going to stand for it.

Mr. KING. What does the gentleman mean by "his party"? I never heard of that party before.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean the 152 gentlemen about whom our friend from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] spoke so eloquently, otherwise known as the standpat regulars. I do not refer to the gentleman from Illinois, because he is not going to vote with Mr. MILLS on that proposition. And I do not mean the balance of the Republican majority, because they have seen the light on this proposition and they know that this bill has been amended in the interest of the people of America, and I doubt that they will ever vote against it, even under the whip and spur of the Republican steering committee.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman give way?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; I yield for a question.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How can we vote for this bill when we believe it creates a deficit?

Mr. BLANTON. That deficit has been created in the minds of a few parties in the hope it will form an excuse for a veto, but you can not fool the people on that. Take, for instance, the Frear amendment that we passed yesterday providing for an estate tax. The gentleman from New York knows what that tax, and also what this ancillary gift tax, will do, and Mr. FREAR knows what it will do and Mr. GARNER of Texas knows what it will do and every man on this floor who has studied the question knows what the estate tax and this gift tax will do. They substantially increase revenue. Mr. GARNER of Texas says that the Frear amendment passed yesterday and this amendment and his cigarette amendment, which he is going to offer, will bring from $110,000,000 to $130,000,000 more into the Treasury when they are passed. Those of you who talk about deficits, may I say to the distinguished gentleman, if you are afraid of deficits, why do you not vote for these amendments which will surely put $110,000,000 more into the Treasury per annum?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give way for another question?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; I yield for a question always.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I understand the estimated deficit is about $320,000,000, and the gentleman has only accounted for $120,000,000 of the $320,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, that is the administration rumor, but the distinguished gentleman was not here last year when Secretary of the Treasury Mellon told us that we had a deficit of $600,000,000 in the Treasury and told us we could not make adjusted compensation expenditures, and then a little later on he came back and told us he had made a mistake, and that there is a $300,000,000 surplus, which makes a difference of nearly $1,000,000,000, I will say to the distinguished gentleman. So, being a billion dollars out of balance, we can not rely upon such reports coming from Secretary Mellon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that certain gentlemen have advised the Chair that there are other amendments to the amendment which are desired to be presented, and for that reason the Chair thinks he should put the Mills amendment at this time and have it disposed of.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask leave to withdraw my substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from New York to say that the amendment was a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It was; but the gentleman did not withdraw it. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his substitute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. TAGUE. During the heat of this debate the question that confronts me as a Member of this House is whether or not I have surrendered all my rights as a Member and have given up the privilege of offering an amendment or speaking for or against any measure that comes before this body simply because it may offend the taste of some individual. I happen to be a member of the committee that has reported this bill; but, Mr. Chairman, though I may be a member of this committee, I do not believe I have the right to usurp the rights of the membership of this House in presenting amendments or in presenting my views or allowing them to present their views to this House on so important a measure as this tax bill.

What are the facts? Much criticism is made here of Members on both sides of the aisle. I have respect and honor for every Member and every colleague of mine on the Committee on Ways and Means, no matter to which side of the aisle he may belong. I do not want to impugn the motive of any Member in the position he takes in this House, but I do not intend to sit here as a Member of this House and have the Members on this side of the aisle who are members of the committee told that they must assume a responsibility that has been denied them from the beginning. As one member of the committee, I want to say that so far as important provisions of this bill are concerned, we knew nothing about them until they were presented. The majority, to be sure, assumed that responsibility, but soon the responsibility had to come upon the shoulders of men who were competent to judge this situation.

There are able Members on that side of the committee but, gentlemen, no more so than the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Texas, on this side of the aisle, for upon this side of the aisle are Members who have served on this committee many years. It may not be out of place when I say the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] have all served on this committee and have drafted legislation for tax revenue and tariff longer, probably, than the majority of Members on the other side. If the younger Members of the House at least are not going to follow those who should understand the bill, then, Mr. Chairman, why should we follow those who, like myself, have had but one or two years in the drafting of important legislation.

I do not think it is within the keeping of any Member of this House to stand up here and say that because his views are not taken on the bill that it is unfit for the country, but with sober mind use our own judgment; and on the floor we ought to be at least able to judge of an amendment as it comes and vote upon it according to our own conscience.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this should be a partisan measure and I regret that an attempt is being made to make it a partisan measure. That was made possible before it came to the House. I want to say again and to repeat it, that I believe the time is going to come in this House when Members put upon an important committee as this is, whether Democrats or Republicans, will at least be permitted to know what is going on in the committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DAVEY to the Green amendment: On page 2 of the amendment, line 3, section 320, strike out "during the calendar year" and insert "prior to the death of said resident."

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me as the Green amendment now stands it has a decided weakness or loophole, provided it is intended to accomplish what was said of it. As I understood it, the Green amendment was intended to duplicate the rates of the Ramseyer amendment. It does and it does not. According to the Green amendment this tax is based upon the gifts made within a calendar year. So it seems to me it might be possible for a man to make a gift of $100,000 or $1,000,000 per year for 10 or 20 years and escape the bulk of taxation by paying the lower rates on partial gifts each year.

The purpose of the amendment I have offered, in absolute good faith, is to take the total gifts prior to death and put those total gifts on exactly the same basis as that provided in the Ramseyer amendment. So I have offered the amendment to strike out the words "during the calendar year" and substitute "prior to the death of the said resident." The effect of this would be to make the sum total of the gifts made prior to death subject to the same rates as in the Ramseyer amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We consulted the experts on that matter and they said it was entirely impracticable because it would make a difference in the rates every year unless they waited until the time of the death of the decedent, and that would not be practicable.

Mr. DAVEY. I would like to remind the gentleman of the modern definition of an expert, and that is an ordinary man 150 miles from home. The testimony of experts does not change the meaning of the English language or common sense.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was not talking about expert witnesses, but expert draftsmen.

Mr. DAVEY. If you wish to put the tax on gifts on the same basis as the inheritance tax, you must base the tax on the sum total of the gifts and not allow the man to evade the higher tax on inheritances by making smaller gifts every year over a period of years. It seems to me that logic and common sense require that this amendment should be passed if you propose to tax gifts on the same basis that you tax inheritances.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Under the amendment the gentleman has offered the tax would not be collected each calendar year, but would be postponed until the year of the death of the donor.

Mr. DAVEY. Possibly; but I think that could be provided against.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Does the gentleman think that ought to be done?

Mr. DAVEY. It is possible that another amendment might be required to perfect it.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVEY. I will.

Mr. ACKERMAN. A man making gifts would have to keep an account of each gift that he made, not knowing when he was going to die?

Mr. DAVEY. That is obvious.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Would there not be a possibility that the entire estate might be dissipated so that there would be nothing to pay any tax with?

Mr. DAVEY. I believe it is easily possible to amend the Green amendment so that the gift tax can be collected each year and at the end of each tax year to compute the tax on the total of the gifts up to that time, assessing the proper tax on the total up to that time and deducting the yearly taxes already paid. This would provide an increasing tax each year as the sum total of the gifts increased, and in the end the gift tax would be exactly the same as that provided on inheritances in the Ramseyer amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, all time has expired, and the gentleman can not debate his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The time was fixed by the committee. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, tellers.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a division.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. BACHARACH to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 191, noes 65.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to follow the amendment just adopted which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: On page 150, following the amendment just adopted, insert a new title as follows:

"TAX ON EXCESS DWELLING HOUSE RENT.

"That on and after July 1, 1924, there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually the following special tax:

"1. Where the rent of a dwelling house is increased above the standard rent, as hereinafter defined, 50 per cent of the amount by which the rent payable exceeds the amount which would have been payable under the standard rent: Provided, That where the landlord has since April 7, 1917, and during the continuance of this title of this act incurs expenditures on the improvement or structural alteration of a dwelling house, not including decoration or repair, an increase of rent not exceeding 15 per cent per annum on the amount so expended shall not be deemed an increase for the purpose of this title.

"2. Whenever a standard rent, as herein defined, computed for a period of one year is not in excess of 10 per cent net of the capital value of the dwelling this title does not apply and the only return the landlord shall be required to render is an affidavit to the effect that the rent received during the taxable year does not exceed the standard rent defined herein.

"3. Where any person lets a dwelling house or any part thereof at a rent which includes payment in respect of the use of furniture, and the rent so charged is yielding or will yield the lessor a profit of 25 per cent per annum in excess of the standard rent of the dwelling or part of the dwelling house unfurnished, the excess rent shall be taxed 50 per cent.

"4. Where any person sublets more than one dwelling house or part of a dwelling house in excess of a standard rent, the excess rent shall be taxed 75 per cent.

"5. Any transfer to a tenant of any burden or liability borne by the landlord shall for the purposes of this title be treated as an increase where such transfer makes the tenancy on the whole less favorable to the tenant whether or not the sum payable by way of rent has increased; and the transfer to any landlord of any burden previously borne by a tenant where as a result thereof the tenancy as a whole is not less favorable to the tenant than the previous term, shall not be deemed an increase under this title, although the amount payable as rent be increased.

"6. For the purpose of this title the expression 'dwelling house' includes an apartment house, tenement house, or a one-family house; and the term 'standard rent' means the rent at which the dwelling house or part thereof was let on the 7th day of April, 1917, or where the dwelling house was not let on that date, the rent at which it was last let before that date; and in case of a dwelling house which was first let after April 7, 1917, it is the amount of rent computed for the period of one year which does not exceed 15 per cent of the capital value of the dwelling house, and the term 'capital value' means the fair market price or value of the property as of April 7, 1917; in case of property acquired on or before that date and in case of property acquired since that date the cost thereof; and in case of property acquired since April 7, 1917, by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance the fair market price or value on the date so acquired; and the term 'net rent' means the amount of rent remaining after deducting the actual expenses of repairs, interest, taxes, fire insurance, fuel, light, labor, and other necessary expenses of like character.

"7. This title shall not apply to a dwelling house or part of a dwelling house let at a rent which includes payment in respect of board."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not a tax, but it is in effect a law intended to regulate the rentals of dwelling houses.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, this is not subject to the point of order for the reason that this amendment is as much in order as the tax on excess profits. It is a new method of taxation and simply offers a new method by which to raise revenue. It does not undertake anywhere to regulate by inspection or otherwise the dwelling houses of the country. It is a tax on excess rentals. It is as much in order as the inheritance tax or the tax on gifts, or the tax on excess profits. I have drawn this amendment with the Supreme Court opinion in view, so as not to trespass upon the Constitution. The House has followed this question, and it has been decided two or three different times throughout this debate. The amendment simply offers a new title and a new system of taxation of excess rentals demanded on dwelling houses, just as excess profits are subject to tax in other directions. It is not a prohibitive tax; it is a tax that will have the effect of raising revenue. One billion and forty-seven million dollars was collected in rents in the United States in the course of a year. This will affect only the excess rentals.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Who is to determine what is an excess rental?

Mr. McKEOWN. That is to be determined by this rule, as set out in the statute, and by the commissioner just the same as he determines excess profits and the tax on profits from the sales of real estate.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The commissioner of internal revenue would examine and review the returns to ascertain whether an excess rent had been charged.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is above 10 per cent; yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What about a building that was not constructed before April 1917?

Mr. McKEOWN. The standard rate of rent is 15 per cent on the cost of construction or the price of property, the actual purchase price or the value of the property at the time it was purchased.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And, of course, that is subject to review and examination by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma says that he has examined some Supreme Court decision which he thinks holds that this would be constitutional. That might be. Of course, the Chair does not primarily pass upon constitutional questions. This amendment is purely an amendment which seeks to regulate rents. The gentleman from Oklahoma would not deny that.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The purpose of this amendment is not to raise revenue, it is not to raise a tax, but it is for the purpose of regulating rents.

Mr. McKEOWN. Where in the amendment is anything said about regulating rents?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The amendment singles out the sole proposition of rents and then undertakes to deal with excessive rents, and it comes within the ruling of the Chair which was sustained by the committee that an amendment can not be offered in a tax bill which has some ulterior purpose in view which has for its purpose the regulation of some matter and merely adds on the question of the tax. If the gentleman can do this, he can go out and regulate the price of coal, the price of shoes, the price of anything else in the whole category and merely say that if it exceeds a certain profit then it shall be subject to taxation. It opens up this tax bill to all of the wide, wild field of regulation of prices.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, there is not a single thing in this amendment anywhere that attempts to regulate the proposition of rents. This is a flat-footed tax proposition. It taxes nothing but excess rents above a standard rent fixed in this amendment, and if excess profits are subject to taxation in tax measures, why are not excess rents above a standard rate of rent subject to taxation? Under the rule heretofore announced by the House in the consideration of this bill, it is absolutely in order. It is just as much in order as the amendment just adopted a few minutes ago. It does not undertake anywhere to regulate rents. It is a new taxation method. It offers another source of revenue. For the information of the Chair I will say that there was collected in accordance with the report of 1920, $1,047,000,000 as rents in a year. This bill provides a 50 per cent tax. The highest rate is 75 per cent where they sublet more than one residence for themselves. It simply lays a tax on all over 10 per cent net. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] did not even contend that this other measure was out of order, and it is not out of order under the ruling of the Chair. This meets the argument presented here by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and by all of the parliamentarians. It offers a new system of taxation. There is nothing in the bill anywhere that seeks to regulate by inspection or anything of that kind. It is simply a taxing measure, offering to the House a new method by which to raise revenue to supply the deficiencies that may occur by reason of the reduction of other rates or the elimination of other rates. That is all its purpose. It has no other purpose than that. And that being the purpose, it evidently is in order under a former ruling of the Chair. I submit to the Chair that it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] offers an amendment which is to substitute a new title, and has in it several sections. The ruling of the committee, twice expressed, one on the matter of undistributed profits and the other on an excess-profits tax, was, as the Chair understands it, that any matter of internal-revenue tax would be admissible as an amendment to this bill, whether offered as an amendment to some section or as a new section or title. The ruling went no further than that, as the Chair understood it.

The Chair has had this matter under advisement for a little while, because of the fact that the amendment was printed in the RECORD, and there are some rulings which the Chair has found in which the principle is adhered to that the effect of the amendment must govern its germaneness, and not the purpose for which the amendment is offered. But that does not mean that everything that is offered as an amendment to this bill would be in order because it contains a tax. The Chair thinks that the common-sense and practical view of the matter would justify him in coming to the same conclusion that the Chair has arrived at from the offering previously of an amendment of this kind, to take into account what the apparent purpose of the amendment is; and in this case the Chair believes that he has the right to determine this matter from a consideration of this question, namely, whether this amendment imposes a new tax, whether that is its manifest purpose, or whether its manifest purpose is to do something else and it is attempted to incorporate through a provision in this revenue bill something alien to the subject matter.

This amendment in its first paragraph provides for the rent of a dwelling house, when, if it is above the standard rent as defined in the paragraph, 50 per cent of that increase over the standard rent should be taxed. Then the amendment provides that if the landlord increases the rent not exceeding 15 per cent on account of repairs, the amount so expended on repairs shall not be deemed an increase for the purpose of this title.

In the second paragraph the amendment provides that where the standard rent is not in excess of 10 per cent net of the capital value of the dwelling the amendment shall not apply, and the only return the landlord shall be required to render is an affidavit to the effect that the rent received during the taxable year does not exceed the standard rent as defined in the amendment.

In the third section the provision is that when a person lets a dwelling house or any part thereof at a rent which includes payment in respect of the use of furniture which will yield the lessor a profit of 25 per cent per annum in excess of the standard rent of the dwelling unfurnished, the excess rent shall be taxed 50 per cent.

Then the next section provides that if the landlord rents more than one dwelling house or part of a dwelling house in excess of a standard rent, the excess rent shall be taxed 75 per cent.

It is unnecessary for the Chair to go into a long dissertation on what this amendment does. The Chair has come to the conclusion, after looking it over and examining its contents, that it is a manifest attempt to regulate rents and that it comes within the purview of the ruling of the Chair on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] on his corrupt practices amendment, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? Those in favor of sustaining the decision of the Chair will rise and stand until they are counted.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 142, noes 11.

The CHAIRMAN. So the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the committee. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IV.—TAX ON CIGARS, TOBACCO, AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF.

SEC. 400. (a) Upon cigars and cigarettes manufactured in or imported into the United States and hereafter sold by the manufacturer or importer, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied, collected, and paid under the provisions of existing law, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by section 700 of the revenue act of 1921, the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer thereof:

On cigars of all descriptions made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, $1.50 per thousand;

On cigars made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, if manufactured or imported to retail at not more than 5 cents each, $4 per thousand;

If manufactured or imported to retail at more than 5 cents each and not more than 8 cents each, $6 per thousand;

If manufactured or imported to retail at more than 8 cents each and not more than 15 cents each, $9 per thousand;

If manufactured or imported to retail at more than 15 cents each and not more than 20 cents each, $12 per thousand;

If manufactured or imported to retail at more than 20 cents each, $15 per thousand;

On cigarettes made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, $3 per thousand;

Weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, $7.20 per thousand.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment: On page 152, line 8, strike out the figure "3" and insert the figure "4."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I offer this amendment for the sole purpose of getting additional revenue in the Treasury and at the same time not injuring the business on which the tax is levied. If you gentlemen will look at the receipts for the last six months, from July 1, 1923, to January 1, 1924, you will see that in this bracket there is an increase in the revenue of nearly $11,000,000 and a gross increase in consumption of cigarettes of something over 8,000,000,000.

This is undoubtedly a peace-time tax. I remember, as many gentlemen here remember, that prior to the war and prior to the constitutional amendment and the Volstead Act, when we wanted money we simply increased the tobacco and liquor taxes and got additional money. That is the only way we had to adjust our accounts and keep the budget balanced, either by increasing the liquor or the tobacco tax and the custom-house taxes. Those were about all the taxes we levied prior to the income-tax amendment; so that this is admittedly a proper tax and has been, I presume, for some 40 or 50 years. I do not know how long it has been since we began taxing tobacco.

Now, levy this additional $1 per thousand on cigarettes and you get, in my opinion, $60,000,000 additional revenue. I was told by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] a while ago that I would be mistaken as to the estimate of the additional revenue. I can not believe I am mistaken. I have great respect for Mr. McCoy's estimates, and you have not heard me attacking them, except where in obedience to the Secretary he has made out estimates at different times and for the future.

Now, the Secretary of the Treasury recommended this tax. In 1921 he recommended it as one of the taxes which Congress should pass in order to lower the surtaxes. He recommended the lowering of the surtax from 65 to 25 per cent, 32 per cent the first year and 25 per cent in the following years; and in order to make up for that loss this was one of the taxes he recommended. In that recommendation he estimated that the increase in revenue would be $36,000,000 and over the first year and $57,000,000 thereafter.

Since that time the increase in the consumption of cigarettes has been tremendous; and since you are getting more than $200,000,000 a year out of this one bracket at the present time, I think it is safe to say that if you add one more dollar you can get $60,000,000 additional without cutting down the consumption of cigarettes, because the consumption of cigarettes has increased in one year to the extent of 8,000,000,000, and the revenue in the last six months has been something over $100,000,000.

I merely submit this increase of $1 for the purpose of getting additional revenue upon an article which we all admit is a legitimate article of taxation and that we can tax it all the traffic will bear. I believe that is the rule, that when you admit a thing is subject to taxation you can levy just such taxes as will get the largest amount of revenue into the Treasury, and I know that by increasing the amount from $3 to $4 you will get more revenue into the Treasury. I do not think it will have any effect on the manufacture of cigarettes.

I remember at one time there was in this section a cigarette tax of $4.50, but my friend from North Carolina—bless his memory——

Mr. HUDSPETH. Four dollars and fifty cents per thousand?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; my friend from North Carolina talked me down to $4, and when we got over to the Senate they talked me down to $3, and there you are. But still that bracket alone renders at the present time more than $200,000,000, with an increased consumption of 8,000,000,000 cigarettes in one year. I think that statement alone is sufficient to show that you can levy that additional dollar tax without injuring the business in any material way. It means a 1-cent additional tax on each package of 10 cigarettes.

I hope the committee will find it advisable to adopt the amendment I have offered.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. What is the tax now?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Three dollars a thousand. I submit the amendment to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What is the highest tax that has ever been levied?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The highest tax that has ever been levied is $4.50. That was the amount carried in this section, as I tell you; then it was reduced to $4 and then the Senate reduced it to $3.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And the gentleman's amendment calls for $1 more than the amount now carried in this bill?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I rise to oppose the proposal on the ground that it will not increase the revenues of the Government, but that any additional tax will be reflected back upon the grower of the tobacco out of which cigarettes are made.

Let us agree on the facts first. The income from cigarettes weighing not over 3 pounds to the thousand—and those weighing more than that are an insignificant factor—was $182,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. The consumption of cigarettes under the $3 tax has very largely increased. In 1917 the consumption was 35,000,000,000 cigarettes; in 1918, 46,000,000,000; and in 1919, 53,000,000,000. Then the present rate of tax took effect and reduced the consumption to 44,000,000,000 in 1920, or 9,000,000,000 less than in 1919; in 1921, the consumption increased about 1,000,000,000; in 1922 it increased 5,000,000,000, and in 1923 it has increased about 10,000,000,000, so that the consumption in 1923 was about 60,000,000,000 cigarettes.

Now, I submit to you that this tax is doing well; it has increased the production and the consumption; it has afforded the growers a fairly good return for their crops and it is making a great deal of money for the Government.

It does not follow that if you increase the tax rate one-third you will increase receipts one-third. The present rate is $3 per thousand for cigarettes not weighing more than 3 pounds to the thousand; that represents three-tenths of a cent on each cigarette or 6 cents on each package costing 15 cents for 20 cigarettes—that is, for a package of cigarettes costing 15 cents, such as Camel, Piedmont, and 90 per cent of all of them that are sold. When these cigarettes have paid a tax of 6 cents per package of 20 that leaves only 9 cents for the grower, the cost of manufacture, and the profit to manufacturer, wholesaler, and retailer.

If the tax is raised to $4 per thousand the tax on each cigarette is increased to four-tenths of a cent, or 8 cents for a package of 20, costing 15 cents—that is, there will be an 8-cent tax, and 7 cents will be left to be distributed to the grower, to the manufacturer, to the wholesaler, and to the retailer—7 cents out of the 15 cents.

I submit that at that point the judgment of Mr. McCoy and Mr. Adams—that the tax has reached its maximum earning—is correct. Mr. McCoy said that the 3-cent tax would earn the Government a constantly increasing revenue, which is proving to be an accurate forecast.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Does the gentleman figure they would stop smoking cigarettes?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will come to that in due time. If at the 3-cent rate there is another increase of 10,000,000,000 for the next year, as there was for the past, there will be $30,000,000 additional revenue received, but if we raise the rate to $4 a thousand we jeopardize the continued growth of the industry and the continued increase in the use of cigarettes, with the probability, according to the actuary's estimates, that the consumption will be so reduced that the $4 tax will produce practically the same amount as a $3 tax.

Now, there are four possibilities in this proposed increase of the revenues. First, that it will reduce consumption and thus reduce the revenues, and I have already spoken of that. Second, the dealer will absorb the tax, but if he has only 7 cents left out of every 15 cents I think all will agree that he can not absorb the tax. It must be passed one way or the other. Now, the dealer might pass the tax on to the consumer and increase the price of each package of cigarettes. The usual rule is that with increased cost decreased consumption follows when the tax approaches the saturation point. If this were the only way in which tobacco could be used——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SANDERS of Indiana). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. If this were the only way in which tobacco could be smoked the additional tax might be passed on to the consumer, but a man can smoke a cigar or a pipe or he can roll his own.

If we lose on the cigarette tax by reducing the consumption and people smoke pipes or cigars, we get less revenue, because the cigarette item is the great revenue producer in the tobacco list; and if a person wishes to continue to smoke cigarettes under the increased tax, we will also lose in taxes to the extent that they "roll their own." They have done that from time immemorial and will continue to do so, and if the amount charged them for a package of made cigarettes seems to be unreasonable, they will go back to the practice of using a bag of tobacco and papers.

But there is another possibility that I think is more serious, and that is it will reduce the price paid to the growers. At present the growers of the bright tobacco, which is made into cigarettes, receive about 23 cents a pound. That is about the price received for their crop last year. There were various grades; some sold for a higher rate and some for a lower rate; but the Virginia, North Carolina, and Kentucky bright tobaccos which go into the making of cigarettes, sometimes blended with Turkish or other tobaccos, were bought from the growers at about 23 cents. The grower is in the weakest position of all the persons involved in the transaction. The dealer can pass the tax on to the consumer, on the one hand, and if the consumer will not stand it and begins smoking a pipe or a cigar or makes his own cigarettes, then the manufacturer of the cigarette will endeavor to pass the tax back to the man who grows the tobacco; and that is the most likely contingency of the four, because the man who grows the tobacco is in the weakest position.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman will recall, because the gentleman was probably a member of the committee at that time, that in 1918, in making up this tax, I submitted certain figures to the Treasury Department upon the basis of raising $500,000,000 from receipts from the tobacco clause, and they gave me an estimate of $522,000,000 and the largest item was $4.50 in this bracket. The Treasury Department at that time did not oppose this rate and thought they would get more money at $4.50 than $4.

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee disagreed and in 1918 put in the present rate and in 1921 continued the present rate, and the present rates are earning a large and growing amount of revenue. It is a continually growing business and produces a continually increasing amount of revenue, and why disturb a tax that has proven successful from the standpoint of revenue, with the possibility of greatly injuring the planters who grow the tobacco and whose circumstances are not good at present?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will my friend yield? You stated that this would increase the cost and thereby would decrease the consumption. Has my friend figured out, if the dealer passes this on to the consumer, what amount this would increase the price of a package of Camel cigarettes, for instance?

Mr. HAWLEY. Two cents for each package of 20 cigarettes costing 15 cents, so that he would pay 8 cents tax on a 15-cent package. And as the sale of cigarettes is now made on a bare margin of profit the tax will, if passed on to the consumer, increase the cost to him by the amount of the tax at least.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. One cent additional on each package of 10 cigarettes.

Mr. HAWLEY. They do not sell them in tens, as I understand it. They sell them in twenties.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Some are sold in tens.

Mr. BURTNESS. As I understand the gentleman, the tax now being $3 a thousand——

Mr. HAWLEY. Three dollars per 1,000 for cigarettes not weighing over 3 pounds to the 1,000.

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; that would be 6 cents on packages that sell for about 15 cents, or really a sales tax of 40 per cent; is not that correct?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; at the present rates, but 8 cents under the proposed amendment, or 53 per cent. Now, just one other point. It may be said that we can get some revenue from imported cigarettes. I have not here the statistics of imports, but let me quote you the facts.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOWELL). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. The tariff on cigarettes is $4.50 a pound plus 25 per cent, which makes 1.69 cents for each cigarette. Add to that 0.4 of a cent for the tax collected here, and that will make a package of 10 cigarettes selling for 25 cents bear a tax of 21 cents, so you can readily see that there will be no sales.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. They are imported cigarettes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am speaking of the fact that we would not get any income at all from the imported cigarettes. This would entirely cut that out.

Now, from the standpoint of the revenue, I believe we are getting more money now than we would under an increased rate, and from the standpoint of the grower we are giving him an opportunity to sell his tobacco at a moderately fair price, but if we put on this tax, the grower, being in the weakest position, will probably bear the increase, in large part at least, that arises out of the imposition of an increased tax.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I dislike very much to take issue with my distinguished friend from Texas, and I would not do so but for the fact that this proposed tax which he has sprung here in the Committee of the Whole, without any consideration being given it by the Ways and Means Committee, creates a very unjust burden upon the State that I in part represent.

I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that North Carolina pays more revenue tax on tobacco than any other State in the Union. I want to call your attention to this further situation: The entire amount of cigarettes manufactured, weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, were 55,763,022,618. North Carolina alone made cigarettes to the amount of 26,619,287,857.

Now, I want to ask this House, in all fairness, is it right to raise $60,000,000, one-half of which will come out of one State alone, and that State paying more revenue on cigarettes than any other State in the Union?

As I understand it, we came here for the purpose of reducing taxes. I have gone just as far as I could with my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. Some of you gentlemen may vote for this proposition on the theory it will help us raise a soldiers' bonus, but I want to call your attention to the fact that you are making the boys who smoke the cigarettes pay for their own bonus. The man who smokes cigarettes made in my State, like the Piedmont, and cigarettes of that character, are the fellows least able to pay the tax.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman's conclusion is that the boys who smoke will pay the tax?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes; in fact, what they do not pay will be taken off the price of tobacco paid to the farmer.

I represent people who not only raise tobacco but who smoke cigarettes.

Mr. GASQUE. Is not the tax passed on down to the farmer and also down to the consumer, so they get it both ways?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes; it does not help the men who make the cigarettes, nor does it help the farmer, nor does it help the consumer; it is like the nigger's fish trap—open at both ends, and catches them coming and going. [Laughter.] The manufacturer in a large measure passes it on to the consumer—what he does not take off the farmer in the reduced price paid for his tobacco.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Regardless of who is correct in this discussion, it seems that the tariff is not the only thing that is a local issue.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am putting it up to this House. I do not have any hope of bucking against the situation here. I do not have any hope of defeating the amendment, because the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will be acceded to by the House in all matters of taxation at this particular time, with the present temper of the House. I have been following the gentleman from Texas, but here is the parting of the ways. [Laughter.] I want to be absolutely frank about it.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield? I think the gentleman is absolutely correct, and I am going to vote with him.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I hope so, and I hope I can get enough on this side to break the combination in this instance. That is the reason I am speaking. Now, I appeal to you gentlemen in all seriousness. Why should you take any State out of the 48 that is paying more tax on tobacco than any other State in the Union? Why do you want to put $30,000,000 additional tax on that one State in a bill that proposes to reduce taxation instead of increasing it? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. FREAR. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I thought the Chair said there was no objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin was on his feet.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Then I object to the request of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. And I move to amend by making it 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman from Oregon if he makes his motion on the paragraph and all amendments thereto?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to amend by making it 30 minutes instead of 20, and the question is on the amendment to the motion.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FREAR) there were 96 ayes and 80 noes.

So the amendment to the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion as amended.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman said that his State out of 48 was singled out for this tax. Has not the gentleman been soaking my State the last four or five days? [Laughter.]

Mr. ABERNETHY. What has been done was with your consent.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. This tax will be paid mostly by the survivors of the World War that we taught to smoke cigarettes, will it not?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Absolutely. Now, I hope the House will give me attention, for this is a serious matter. I realize the situation I am up against by bucking the leader on our side, but this is the situation that confronts me. Here you are picking out cigarettes for taxation, going to raise the tax on them. If you are going to raise the tax on cigarettes why not raise it on all tobacco, cigars, and smoking tobacco, why do you put it on one form of tobacco like cigarettes that the poor boys are smoking. You say you are going to use the money for the bonus for the soldier boys, but I am opposed to the soldier boys paying for their own bonus by your increasing the tax on cigarettes. That is the situation. [Applause.] I hope that the amendment will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What about the boys 14, 15, 16 years old?

Mr. ABERNETHY. There is a law against that.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but they all get them just the same if they happen to have a nickel or a dime.

Mr. ABERNETHY. This will not affect them.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I moved to have the time extended because we are informed by the gentleman from Texas who has offered the amendment that this amendment will raise fifty or sixty million dollars. I do not know whether he is right, nor does any one of us, nor will we know until the returns are all in. If it will do that, it will do much to do away with what is called a threatened deficit by some Members on the Republican side. If that be true, I would like to provide enough funds so that we will not have a deficit. I am trying to save the bill which others are trying to destroy. If the gentleman is right I want to support the amendment. I say this incidentally in passing, that in Russia this last year I bought cigarettes at 50 cents a package of 20, and two-thirds of them had long paper stems, not one-half as good as your North Carolina cigarettes that cost less than half. They bought them all over that country, so that I have no fear at all but what they will pay the extra 2 cents in this country for cigarettes; if not, they can roll their own cigarettes and many of us can do that.

The thing that impresses me most of all is this division among the two political parties on the floor. It is getting to be a very anxious moment with me. The last gentleman who spoke, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY] complains about his insurgency in getting away from his party leaders and coming over on the Republican side, and it is a very unfortunate situation, because I know what insurgency means. During the last two or three days we have seen the spectacle of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] coming over to the Republican side and lining up with the distinguished Republican leader on this side, and also other leaders on the Democratic side have occasionally come over and been mixing up with leaders on the Republican side and have gone through the line of tellers. The only ones thus far who have been criticized are the so-called insurgent Republicans who joined with the Democrats on one vote on income-tax rates. The leaders on the Democratic side have opposed practically all of the amendments that I have offered, as they have a right to do.

Mr. McKEOWN rose.

Mr. FREAR. In just a moment. I want to speak of one thing that is more important than cigarettes. Yesterday the distinguished Republican leader said that he is going to propose an amendment on the income tax rates before we get through the bill. We have had this bill before us for about two weeks. Every man who has an intelligent understanding of taxes knows that the brackets as well as the percentages determine what is in any bill, and yet we have the leader telling us that he has not yet decided what his compromise proposition is going to be, but he is going to bring it in here at some time. I say that is not fair to those of us who want to study any proposition that comes in. I have a right to learn what this compromise measure is going to be which we are going to be called upon to vote on here in two or three days. I am not sure that I am going to vote with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. I am not voting on any partisan bill, a Democratic measure or a Republican measure, but I want to vote for the very best measure that is offered in my judgment. I want to see what this compromise bill is to be, and I do not want the previous question moved later so that we can not discuss it. It is one of the most important provisions in the bill and involves a matter of $200,000,000 or more.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I hope the gentleman will bring it in as soon as the gentleman will the question of the tax on cigarettes.

Mr. FREAR. I trust the tax on cigarettes will be brought in this afternoon, and I am supporting the gentleman from Texas for the second time.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. If the distinguished leader of the majority brings in a compromise suddenly, does the gentleman from Wisconsin not think that Mr. MILLS of New York will oppose it?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, I assume gentlemen on the Republican side are still in the majority, although I do not speak for a united vote on any measure or amendment that may be offered.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes, certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I have that honor.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And yet he says that his leader will not tell him what he has in his mind?

Mr. FREAR. I am simply saying that he said to the House yesterday that sometime he is going to propose a compromise measure, and I feel we are entitled to know what that is, because this is a nonpartisan measure, in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I just want to know if it would be in order under the present rules of the House?

Mr. FREAR. I am not sure. The gentleman with seven or eight of his associates on his appeal did not secure many votes, so I shall have to leave it to him, although I think he is a good lawyer and well able to pass judgment.

Mr. Chairman, we are entitled to know and we ought to know what this compromise on income tax rates is to be, so that we can study it, because every man knows that one can juggle taxes, that he can juggle rates and schedules, and we want to see what it is. I am making no assertions but am sincere in asking for particulars as to this proposed compromise plan.

I am asking that a statement given out yesterday may be incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks. I do this without criticism of anyone, but the statement herewith speaks for itself.

STATEMENT ASKING FOR VIEW OF THE PROPOSED COMPROMISE PLAN.

Republicans who are more interested in legislation than in partisanship ask to see Mr. Mellon's mysterious revised 37½ per cent compromise for the original Mellon bill which it is announced Mr. LONGWORTH will offer as a substitute. Percentages mean little until relation to amounts contained in tax brackets are revealed. We ask to examine the brackets, percentages, and all parts of the plan to learn just what it means before it is sprung on the House after debate has closed. That is the only fair course to pursue with a great tax bill involving $200,000,000 in income-tax rates.

The so-called scientific Mellon bill juggled income rates and tax brackets so as to mislead the public. It used a 25 per cent tax rate for the $100,000 bracket whereas the 25 per cent bracket in existing law taxes incomes of only $54,000. The Mellon bill gave about 50 per cent reduction to large incomes but only 2 per cent cut on normal tax to the small taxpayer. This comes through juggling of tax brackets.

The Mellon bill can not be resurrected, but we ask to learn if Mr. Mellon's substitute is the Mellon bill under a different title and arrangement of brackets and rates.

Constant press reports of dissatisfaction among so-called insurgents credited to Mr. LONGWORTH we are not disturbed about. We do ask him to put his 37½ per cent Mellon revised tax plan in the RECORD, where it can be seen and studied. We have made no coalition with Democratic Members, and never have had any. The Garner plan is not nearly as good as the one we offered, either "scientifically" or to administer, but it is far more just than the Mellon bill. It favors 3,500,000 taxpayers, where the Mellon bill favors 4,223, who get $75,500,000 tax reduction, or 50 per cent more than the 3,500,000 will receive. That is not politics but a cold fact in dollars and cents. Politics had no part in our support of the Garner plan.

Twice we have offered compromises to our Republican colleagues that would greatly relieve small taxpayers, and as regularly they have been rejected by Mr. Mellon, who controls the situation, so we are justly suspicious of any tax plan not fully understood in advance.

We offered four amendments in this committee affecting tax-free securities, undistributed profits, publicity of records, and excess profits. All were sound in principle and would have provided more than enough to reduce corporate normal taxes and to finance a soldiers' compensation bill.

These amendments were opposed by Democratic leaders, whether called insurgents or irregulars, who joined with Republican leaders for that purpose, as they had a right to do without criticism. We asked others to offer inheritance and gift tax amendments, which include original proposals offered by me several weeks ago. No pride of authorship occurs over any good amendment.

Secretary Mellon strongly opposed all of these amendments and any soldiers' bonus and opposes many other views we hold. Responsibility for the result rests with his attempt to force his bill through Congress aided by a press propaganda costing several million dollars.

As one of the wealthiest men in the world and a controlling factor in scores of great corporations, his viewpoint and ours naturally differ, but that does not make his views a standard of Republicanism.

We are free to act as a group and have had many Members come to influence us to accept some proposal of Mr. LONGWORTH of a "sight unseen" jackknife plan that we suspect on analysis may be a twin sister of the Mellon plan. No one knows until it is submitted.

We insist Congress and the public are entitled to see any plan Mr. LONGWORTH expects to offer, in order that brackets, percentages, and estimates may be placed on the table for inspection.

After two weeks' debate and voting he still holds the mysterious "37½ per cent" proposal up his sleeve. We are not concerned in any party label on any tax plan, because it is not a political question, but we have supported the best plan thus far offered that will give relief to taxpayers least able to pay. Our own plan was better than either of the others now before the committee.

Five hundred million dollars was handed out by Congress last session to large income beneficiaries through the repeal of the excess-profits tax and reduction of surtaxes from 65 per cent to 50 per cent, the present rate. Ninety-four Republicans voted for the 50 per cent surtax rate last session, and we believe any 37½ per cent rates framed on the Mellon bill tax brackets, or half the rates of existing law, are unjust to taxpayers in the lower brackets, of whom 90 per cent receive under $10,000 incomes.

The House is entitled to know the facts. That has been the trouble with the Mellon rates, which were prepared in secret, by whom or by what interests no one has yet been willing to state. We ask to see and study the substitute plan and to discuss it, if necessary.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I hope my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] will give me his attention, because I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to his remarks. He stated what we all know, that many on his side do not even know what program they are going to follow. I do not want to repeat a speech, but after my remarks of last week, wherein I stated I believed the gentleman from Wisconsin was sincere in his demand for 50 per cent, I repeat now that I will first have to see a record vote before I will believe that he has agreed to any compromise.

Mr. FREAR. There is no proposition before us for more than 50 per cent. My own proposition was defeated.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. That was two years ago.

Mr. FREAR. No; this time.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I mean the old rate was 50 per cent two years ago. The gentleman is now arguing for 50 per cent. The Garner plan is 44 per cent. I think it was day before yesterday I again saw in the newspaper that the majority leader—and you people are in power still—was dealing with what he called the insurgents, on the Republican side, and was perhaps going to raise the ante—as I said in my remarks before. I said the other day that I refused to believe that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] was in the game, and I want to say that I do not believe that a majority of those 69 men who stand for 50 per cent and who still think it ought to be 50 per cent are going to make this deal.

Mr. FREAR. The maximum is 50 per cent, and that means nothing unless you know what bracket it comes in.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. The gentleman knows what bracket the 44 per cent comes in.

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. In other words, the Democrats have laid their plan on the table?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. But you do not yet know where you are, as far as your party is concerned, and you are now asking to be told.

Mr. FREAR. Not to be told, but to learn what is their proposition.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. The gentleman ought to be in a party where he can learn.

Mr. FREAR. But we would have to be tied up then.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman said that the Garner plan was laid on the table. That is not the last table it is going to be laid on.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. That is about as correct as your first guess, for I still refuse to believe that all on the Republican side have forgotten the people back home, those who sent them to Congress. When I think of my good friend, Mr. MILLS, the gentleman from New York, shedding crocodile tears for the poor, because the inheritance taxes begin to increase after you reach $450,000, I wonder how many in our districts are worth that amount and how many it affects. But that is not the purpose which I desired to talk about. The final vote will tell exactly where each Member stands.

My good friend from North Carolina, Mr. ABERNETHY, is very deeply interested in North Carolina. He ought to be. It is a great State. But in my State we manufacture cigars. I would like to get some changes made in the rates on cigars. But I realize——

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. ABERNETHY. They do not tax cigars. Why should you be concerned?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Oh, yes; they are in here.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Not this increase. That is the point I am making. You fellows who have cigars are not willing to tote fair with the cigarette folks.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I remember, when the first tax was placed on cigarettes, the same argument was made to have it changed back, and for months and months or a year or more those who smoked cigarettes paid 10 cents a package and got only 8 cigarettes. You can buy them down town and at other places now for 12 and 13 cents a package, and it has not resulted in helping the producer. My good friend from North Carolina need not be concerned about $3 or $4 or $5 helping the producer. Just to show you I am correct, let me call your attention to the fact that while in the Capitol restaurant you pay 40 cents for a Florida grapefruit, the producer is getting only about 1 cent apiece and can not even sell all the fruit he has at that price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, at a later date I will go into this question fully. I will not ask for more time now, as I know we have had a hard day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which the Clerk will again report for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARNER of Texas: Page 152, line 8, strike out the figure "3" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "4."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HAWLEY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 70.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. GARNER of Texas and Mr. ABERNETHY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 85.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Every manufacturer of cigarettes purchasing any cigarette paper made up into tubes (a) shall give bond in an amount and with sureties satisfactory to the commissioner that he will use such tubes in the manufacture of cigarettes or pay thereon a tax equivalent to the tax imposed by this section and (b) shall keep such records and render under oath such returns as the commissioner finds necessary to show the disposition of all tubes purchased or imported by such manufacturer of cigarettes.

Mr. DAVEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. DAVEY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DAVEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVEY. I would like to speak with reference to the Green amendment. Must I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall have to object.

Mr. DAVEY. It is with reference to the Green amendment. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That has been fully discussed. I want to get along with the bill. We must stop these retroactive discussions.

Mr. DAVEY. This is a very serious proposal that I have.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I regret to have to object. The gentleman can get some time later on. I want to push along this afternoon.

Mr. DAVEY. It will take only five minutes, and then it will be through.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(c) Sales or shipments of leaf tobacco by a dealer in leaf tobacco shall be in quantities of not less than a hogshead, tierce, case, or bale, except loose leaf tobacco comprising the breaks on warehouse floors, and except to a duly registered manufacturer of cigars for use in his own manufactory exclusively.

Dealers in leaf tobacco shall make shipments of leaf tobacco only to other dealers in leaf tobacco, to registered manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes, or for export.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I rise to call your attention to the fact that in this section we have to deal entirely with the regulation of leaf tobacco. It has become a rule now—I suppose you would call it "the rule of expediency"—that any measure that has to do with regulation is out of order in the House. This shows you what the amendment to the rules has at last gotten us into, and I am not going to be the only one who is going to suffer from the rule. It is within the power of this House under the present rule to put out of order anything that is not expedient or anything that the House does not want to consider if there is a majority who prefer not to consider it. You have not any precedent now by which you can declare anything in order. You have not any precedent to govern yourselves except the rule of expediency. That is all you have got. [Applause.]

Here is an amendment, a provision, which, if it were offered now in this House the committee might not want to consider it, because, forsooth, it regulates leaf tobacco. I have offered an amendment to this House that did not have a single regulatory provision in it. It was a simple taxing method, but it was not expedient for the House to consider it.

I am going to say something else to you gentlemen on the committees in this House. I am going to say this: What inducement do you give a Member of this House who desires to exercise his rights as a Member here? What inducement do you give him who desires to prepare himself to legislate and comes here with that purpose in mind? Is it going to be that the committees of the House are going to report bills in and the rest of us just sitting by and take what you give us? So far as I am concerned, I am one Member who is not going to swallow everything that some committee or some department sends in here. [Applause.] That is the cause of the opposition I had to the so-called Mellon plan.

No department has the right to assume to give its name to a bill to be passed through the House of Representatives.

Now, what happens in this House when a man outside of a member of the committee offers an amendment? The committee will vote against him, even if it is a worthy amendment, because they do not want the bill amended.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have repeatedly accepted amendments from Members outside of the committee. I did so yesterday.

Mr. McKEOWN. Well, they are very small amendments, and they are figured not to hurt anything when the gentleman accepts them.

I am telling you the truth when I say that the membership of this House is gagged when it comes to the proposition of offering an amendment to a bill, because they come on the floor with the determination that no amendments will be put onto the bill if they can help it, no matter who offers them and how worthy they are.

Now, gentlemen, I say that the proposition now is the rule of expediency; if your amendment is expedient and one that it is expedient to consider, it is in order and it can be considered; but if it is not expedient it will be ruled out of order, and the House can do so. That is what you now have in your rules. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(e) Every dealer in leaf tobacco—

(1) Who neglects or refuses to furnish the statement, to give bond, to keep books, to file inventory, or to render the invoices, returns, or reports required by the commissioner, or to notify the collector of the district of additions to his places of storage; or

(2) Who ships or delivers leaf tobacco, except as herein provided; or

(3) Who fraudulently omits to account for tobacco purchased, received, sold, or shipped; shall be fined not less than $100 or more than $500, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(f) For the purposes of this section a farmer or grower of tobacco shall not be regarded as a dealer in leaf tobacco in respect to the leaf tobacco produced by him.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KINCHELOE: Page 160, strike out all of lines 9, 10, and 11, and insert the following:

"(f) For the purpose of this section a farmer or grower of tobacco or tobacco growers' cooperative association shall not be regarded as a dealer in leaf tobacco in respect to the leaf tobacco produced by him or handled by such association. As used in this section the term 'tobacco growers' cooperative association' means an association of farmers or growers of tobacco organized and operated as sales agent for the purpose of marketing the tobacco produced by its members and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary selling expenses, on the basis of the quantity and quality of tobacco furnished by them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that amendment.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Has there been general unanimous consent granted to extend remarks in the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in the extension of my remarks, to print in the RECORD the regulations of the tobacco department of the Treasury relative to the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the regulations of the tobacco department of the Treasury relative to the existing law. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 156 and amend lines 15 and 16 in accordance with the amendment just agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to return to page 156 for the purpose of submitting an amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. We want to know what the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 156, line 16, strike out "reenacted without change," add a comma, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Amended to read."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. The language to be stricken out is this: "Reenacted without change." Since we have made a change in the paragraph that language becomes untrue and the change is made to conform to the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE V.—TAX ON ADMISSIONS AND DUES.

SEC. 500. (a) On and after the date this title takes effect, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 800 of the revenue act of 1921—

(1) A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place on or after such date, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission; but where the amount paid for admission is 50 cents or less, no tax shall be imposed;

(2) Upon tickets or cards of admission to theaters, operas, and other places of amusement, sold at news stands, hotels, and places other than the ticket offices of such theaters, operas, or other places of amusement, at not to exceed 50 cents in excess of the sum of the established price therefor at such ticket offices plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the amount of such excess; and if sold for more than 50 cents in excess of the sum of such established price plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 50 per cent of the whole amount of such excess, such taxes to be returned and paid, in the manner and subject to the interest provided in section 603, by the person selling such tickets;

(3) A tax equivalent to 50 per cent of the amount for which the proprietors, managers, or employees of any opera house, theater, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets or cards of admission in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor, such tax to be returned and paid, in the manner and subject to the interest provided in section 603, by the person selling such tickets;

(4) In the case of persons having the permanent use of boxes or seats in an opera house or any place of amusement, or a lease for the use of such box or seat in such opera house or place of amusement (in lieu of the tax imposed by paragraph (1)), a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount for which a similar box or seat is sold for each performance or exhibition at which the box or seat is used or reserved by or for the lessee or holder, such tax to be paid by the lessee or holder; and

(5) A tax of 1½ cents for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any public performance for profit at any roof garden, cabaret, or other similar entertainment, to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise; the amount paid for such admission to be deemed to be 20 per cent of the amount paid for refreshment, service, and merchandise; such tax to be paid by the person paying for such refreshment, service, or merchandise. Where the amount paid for admission is 50 cents or less, no tax shall be imposed.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In line 17 on page 160 strike out the figures "10" and insert "20."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAINEY: Page 160, line 17, strike out the figures "10" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "20."

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this clause, placing a tax on admissions and dues, has not been changed since 1918, except that in the act of 1921 admissions to theaters charging less than 10 cents were not taxed. The change proposed in this section in the pending bill exempts from taxation admissions of 50 cents or less.

This is intended to reach the moving-picture houses of the country. We have now added so much to the revenue in the cigarette tax, in the stock-distribution tax, in the estate tax, and I expect later on to introduce an amendment to the excise taxes which will restore the chewing-gum tax of 1918, that we can now venture, I think, to discuss some educational matters and to examine into the effect this tax has had upon the theaters of the country.

I do not intend to attempt to disturb the exemption which is given to admissions of 50 cents and under. I am indebted to Augustus Thomas, the great dramatic writer—who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee—for the alarming facts to which I shall call the attention of the committee.

Mr. Thomas appeared before the committee speaking for the National Theater Managers' Association, the Actors' Equity Association, the Authors' League of America, the Producing Managers' Association of New York, the International Theater Association, the Organization of the American Dramatists, and the Actors' Fidelity Association. These modest gentlemen, comprising these theatrical organizations, took just as little of the time of the committee as they could, and they have taken just as little time of the Members of the House as they possibly could, and, therefore, I am going to attempt to present their case.

There has been no propaganda exerted by them; there have been no flaming advertisements on moving-picture screens, but they have presented their case modestly through Augustus Thomas, one of the world's greatest playwrights, and this is their case:

The effect of this tax on theater admissions in three years has been to reduce the number of theaters in which the spoken drama is housed from 1,200 houses to 400 houses. In the medium sized and in the smaller cities in three years the number of theaters in which the spoken drama is housed has decreased from 800 to 200. In other words, this tax in three years has cut off 66 per cent of the theaters in the country, and 75 per cent of the theaters in the cities.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAINEY. There are still left out in the country towns and in smaller cities 500 community theaters and they are also rapidly disappearing.

It is unusual in the history of the world to impose a tax upon education, upon cultural instrumentalities, but that is what we do in this section.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman kindly tell the House the effect of his amendment on the higher-priced admissions?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; that is what I want to do. The effect of the tax on the higher-priced admissions has been to reduce the number of theaters 66 per cent.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; the gentleman misunderstood me—the effect of his amendment on the higher-priced admissions.

Mr. RAINEY. The effect of my amendment on the higher-priced admissions will be to make the tax 1 cent for each 20 cents. It stands now at 1 cent for each 10 cents, and has stood at this rate since this tax has been in effect.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does not the gentleman recognize that the number of what are commonly called legitimate theaters was cut down a great deal by the competition of the moving pictures before we had any admission tax at all?

Mr. RAINEY. I think that is true, but in the last three years there has not been much development in the movies. In the last three years there has been only this tax to which Mr. Thomas and his colleagues can trace the decreased number of theaters in that period. This tax operates exactly as if we put a tax collector at the door of every schoolhouse in the United States and demanded a tax of every pupil as he entered the schoolhouse.

Mr. DAVEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVEY. I was wondering if the depression of 1921 had anything to do with the decrease in the number of theaters after the lapse of the excessive prosperity of preceding years. I was wondering if that might not have had something to do with it.

Mr. RAINEY. It might have had something to do with it; yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Suggesting an admission price of $2.50, the practical effect of the amendment would be as follows, would it not? The present law of 1 cent on each 10 cents, as in the bill, is a 10 per cent tax and therefore there would be a 25 cent tax on a $2.50 admission, and the purchaser would pay $2.75, whereas under the gentleman's amendment he would pay $2.63.

Mr. RAINEY. He would pay half as much in taxes; yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Twelve and a half cents.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What has been the effect upon the revenue produced?

Mr. RAINEY. The revenues have been falling off. In 1918, on admissions we got $26,357,338.81; in 1919, $50,919,218.42; in 1920, $76,920,955.43; in 1921, $89,730,831.99; in 1922, $73,384,955.61; and in 1923, $70,175,197.11. Nineteen hundred and twenty-one was the peak year. It has commenced to recede again.

This amendment will not wipe out the tax. It is impossible to tell how much revenue will be lost, but we estimate that we lose probably $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 by permitting moving pictures charging an admission of 50 cents and less to operate without this tax, and this will probably remove from the revenue receipts an income perhaps as large.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. As an illustration, take the situation here in Washington and take a theater like Keith's, where a few years ago they charged $1 for high-class vaudeville. They now charge $2, and with the tax the admission is $2.20. Under the gentleman's amendment, if they wanted to go back to $1, which they ought to do in normal times, we would only get a tax of 5 cents.

Mr. RAINEY. I am not so much interested in vaudeville of the Keith type as I am in the drama, which has an educational and a cultural influence.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I understand it, removing the tax, as is proposed in the bill, on the 50-cent shows, which are really the movies, the amendment proposed by the gentleman will substantially equalize, so far as the tax is concerned, the movie with the spoken drama.

Mr. RAINEY. That is it exactly. The section will give up about as much revenue for the spoken drama as we give up for the movies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And it prevents favoritism, so far as the taxing power is concerned, to the movie as against the spoken drama.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; that is it exactly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. In just a moment I will be very glad to yield. In other words, under this clause as it stands now we have made it possible to see Douglas Fairbanks in his athletic stunts without paying a tax. We can see Pola Negri in her graceful Spanish dances without paying a tax. All of you gentlemen can do that if you so desire. We can see William S. Hart with his revolvers and his horse play without paying a tax.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. We can see any of those people who figure in the scandals and in the murders and in the opium horrors of Hollywood—we can see any of them without paying a tax, but if we go down here to see a Shakesperean production or to see one of Augustus Thomas's dramas, or anything that provides a really proper emotional outlet for the people of this country, we are taxed for it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The amendment of the gentleman does not disturb the 50-cent exemption?

Mr. RAINEY. No; not at all.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does not the gentleman believe that to carry out his purpose we could bring that exemption up to $1?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know that I understand exactly the effect of the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Instead of the amendment suggested by the gentleman, I was asking if we could not bring the exemption up to $1 instead of 50 cents, as now in the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. That might, indeed, help some, and if I can not get this through I will offer that amendment, if the gentleman does not offer it himself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I never went to see Pola Negri, perhaps the gentleman has, but when I went to see Douglas Fairbanks I had to pay a Government tax.

Mr. RAINEY. Well, you will not now, unless they charge over 50 cents.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. We get a lot of Mellon tax propaganda in return for that admission.

Mr. RAINEY. Well, you can see that at the movies without paying a tax, as this bill now stands. You can go to the movies and you can suffer all the emotional pangs you feel like suffering, but there is nothing in the movies that appeals to the intellect.

The unspoken drama does not improve the English of the country. It does not have the cultural effect that the spoken drama does. Since we have put up the tax on estates and the tax on cigarettes to the amount of $60,000,000, as the gentleman from Texas states, has not the time come to do something for the education of the young of the country and the culture of the country? The taxes on the spoken drama are in effect a tax on culture; it is like reaching out from some unknown source with a hand of steel and throttling the sculptors as they produce their masterpieces, which appeal to the culture of those of this generation and the next. It is like stilling the hand of the painter at his work. We measure the culture, the progress, and the advance of any era in the history of the world by calling attention to the drama of that period and to the art of that period in all its forms. You might as well tax painting and sculpture as to tax the drama. [Applause.]

And may I call attention to the Chautauqua organizations of the country and to the lyceums. They struggle along now under many difficulties. In every community reached by these organizations a few public-spirited citizens guarantee that the receipts shall not fall below a certain amount. When there are deficits, the guarantors make them good, and there never were as many deficits as now. This amendment will relieve them of a great burden—this tax collected on single admissions. Has not the time come to relieve them from the war taxes they pay? The amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] would do it. The communities which sustain these Chautauquas have submitted to these war taxes as long as they ought to submit. There ought to be a little propaganda started in favor of education and culture, and there ought to be less of the other kinds of propaganda to which this Congress has been subjected. The time has come when those who lead in the intellectual life of the smaller communities and who pay these Chautauqua deficits should demand of their Representatives here that they be relieved of the burden imposed by these war taxes. We may as well give them some relief now; if we fail, they will get it in the Senate, if they try. Neither the Senate nor the House can stand against the demands they can make. And the effort I am making now may have the effect of causing 5,000 communities throughout the land to demand of their Representatives that they be relieved of these taxes which bear so heavily on the intellectual life of the smaller cities. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, in order to get the floor I rise in pro forma opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, although I am really in favor of it. I am very glad to have the valuable aid of the gentleman from Illinois in securing the reduction on theater admissions. Since we have been giving away so many confidences in the committee, I wish to give away one of my own, but none other, and say that in the committee I strove strenuously to reduce the taxes on admissions. I wished to eliminate them altogether; but if it were not possible to eliminate the tax entirely, I contended that the exemption should go at least as high as $1. I was very desirous of favoring what in college days we were accustomed to call gallery gods. You all know the class I mean, the young man or young woman who wishes to see a good show but who can not afford to pay the fancy prices charged for an orchestra seat, but who can go into the gallery. One dollar will pay for a gallery seat at the very great majority of first-class performances of the spoken drama.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Without further breaking confidences in the committee, is it not fair to say that the gentleman's position had considerable support from others of us in the committee?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; the gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely correct. We did our best in the committee, each one trying to have put into the bill the things he thought for the best interest of his constituents and of the country. On account of the revenue that must be raised, we could not do all that we should have liked to do, like taking the tax off of automobiles and many other things for which there is no sound economic reason for having to bear a discriminatory tax. But we could not remove all of these taxes on account of the loss of revenue.

The drama was one thing about which there was a very deep concern on the part of a number of members of the committee, and I for one am glad to have such valiant support as the gentleman from Illinois always gives when he favors a proposition.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is not the tax on theater tickets a form of sales tax?

Mr. TILSON. Yes it is a very heavy sales tax and there is no economic justification for it. The only justification is that we must raise the revenue somewhere, on some industry that can stand it. It is a practical question that we have been considering from the beginning.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that it would be more just to remove the tax on transactions in the form of promissory notes and deeds of conveyance?

Mr. TILSON. Such taxes ought to be removed if they can be, but let me tell the gentleman that this is a tax on education. It is more than a tax on education because of the relaxation that the theater gives, the value of which to our human kind no one can estimate. The stimulation it gives may mean much more than can be measured by the price of admission or the tax.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. I sympathize with the gentleman in reducing taxes wherever it can be done, but I want to ask the gentleman has there been any request of the committee or of Congress, as far as the gentleman knows, from these parties concerned to take off the tax or reduce it?

Mr. TILSON. No, there has not; but I think some of us can see what the effect of a tax like this is.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. The gentleman from Illinois referred to the decrease of theaters which had been considerable. Does the gentleman attribute that to the tax on admissions?

Mr. TILSON. That is one of the reasons.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Coincidental with other causes.

Mr. TILSON. Undoubtedly the tax has had its effect, and I for one believe that the spoken drama as well as the moving pictures ought to be encouraged.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Does not the gentleman think that a theater that charges $4 admission for a ticket ought to be taxed? [Applause.] Let them put the price down so that people can go to them; they have got the prices up where nobody can go.

Mr. TILSON. I have not the time to go into that. My position when overruled as to eliminating all admission taxes was to exempt the tickets up to $1. If the gift tax and the cigarette tax are going to produce so much revenue—which I think they will not—we may still be able to put the exemption up to $1.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I, too, like the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], am more than gratified to find myself on the same side with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]. As he has so well stated, there is a serious situation in this country to-day. Throughout the country the small theater is rapidly disappearing. It is not entirely due to taxes. It is due to high transportation rates which make it difficult to transport the company from town to town for one-night stands. It is due to the great popularity of the movies, and it is due to high taxation. Mr. Chairman, if you want to look for the soul and the spirit of a nation, where do you look? You look to its literature and as part of that literature the spoken drama stands out. As Mr. Thomas so well pointed out to the Committee on Ways and Means, it is not fair to object by saying that at any one time the spoken drama as presented in the country in a given year, or even in a series of given years, can be classified as real literature. You never can tell what young man is maturing unknown and will some day develop the genius which will blossom forth and express in the written drama or in some written work the soul and spirit of America. Therefore anything which tends to discourage literary effort and production, which tends to discourage culture, is something which we should eliminate to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If this amendment be adopted, does it not affect all admissions for all kinds of entertainments, boxing matches, and everything above 50 cents? And if it does, what percentage of the total exemptions are the kind that the gentleman is talking about, as also were the gentleman from Connecticut and the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MILLS. There were two forms of tax exemptions proposed. One was to raise the exemption from 10 cents to 50 cents, or from a dollar to a dollar and a half. That is ill balanced because it relieves all those below a certain amount and exacts a full tax on all admissions above a certain amount. It is generally said that the poor man goes to the movies and that the rich man can well afford to pay a higher price for the legitimate drama, but anyone who has stood outside of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City, for instance, at about 6 o'clock in the evening, and has seen the long line formed on Broadway prepared to wait two hours in the cold to buy the cheap seats in the gallery, will know that love of good music and fine opera is not limited to those sitting in the boxes. [Applause.] As Mr. Thomas pointed out to me, while a man of small means may not often go to the theater or opera, and may go to the movies frequently, he does like to save up and certainly three or four times a year at least go and see something that will give him intellectual and spiritual stimulus in the form of a real drama of merit.

Just raising the exemption is an ill-balanced proposition. The proposition which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] suggests, and which was not suggested in the committee, appears to me to be eminently fair. If we can reduce the tax, reduce it right down the line, putting all of these entertainments on exactly the same basis, and relieve them, if we are going to relieve them, by the same percentage. Do not say that we are going to relieve the movies, that we are going to relieve the cheaper forms of entertainment, but that we are going to keep the maximum war tax as it exists to-day on that sort of entertainment which can be classified as art and which is of real educational and cultural benefit to our people.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I am deeply touched by the plea which has been made for the Metropolitan audience, and I also have seen hundreds of people there in line sitting, standing, and waiting for the box office to open, and it touches my heart to feel that those people are not going to sit there longer with the present tax imposed upon them, but that if we cut this tax in half and make it a few cents less they will have their chairs and their boxes reserved all along Broadway, as you see them to-day sitting patiently waiting for the box office. I also feel sympathy, and I am honest about it, for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who has made an honest, persuading appeal and who by the way has come over on this side to join with the new Republican insurgents. I tell you it is a dangerous thing to be called an insurgent, and the new brand is here supporting his plea for theater tax reduction. He is right undoubtedly, and we heard Mr. Thomas speak correctly so far as the educational effect goes; we are all agreed with both gentlemen, but do you realize, gentlemen of the committee, that you have been scolded time after time by the gentleman from New York who just took his seat because by the Garner amendment you have reduced tax receipts two or three hundred million dollars below the amount of necessary Treasury receipts? Next comes the automobile tax, that will be urged for a tax cut, and on top of that you are going to have the same plea made for a cut in the jewelry tax. Then comes the bonus for soldiers, and the gentlemen who are to-day urging the theater tax cut will be lined up against the bonus. They were against the effort to put a little more money into the Treasury through increased cigarette tax, but when it comes to the reduction of theater taxes——

Mr. TILSON. Oh, I did not think that it would add anything to the Treasury receipts.

Mr. FREAR. If you gentlemen are going to have a deficit of over $200,000,000 which is threatened by these friends on this side, and of course it depends upon the particular measure on which gentlemen are speaking as to their support or opposition, I suggest that if you want to save your tax bill, my Democratic friends—and it is your bill they say it is over here on the Republican side—be careful about some of these propositions your new friends are trying to vote onto the bill.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BACHARACH. The purpose, as I recall it, before the committee in asking for a cut in the admission tax was to take care of the theaters in small communities.

Mr. FREAR. Yes, in part.

Mr. BACHARACH. It was not to take care of the theaters in the large centers.

Mr. FREAR. It has not been shown what amount of money would be taken from the Treasury; it has not been shown at all that it will add one person to the audience through increased attendance by cutting the tax, however desirable. Mr. Thomas came before us, and I admire him, but you can not eat your cake and keep it, and if you want to preserve your bill I suggest to you gentlemen not to approve some of these tax cuts. We can not grant all the appeals, however worthy. I do not question the weight of argument, but why jeopardize the bill with unexpected tax cuts if a deficit is threatened?

Mr. Chairman, I again call attention to the 37½ per cent compromise tax proposal that is to be offered some time by a distinguished gentleman on this side of the aisle, and again I urge that we may know what he expects to offer and will we be given time to discuss the mysterious plan. Again I offer further argument asking that we be permitted to see the plan and to study its effect. Thirty-seven and one-half per cent may mean many things and be as impossible as the Mellon bill.

Mr. Chairman, Republicans who are more interested in legislation than in partisanship ask to see Mr. Mellon's mysterious revised 37½ per cent compromise for the original Mellon bill which it is announced Mr. LONGWORTH will offer as a substitute. Percentages mean little until relation to amounts contained in tax brackets are revealed. We ask to examine the brackets, percenatges, and all parts of the plan to learn just what it means before it is sprung on the House after debate has closed. That is the only fair course to pursue with a great tax bill involving $200,000,000 in income-tax rates.

The so-called scientific Mellon bill juggled income rates and tax brackets so as to mislead the public. It used a 25 per cent tax rate for the $100,000 bracket, whereas the 25 per cent bracket in existing law taxes incomes of only $54,000. The Mellon bill gave about 50 per cent reductions to large incomes but only 2 per cent cut on normal tax to the small taxpayer. This comes through juggling of tax brackets.

The Mellon bill can not be resurrected, but we ask to learn if Mr. Mellon's substitute is the Mellon bill under a different title and arrangement of brackets and rates.

Constant press reports of dissatisfaction among so-called insurgents who are for the 37½ per cent cut we are not disturbed about. We do ask Mr. LONGWORTH to put his 37½ per cent Mellon revised tax plan in the RECORD where it can be seen and studied. We have made no coalition with Democratic Members and never have had any. The Garner plan is not nearly as good as the one we offered either "scientifically" or to administer, but it is far more just than the Mellon bill. It favors 3,500,000 taxpayers where the Mellon bill favors 4,223, who get $75,500,000 tax reduction, or 50 per cent more than the 3,500,000 will receive. That is not politics but a cold fact in dollars and cents. Politics had no part in our support of the Garner plan.

Twice we have offered compromises to our Republican colleagues that would greatly relieve small taxpayers, and as regularly they have been rejected by Mr. Mellon, who controls the situation, so we are justly suspicious of any tax plan not fully understood in advance.

We offered four amendments in this committee affecting tax-free securities, undistributed profits, publicity of records, and excess profits. All were sound in principle and would have provided more than enough to reduce corporate normal taxes and to finance a soldiers' compensation bill. All were refused.

These amendments were opposed by Democratic leaders, whether called insurgents or irregulars, who joined with Republican leaders for that purpose, as they had a right to do without criticism. We asked others to offer the inheritance and gift tax amendments, which include original proposals offered several weeks ago. No pride of authorship occurs over any good amendment.

Secretary Mellon strongly opposed all of these amendments and also any soldiers' bonus, and opposes many other views we hold. Responsibility for the result rests with his attempt to force his bill through Congress aided by a press propaganda costing several millions of dollars.

As one of the wealthiest men in the world and a controlling factor in scores of great corporations, his viewpoint and ours naturally differs, but that does not make his views a standard of Republicanism.

We are free to act as a group and have had many Members come to influence us to accept some proposal of Mr. LONGWORTH of a "sight unseen" jack-knife plan that we suspect on analysis may be a twin sister of the Mellon plan. No one knows until it is submitted. Why can not we see it?

We insist Congress and the public are entitled to see any plan Mr. LONGWORTH expects to offer in order that brackets, percentages, and estimates may be placed on the table for inspection.

After over two weeks' debate and voting he holds the mysterious "37½ per cent" proposal up his sleeve. We are not concerned in any party label on any tax plan, because it is not a political question, but we have supported the best plan thus far offered that will give relief to taxpayers least able to pay. Our own plan was better than either of the others now before the committee.

Five hundred million dollars was handed out by Congress last session to large income beneficiaries through the repeal of the excess-profits tax and reduction of surtaxes from 65 per cent to 50 per cent, the present rate. Ninety-four Republicans then voted for the 50 per cent surtax rate last session, and we believe any 37½ per cent rates framed on the Mellon bill tax brackets or on half the rates of existing law are unjust to taxpayers in the lower brackets, of whom 90 per cent receive under $10,000 incomes.

The House is entitled to know the facts. That has been the trouble with the Mellon rates, which were prepared in secret by whom or by what interests no one has yet been willing to state. We ask to see and study the substitute plan and discuss it, if necessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to submit.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have a substitute which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA to the amendment offered by Mr. RAINEY: Page 160, line 21, strike out "50 cents" and insert "$1."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Perhaps I did not understand the amendment when it was read. I ask unanimous consent that it be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be read again.

The substitute amendment was again read.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. I did not understand the amendment as it was first read.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this would bring your exemption on taxes on admissions up to $1, and I believe it would serve the very purpose that the gentleman from Missouri is urging.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If I understand exactly the parliamentary status, the adoption of the gentleman's substitute would defeat the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It would.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is a substitute, to take the place of it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Would the gentleman like to have some information as to the amount of money involved? I ask that question not in any spirit of opposition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I wish the gentleman would give it now.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The proposal of the committee creates a loss of approximately $33,000,000 out of $70,000,000 in last year's tax. The proposal of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] would practically cut the remaining balance in half, so that it would leave us $18,500,000. The gentleman's [Mr. LAGUARDIA'S] amendment would take off about $7,000,000 more than the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; but do not take up all my time.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I wanted to get the accurate figures. The gentleman from Illinois is $8,000,000 short. The estimate was $73,000,000. The result is $73,000,000 less $40,000,000, which is $33,000,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It was $73,000,000 in 1923 and $72,000,000 in 1924.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is enough, when we are $300,000,000 short—or ahead—according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would tax the big prize fights, and I would like to see them taxed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think a young man who has aspirations to come to Congress ought to go and see prize fights. He would at least learn not to hit below the belt. [Laughter.]

This would exempt admissions up to $1 and it would make it possible to encourage good music as well as high-class drama. If you simply reduce them by one-half, the public will not get the benefit of it. You are not going to decrease the cost of admissions as long as producers in large cities are in collusion with these ticket speculators. It was pointed out that high prices are charged for admissions in my city. It is quite true, but the amendment will not bring prices down, while my substitute will at least relieve all taxes under the $1 rate. If you exempt admissions up to $1 it would encourage high-class drama in the provinces—if I may refer to the rural districts as provinces—and at the same time it will bring a great deal of relief in the adjustment of the tax. I am informed by the collector of internal revenue in the theatrical district in New York, Mr. Charles Anderson, and his assistant, Mr. Charles Largy, that they have inaugurated a system of supervision and are now collecting taxes. Mr. Largy, who is an expert on excise taxes, believes that a cut in the tax will not redound to the benefit of the theater-going public, while the exemption up to $1 will surely benefit the public and tend to reduce theater admissions.

As to figures just now submitted, why, I will say, with all due deference, that the gentlemen have been off so often I am sure they are way off now on their estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, are not five minutes left?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized against the substitute.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do not know what the substitute is, Mr. Chairman, but if gentlemen are interested enough to turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 16, page 2498, they will find a number of excise taxes, amounting to $461,256,330.75. We have recommended the repeal of these to the extent of $106,392,757.56.

Now, here is the situation as I see it: I would like to repeal every single one of these taxes—every one of them. But, gentlemen, if you are going to repeal them you have got to get the money somewhere else to run the Government. That is all there is about it, and you might as well understand it. And I am just a little bit suspicious of any proposition that comes along that cuts down the revenue by $20,000,000, and although the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who has the best of purposes in mind, favors it, yet my friend from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] and my friend from New York [Mr. MILLS] are very anxious that these taxes should be taken off.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This being a substitute, it would do away with the Rainey amendment, if adopted, and would not take off as much money.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I am in favor of any substitute or anything else that will avoid taking this money out of the Treasury. Remember we were collecting $70,000,000 from moving pictures and other admissions. We repeal this law $23,000,000 by exempting anything under 50 cents. We did that on the theory that the people who attended those shows are better able to afford paying the tax than those who attend the small shows. I do not know what the gentleman from Connecticut or the gentleman from New York is going to say about this tax. Just a while ago the gentleman from New York said we would get no revenue from the cigarette amendment that I offered. Yet he is here trying to repeal $20,000,000 of income that will be derived from the taxes in question.

That would be more than all the increase, according to the estimate, because you remember he said the estimate of the estate tax would not exceed $20,000,000, yet at one fell swoop he desires to remove that much revenue from this bill, which has been increased in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Is it not true that these legitimate theaters are given a benefit under this bill in that the special seating tax on them is repealed?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; we have repealed the special seating tax on theaters also. We thought we had done pretty well to reduce this tax almost 50 per cent on admissions to the theaters of the country. I think that is a very fine reduction. If you would take some of these other taxes and split them up and then retain this tax it would suit me better than to cut out this entire tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I received my information from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], but I misunderstood him when he spoke before, because it seems this would take off more than the Rainey amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If you will sustain the committee's arrangement as to this, we will vote down both of these amendments, and I hope the Committee of the Whole will vote down both of them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the gentleman now forming an unholy alliance?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have had some alliances with the gentleman from New York, but according to the vote it would appear that the gentleman is a little wishy-washy and can not hold on.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Texas knows that the "gentleman from New York" is not wishy-washy at all.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to have somebody give some idea as to how many of these high-class educational entertainment admissions will be affected as compared to the other kind, which are purely recreational.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have not that information, but the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH] is good enough to hand me this information: The number of theaters charging from 10 to 40 cents is 13,443; charging from 50 cents to 99 cents, 430; and charging $1 and more, 27. As I understand it that is the evidence of Mr. Pettyjohn and that is the information you want.

Mr. BEGG. Then this amendment in reality, if adopted, would affect any form of entertainment that charges more than 50 cents, like prize fights, horse racing, and everything?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; all character of entertainments. But, gentlemen, let me call your attention to the fact that we must have revenue. I had a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury this morning which I will put in the RECORD. I would like to have the attention of the gentlemen on my left, although I do not care about their attention particularly if they will not disturb me in talking to this side, in case they do not want to hear what I have to say. The Secretary of the Treasury this morning sent me an estimate, or a part of an estimate, which I have inserted in the RECORD to-day, as I have all estimates sent to me by the Secretary of the Treasury. He estimates that out of the income tax under the present bill there will be a loss of $483,000,000 for the calendar year 1925 and that under the rates of the so-called Mellon plan there would be a loss of $350,000,000, a mere mistake over his first estimate of $130,000,000.

I hope the committee will not cut out all of these taxes, so that the country will get the idea that we have a deficit in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, when the committee was considering the bill, after long examination and hearings of a week, we concluded that we could safely assign about $110,000,000 of the reduction to be effected to a reduction in the excise taxes. We then went through the list of excise taxes and selected those in which the industries affected by them were being injured by the taxes imposed. We took up the question of the admissions tax and we propose in this bill to reduce the tax on admissions, including the seating tax, some $33,000,000. That was a fair apportionment of the reduction to this industry, and it relieved the most necessitous cases.

Under the bill a person paying $4 for a theater ticket will pay 40 cents. Under the proposal of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] a person will pay 20 cents, and that will reduce the taxes on this industry $51,000,000 out of $70,000,000 collected.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], proposing that no tax shall be levied on admissions of $1 or less, reduces the tax $58,000,000, or $25,000,000 more than the committee thought it could allot to this industry in comparison with and in justice and in fairness to all other industries. If we are to further reduce this tax we will not have money enough to effect reductions already proposed and we are by so much more reducing the revenue.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Which one of these amendments will result in the greatest reduction of revenue?

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York reduces it $58,000,000, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois reduces it $51,000,000, taking into account the reduction proposed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 39, noes 129.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAINEY: After the word "any," in line 18, page 160, strike out the word "place" and insert the following: "theater or opera house where spoken drama or opera is produced, to any Chautauqua or lyceum program or to any lecture."

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to make the proposed tax of 1 cent for each 20 cents apply only to theaters where spoken drama is produced or to operas or to Chautauqua or lyceum programs or to lectures; that is all. The other entertainments will be still subjected to existing rates, including prize fights.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman be willing to include concerts?

Mr. RAINEY. I accept that amendment, "or concerts." I thank the gentleman.

Now, in my time, I ask to be read a letter addressed to the Ways and Means Committee by one of the greatest playwrights and dramatic writers of this generation.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, has not all time for debate on this amendment been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Did the gentleman intend to exempt prize fights?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; the prize fights can pay all the tax you may put on them.

Mr. BACHARACH. Does the gentleman include baseball?

Mr. RAINEY. No, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 5, 1924.

From: Augustus Thomas.

To: Ways and Means Committee, House of Representatives.

Subject: Re amusement tax.

GENTLEMEN: I am addressing this note to each member of the Ways and Means Committee. In doing so, I ask you not to mistake an effort at brevity for indifference. I write rather than project my nuisance value in personal calls.

I believe that the committee's present decision to remove the amusement tax from tickets of 50 cents and under is a mistake, for the following reasons:

1. It favors the motion picture almost exclusively as against the spoken drama.

2. It not only fails to relieve the spoken drama but adds to its burden, because it increases the advantage of the mechanical reproduction over the personal human attempt.

3. It invites the implication that the poor are not intelligent—the presumption that the motion picture is their preference.

4. It overlooks the historical value of the spoken drama, which the printer can preserve indefinitely, in favor of the celluloid picture, relatively ephemeral and relatively mute. An illuminating parallel would be to change a Member's "leave to print" in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to a leave to print only his portrait—perhaps, even while speaking.

5. As a tax reduction, it is not scientific. If the intention is to take from the $80,000,000 present amusement tax $33,000,000, or approximately, 40 per cent, the result can be more accurately devised by reducing the present 10 per cent tax to 6 per cent.

I respectfully submit that it is safer to reduce a patient's weight by training down all over than by any amputation. And in this case a horizontal reduction would be an acknowledgment of impartiality, whereas, a bloc detachment, discriminating against the higher sections of the business, has a punitive color that can not be in the committee's intentions, despite provocations by speculators.

I ask the committee to remember that, in asking for this consideration of the industry or profession, I do not have in mind the interest of managers or producers so much as I have the welfare of the people at large, who want the spoken drama and the better kinds of music as unhampered as the public safety will permit.

I had hope for unanimous consent to present this at the full meeting of the committee, feeling that five minutes so endured by them might conserve as many hours of further adjustment in the House, the Senate, and in the conference committees.

Respectfully yours,

AUGUSTUS THOMAS.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to add that the loss in revenue here will be negligible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment presents the greatest case of reversing I ever knew. The fact of the matter is the gentleman is doing just the opposite from what he really intends. This puts the tax load on the very objects he is trying to exempt and exempts prize fights and movies and all such things as that.

Mr. RAINEY. No; it does not accomplish anything of the kind.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, yes; it is perfectly plain that it does.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The language is taxing only the things that are mentioned.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the bill at present reads that a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place on or after such date, and the gentleman's amendment——

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, may I modify my amendment so that there will be no misunderstanding about it?

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman's amendment provides "a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any theater where the spoken drama," and so forth—I can not recall all of it—and all other things, including prize fights and movies, are exempted from the tax and only the things the gentleman names are taxed.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to modify my amendment. I think the gentleman is right about that. I would like to modify my amendment so that it will read "any place except theaters," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. The Clerk will report the modification for the information of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the paragraph as amended be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be read as amended by the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAINEY: Page 160, line 18, after the word "place," insert: "Except theater or opera house where spoken drama or opera is produced, to any Chautauqua or lyceum program or to any lecture or concert."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 160, line 21, strike out "50" and insert in lieu thereof "20."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if my amendment is adopted every 20-cent picture show in the United States will be exempt from tax, and only the ones charging admission fee above 20 cents will be taxed under the provisions of this bill. If you adopt my amendment you will add to this bill approximately $18,000,000 in taxes. In other words, you add about $18,000,000 to the taxes provided in this bill. If you want to raise revenue you can do it by this amendment without hurting the poor people who want to go to picture shows. They can not go to the 20-cent shows as they exist now without being taxed. Let me apply this amendment to the situation in Washington, because the situation is practically the same all over the United States. Take the 50-cent picture shows here in town, like the Rialto or the Metropolitan or the Columbia or the Palace, and such picture shows at 50 cents would still pay the tax, which they ought to do; but we have at least fifteen 20-cent picture shows scattered all over Washington, and after a picture is once shown at these 50-cent places it then goes to these other picture houses scattered over town and the same 50-cent picture is shown to the people for 20 cents, so that they get the benefit of it. They get to see the same identical 50-cent picture at the 20-cent shows that the people pay 50 cents for at the places I have mentioned.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the gentleman altogether forgetting the lectures and the concerts which are usually priced at 50 cents?

Mr. BLANTON. There have been very few of them that I have attended that have been under $1 or $1.50 or $2. I want to say that if you can show me any concert that is staged now for 50 cents I will show you one that is not much account, and the people do not want to go to it. The ones that are good are charging as much as 75 cents, $1, $1.50, and $2, and I say that the people who go to them ought to pay the tax, and I am not in favor of reducing the tax on the higher-priced ones. The ones who are able to go to the high-priced ones, let them pay the tax; but there is a reason for taking the tax off the 20-cent picture shows. It is in behalf of the people of moderate circumstances, who are not able to pay more. If you want to raise this $18,000,000 additional revenue, vote for this amendment. If you do not want to raise it, vote against it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. If the member of the Ways and Means Committee wants the floor, I will yield to the gentleman, as no other Member of the House has a right to take the floor if my distinguished friend from Massachusetts wants it.

Mr. TREADWAY. The facetiousness of the gentleman from Texas is illuminating, but he knows that I would not intrude on his rights. I supposed that his time had expired and that he had yielded the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I am through, anyway, and gladly yield the floor.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman make it 10 minutes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will make it 10 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] by striking out "20," in line 21, and making it "75" cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TREADWAY moves to amend the amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON by striking out "20" and inserting "75"

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, a 75-cent exemption seems to me in a partial way to take care of the admissions to the spoken drama, referred to this afternoon. There is perhaps no theater where there are not some seats at 75 cents. If a person really wants that intellectual opportunity that our friend from Illinois describes, an educational opportunity, actually desires to attend the spoken drama, they can do so for 75 cents. I was in favor of this in the committee and I am still in favor of the exemption of the tax on admission prices. Seventy-five cents will not get into the prize ring nor other places that we do not want to exempt from taxation. It will mean a difference in the bill of $10,000,000. Last year under the taxes provided in the bill the revenue was $33,000,000, and the loss under this amendment would be $10,000,000. I think we can very well make the amount of the exemption at 75 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. There are still five minutes of time left.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment. After the section add the proviso——

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, there is a motion pending before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. RAINEY. Very well; I will withdraw my amendment and offer it after the amendment is disposed of.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LOWREY as a substitute: Page 160, lines 21, 22, after the word "admission" at the end of line 20, strike out the semicolon and insert a period, and then omit all of lines 21 and 22.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we have got the whole matter into a kind of a tangled web. The proposition of my friend from Texas is to cut down the amount to 20 cents. That would mean that all the cheapest shows—the shows in which there would be the least improvement and the least culture—should be free from tax and encouraged.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWREY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Under the gentleman's amendment the tax on a 5-cent admission would be half a cent.

Mr. LOWREY. They would not put it as low as 5 cents.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But there are 5 cents admissions.

Mr. LOWREY. If we are going to encourage anything, I fully agree with the proposition to encourage the entertainment that will really appeal to the literary and cultural side of the people and mean something to them. It seems to me that the bill as it stands encourages the cheaper shows, those that there would be less culture in, and taxes those that are more cultural.

But I believe that they are all in a sense a luxury. And I believe in the principle of taxing luxuries rather than necessaries. The gentleman from Texas said that if we make these changes, if we cut off this revenue, we must put it on somewhere else. I do not know where we could put on a tax better than to put it on the luxuries. I believe in making such revenues as are possible out of chewing gum, candy, soft drinks, admissions to places of amusement, and those things that are absolutely luxuries. They may have some value, of course, for recreational purposes, but at least they do not stand where necessities stand. Therefore I simply offer the amendment to go back to where we were and make no distinction, and let them stand on the same basis and tax all picture places and places of amusement.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Since the gentleman is about through, I want to say that there are 5-cent admissions in some of the big cities for children in the galleries, and that at amusement parks there are 5-cent admissions. Of course, the gentleman's proposal would mean that they would have to charge an additional penny in order to collect the tax of half a cent.

Mr. LOWREY. I am willing to let it stand in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAINEY: Page 162, at the end of line 14, add the following:

"Provided, That no tax shall be imposed upon admissions to chautauqua or lyceum programs or to any lectures or concerts."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proviso is not germane to the paragraph, which deals with admissions to roof gardens, cabarets, and other similar entertainments.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the further point of order that this matter has been voted on once before where an attempt was made to exempt these same matters enumerated in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, and it was voted down.

Mr. RAINEY. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. This simply attempts to exempt lectures, concerts, chautauqua programs, and lyceum programs. This provides that none of the five preceding paragraphs shall so operate as to provide for admission taxes to lectures, concerts, lyceums, or chautauquas.

Mr. BLANTON. I remind the Chair that in the amendment which sought to exempt the spoken drama, it also embraced all of these matters.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, it is very clear that the committee has never voted this proposition down, and the omission of the words "spoken drama" makes it an entirely new amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is offered at the end of paragraph (a). Paragraph (a) begins on page 160 and ends on page 162, with line 15. That is what constitutes the paragraph. The amendment is offered as an amendment to that paragraph as a proviso. That paragraph includes all kinds of entertainments, not only cabarets and roof gardens but almost everything else embraced in the realm of entertainment. The Chair thinks the amendment is germane to the paragraph and overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division, the Chair having announced himself in doubt, there were—ayes 47, noes 112.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands tellers. All in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Four Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a letter from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, with the exhibits, showing the effect of the proposal to require Federal reserve banks to pay 2 per cent interest on reserve balances.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I might object—I do not know—if I had a chance.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that when a gentleman is on his feet trying to get the attention of the Chair during the submission of a unanimous consent request he should be given the opportunity to object.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Nebraska was trying to address the Chair at the time the Chair was putting the unanimous-consent request, the Chair will recognize him. The Chair will again put the request. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Washington, February 13, 1924.

Hon. OTIS WINGO,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: Pursuant to our telephonic conversation, I am inclosing for your information a copy of statements showing the net earnings of the Federal reserve banks for 1921, 1922, and 1923, and what would happen if 2 per cent interest were paid by the banks on realized balances to member banks.

You will note in 1923 the Federal reserve banks of the whole system would have lost, to be exact, $24,738,854, and in addition they could have paid no dividend, could have set apart no surplus, nor pay any franchise tax; whereas in 1922 the 12 Federal reserve banks would have lost $19,124,764 and only one bank in the system could have paid any part of its dividend; that was the bank at Philadelphia, which could have paid $120,976 on its dividend. You will note that none of the banks would have been able to have paid dividend, surplus, or franchise tax. In 1921 the banks could have paid 2 per cent interest, amounting to $33,457,380, but this was one of the unusual years that came about by financing the war and when the banks were imposing a 6 per cent and 7 per cent rediscount rate, which, as you know, was not very popular.

In my opinion, an attempt to pay 2 per cent interest on deposits is wrong in principle and should not be imposed upon the banks. If it should be imposed the Federal reserve banks will have to buy paper in the open market in competition with member banks and nonmember banks in order to make its dividend, interest, and expenses. I think you will agree that such practice would be detrimental to the individual banks.

It must be borne in mind well that at the time the banks were making these big profits it was while they were financing the war, and it should not be used as a pretext for the passage of an act to provide for 2 per cent interest on realized balances.

I am also handing you an analysis of the statements which will be self-explanatory.

Very truly yours,

D. R. CRISSINGER, Governor.

Average daily reserve balances of member banks with the Federal reserve banks during 1923 aggregated $1,872,000,000. It is apparent, therefore, that to pay interest at 2 per cent per annum on member bank reserve balances would have necessitated the Federal reserve banks earning approximately thirty-seven and one-half millions in excess of operating expenses and dividend requirements. During 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921, when borrowings at the Federal reserve banks were at an unprecedented level because of the large demands for credit due to war conditions, the Federal reserve banks might have paid interest on member banks' reserve deposits and at the same time paid a franchise tax to the Government. During the past two years, however, when conditions have been more normal, borrowings from Federal reserve banks and consequently their net earnings have been on a greatly reduced scale. Net earnings of the banks during 1923 amounted to $12,700,000, while 2 per cent on reserve deposits of member banks would have amounted to about $37,450,000, or three times the net earnings. Of the net earnings of $12,700,000, $6,500,000 went to member banks to pay the 6 per cent dividend on their capital stock and the balance was divided between the surplus accounts of the Federal reserve banks and the Government in the form of a franchise tax. Approximately the same results are shown for 1922, in which net earnings of the Federal reserve banks were $16,500,000, while 2 per cent interest on reserve deposits of member banks would have amounted to $35,600,000.

It is apparent from these figures that in normal times Federal reserve banks could not pay 2 per cent interest on reserve balances out of their current earnings.

It should also be borne in mind that any payment to the member banks in the form of interest on their reserve balances will affect materially the amounts paid to the United States Government as a franchise tax. During 1921, for example, the Government was paid a franchise tax of $63,100,000. If member banks had been paid 2 per cent interest on their reserve balances, the Government would have received only $33,800,000 as a franchise tax. In 1922 and 1923, however, when earnings of the reserve banks were on a much lower level and comparatively small portions of the 2 per cent interest on reserve balances of member banks could have been paid by the respective Federal reserve banks, the Government would have received no franchise tax, unless the Federal reserve act were so amended as to require the payment of a franchise tax to the Government before the payment of any interest to member banks on their reserve balances.

Net earnings of Federal reserve banks, distribution thereof, and effect upon such distribution if 2 per cent interest were paid on reserve deposits of member banks.

[1] As adjusted on Dec. 31, 1922, by charging to surplus account and paying to the Government an additional franchise tax for 1921.

Minus sign (−) indicates that the amount required to pay 2 per cent interest on reserve deposits of member banks exceeded net earnings by the amount shown.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) No tax shall be levied under this title in respect of (1) any admissions all the proceeds of which inure (A) exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational, or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations, societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, or societies or organizations conducted for the sole purpose of maintaining symphony orchestras and receiving substantial support from voluntary contributions, or of improving any city, town, village, or other municipality, or of maintaining a cooperative or community center moving-picture theater—if no part of the net earnings thereof inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; or (B) exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States; or (C) exclusively to the benefit of persons who have served in such forces and are in need; or (D) exclusively to the benefit of posts or organizations of war veterans, or auxiliary units or societies of any such posts or organizations, if such posts, organizations, units, or societies are organized in the United States or any of its possessions, and if no part of their net earnings inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; or (2) any admissions to agricultural fairs if no part of the net earnings thereof inures to the benefit of any stockholders or members of the association conducting the same, or admissions to any exhibit, entertainment, or other pay feature conducted by such association as part of any such fair, if the proceeds therefrom are used exclusively for the improvement, maintenance, and operation of such agricultural fairs.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 163, line 9, after the semicolon, insert: "or (E) exclusively to the benefit of members of the police or fire departments of any city, town, village, or other municipality, or the dependents or heirs of such members."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, unless some member of the committee has objection, I will accept this amendment.

Mr. YOUNG. I have objection. There are too many of them in there now.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the committee. The facts are as follows: On last New Year's Day the firemen and the policemen of Jacksonville, Fla., gave an exhibition for the benefit of the disabled and retired firemen and policemen and for their wives and orphans. It was purely a charitable exhibition. No war tax was charged. In October, before giving this exhibition, they asked the Treasury Department to tell them whether any tax would be required. In November they again asked if any tax would be required.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Was this carnival supervised and put on by one of these professional concerns that travel about, drumming up that sort of business?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I shall come to that in a moment. On December 27 they took it up again with the Treasury Department, and on the 29th of December, just before New Year's Day, they were notified that a tax would be required, but in the meantime nearly all of the tickets had been allotted or sold, and, as I understand, no war tax was charged.

The field day was under the direct supervision of the city commissioners of Jacksonville, and my information is City Commissioner Fred Valz was the chairman. The city commissioners of Jacksonville, under a State law, are permitted to assess a tax against her citizens to take care of these people, but the funds were not sufficient, so they held this field day and expect to make same an annual event. I have here a list of the retired and disabled firemen and policemen and the list of the widows and minors, showing 26 in the police department and 17 in the fire department.

For the benefit of my good friend from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] I will illustrate. Two hundred tickets would be allotted a business man of Jacksonville. They would simply take those tickets to help out the firemen and policemen, because they appreciated what they did for them. This was purely a charitable proposition. The policemen and firemen simply staged this exhibition. One of the policemen would engage in a boxing match with a fireman, and so on. Many hundreds of people in Jacksonville bought tickets, but did not attend the performance; they simply bought the tickets to indicate their appreciation of what the firemen and policemen were doing. But the Treasury Department held that it was not purely a charitable entertainment, as some were on the retired list, and therefore the tax should have been collected. I understand the Treasury officials now realize that the tax should not have been imposed on such exhibitions as that referred to. I do not hesitate to state it was not my intention to tax same, and I do not believe it was the intention of Congress. But unless my amendment is adopted, in view of the ruling of the department, next year those who desire to assist the policemen and firemen must pay the tax.

So often we forget those who help us. These men risk their lives to save our lives and protect our property, and I sincerely trust my amendment will be adopted. If it is adopted, it will not only help this charitable cause—or benevolent, if you desire to so call it—at Jacksonville, Fla., but will also apply to every town or city.

I think, in fairness to those of the department who have handled this matter, I should say they have been very courteous to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa make his motion?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I offer to the Sears amendment. At the end of the Sears amendment add "and if no part of their net earnings inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual."

Mr. SEARS of Florida. That is covered in my amendment.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. What is the language of the gentleman's amendment in that respect?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk, without objection, will again report the amendment.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I would like to have my amendment read first, and then the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] understood the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of Texas to the amendment offered by Mr. SEARS of Florida: At the end of the Sears amendment add "and if no part of their net earnings inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No stockholder is concerned at all.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may we have the Sears amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the Sears amendment, with the amendment of the gentleman from Texas added to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS of Florida: Page 163, line 9, after the semicolon, insert "or (E) exclusively to the benefit of the members of the police or fire department of any city, town, village, or other municipality, or the dependents or heirs of such members; and if no part of their net earnings inures to any private stockholder or individual."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The reason I offered the language is to make it conform to the other exceptions in the bill.

Now, I am not sure at all but what if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida is adopted, one of these entertainments could come along and advertise that it is for the benefit of the firemen and policemen and take a part of the proceeds for their private individual benefit, and I have offered identically the same language in order to protect the Treasury against an instance of that kind. I think we ought to do it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The provision requires that it shall be exclusively for the benefit of the policemen and firemen.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; but that is language that I am not certain would preclude a division of the proceeds.

Mr. HAWLEY. If I understand the amendment of the gentleman correctly, or any part of it, it is to forbid the payment to individuals. I just heard the amendment read. It is hard to know what application would be had.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. In your amendment you provide that no part of the proceeds shall inure to any individual?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Could they not easily evade that by hiring a man and putting him in as an expense?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. They could probably do that in any of these other provisions of the bill. The only purpose I had in offering the amendment was to make it conform to the several paragraphs under discussion.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. All the way through the bill we have used the word "shareholder" where stockholder is meant. It would be in conformity to the bill if the gentleman would change his amendment from "private stockholder" to "shareholder."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. My amendment is in the same language as the language of the paragraph under discussion.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the old bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No; in the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATRES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment on page 163, line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATRES: Page 163, line 4, after the words "benefit of," insert "National Guard organizations."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, speaking for myself—I have not had time to consult the committee—I will personally accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Page 163, line 14, strike out the words "as part of any such fair."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, there are in this country a number of county fairs that were organized and are being conducted for the purpose of stimulating interest in agriculture. These fairs hang up a large number of prizes each year for livestock and farm products. A number of them have been conducted at a loss in the past few years, and they are giving entertainments during the winter months, the proceeds from which are covered into the treasury for the purpose of making up deficits made in the past.

I am sure there could be no objection to this amendment. The aggregate amount which the Federal Treasury would lose from the adoption of my amendment certainly could not be large, and I think if we adopt it it will result in putting all of these agricultural fairs on a sounder financial basis.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the purpose of my friend from Minnesota, and I would be very glad to agree to this amendment if I did not fear it could be so easily abused and afford opportunity for evasion. Therefore I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, have I used all of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman yielded the floor.

Mr. KNUTSON. I just yielded to the gentleman from Iowa. How can there be any evasion of this tax, any more than there can be an evasion of any other tax? The proceeds of these entertainments are covered into the fair treasury; no individuals are on the pay rolls of those fairs, consequently no individual will benefit from such entertainments. The fair as a whole and the community wherein the fair is situated are the beneficiaries.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Answering the question of the gentleman from Minnesota, I wish to say that we have given these fairs every advantage. So long as the entertainments are a part of the fairs we do not impose any tax on them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were—ayes 47, noes 65.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Nine Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 163, line 4, after the words "National Guard organizations," which were just inserted, insert the words "Reserve officers' associations or organizations." That simply puts reserve officers' associations or organizations on the same footing with National Guard associations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Maryland: At the end of the amendment just adopted, in line 4, on page 163, add the following: "Reserve officers' associations or organizations."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Maryland) there were—ayes 66, noes 30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(d) The price (exclusive of the tax to be paid by the person paying for admission) at which every admission ticket or card is sold shall be conspicuously and indelibly printed, stamped, or written on the face or back of that part of the ticket which is to be taken up by the management of the theater, opera, or other place of amusement, together with the name of the vendor if sold other than at the ticket office of the theater, opera, or other place of amusement. Whoever sells an admission ticket or card on which the name of the vendor and price is not so printed, stamped, or written, or at a price in excess of the price so printed, stamped, or written thereon, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $100.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this provision is not within the jurisdiction of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. McKEOWN. The provision provides for a misdemeanor in the regulation of the sale of these tickets.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the bill has been referred to the committee.

Mr. McKEOWN. I just want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is a taxing bill and should not contain anything in the nature of regulatory provisions, and this provision attempts to regulate and makes a violation of the regulations a misdemeanor.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, the purpose of it is the collection of the tax.

Mr. McKEOWN. This committee has no right to provide penalties. That is a right which belongs to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This committee has been doing it ever since the organization of the Union.

Mr. McKEOWN. But that does not make it right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds that this was referred to the committee and the reference to the committee gives it jurisdiction. If a point of order is to be made, raising the jurisdiction of the committee to report a bill, it should be raised when the bill is reported to the House. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman a question about paragraph (d).

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On what page?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Page 163, at the bottom of the page which was just read. I want to know whether the regulation about printing and stamping these tickets applies only to tickets providing admissions to theaters where the taxes are imposed? In other words, is that regulation made mandatory upon the theaters which charge 50 cents and less?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it only applies to those where the tax is to be collected.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I wanted to be sure about that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is my understanding of the Treasury regulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 501. On and after the date this title takes effect there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 801 of the revenue act of 1921, a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of any amount paid on or after such date, for any period after such date, (a) as dues or membership fees (where the dues or fees of an active resident annual member are in excess of $10 per year) to any social, athletic, or sporting club or organization; or (b) as initiation fees to such a club or organization, if such fees amount to more than $10, or if the dues or membership fees (not including initiation fees) of an active resident annual member are in excess of $10 per year; such taxes to be paid by the person paying such dues or fees: Provided, That there shall be exempted from the provisions of this section all amounts paid as dues or fees to a fraternal society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system. In the case of life membership a life member shall pay annually, at the time for the payment of dues by active resident annual members, a tax equivalent to the tax upon the amount paid by such a member, but shall pay no tax upon the amount paid for life membership.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire: Page 164, line 24, after the word "system" insert a comma and the following: "or to any local fraternal organization among the students of a college or university."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have not had time to consult the members of the committee, but is there any objection to this?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No; that is all right.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATKINS: Page 165, line 4, after the word "membership" strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following: "Provided, That there shall be exempted from taxation under this section all amounts paid as dues or membership fees where the amount so paid is $50 or less per year to any institution or club organized and operated exclusively for social, recreational, educational, and other nonprofitable purposes, not organized for profit, and no part of the earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is very brief and very plain. Its object is the thing I want to explain for just a moment. You have exempted by this section 501 fraternal societies, orders, or associations operating under the lodge system. Section 231 exempts the club itself.

In Portland we have an athletic club. It is an amateur association for the young men, women, and children of that community. It is an educational institution. There they conduct various games and classes for the development of the youth of that community. The fees are less than $50 and over $10; the institution is a civic pride, an asset, a club where the families of the city commingle. It is not an athletic club in the sense of holding exhibitions and prize fights and things of that kind for profit, but it is an institution developing the youth, training them, and I hope the committee will adopt this amendment.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. It is a social club, is it not?

Mr. WATKINS. It is a social organization—recreational, or rather educational, I should say.

Mr. YOUNG. We have a number of clubs of that kind in the United States that are required to pay a tax. Why do you want to fill this bill with continual exceptions and exemptions?

Mr. WATKINS. This is an educational association and ought to be exempt.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? How would the gentleman's amendment help the club?

Mr. WATKINS. The club now is having a very hard time in getting young men, women, and children there to join, because they will not pay the tax and the dues, and if we will eliminate the tax from these dues then the young men and the children will join; at least we will eliminate the thing that has been an obstacle.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Are there not a great many clubs of this character in the United States that are having a hard time to get members to join them on account of the fees?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes; I have letters from business men all over my State stating that conditions in this country are terrible and that we are having terribly hard times under this administration, but that does not alter this situation. Here is an educational institution for the young men and the young women and children of the community, and here you are exempting chewing gum, yachts, motor boats, dirks, and bowie knives. Why can not you give these educational institutions, like the one in Portland and in other cities for aught I know, some chance to develop the youth and the children of the community? I do not think the tax amounts to anything, so far as the total is concerned, but it is very material to an institution of this character. President Harding was out there, and this club gave over its grounds for the occasion, for which no charges were made. If you go to any other club of this sort, you have to pay, but this institution affords an opportunity for things I have mentioned, and I hope the committee will adopt the amendment. It is almost a life and death matter, so far as this wonderful institution is concerned.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Who pays the dues to this club?

Mr. WATKINS. The children and the young men—anyone a member. And by this act they have to pay the tax, too.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Children pay $50 a year?

Mr. WATKINS. It is about $48 a year for regular members.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And the children pay those dues?

Mr. WATKINS. Well, their parents pay them; yes, and whoever pays the dues must pay the tax. For the benefit of the House, before it takes action, I simply want to read a telegram from this institution. It is as follows:

Hon. ELTON WATKINS,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Hundreds of young fellows in Multnomah Club at period of their lives when earnings are small are taxed 10 per cent of $48 dues, though club is locally exempt, being an educational institution. Would you talk to Representative HAWLEY on Ways and Means Committee asking limit in new revenue bill be raised from $10 to $50 per year so as to confine tax to actual luxury clubs as really intended? Hard enough to finance and keep members in club without this handicap. Consider many like organizations and small community clubs over entire country unjustly taxed by present law. Please do your utmost to get limit raised from $10 to $50 per year.

Cordially,

MULTNOMAH AMATEUR ATHLETIC CLUB,
H. A. SARGENT, President.

Now, gentlemen, this is a most worthy cause. It is an institution Portland is proud of, and I voice the sentiment of everyone in that fair city when I urge you to eliminate the tax on membership dues.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Is your colleague Mr. HAWLEY with you on this proposition?

Mr. WATKINS. I hope so, but I doubt it. No; I understand he is not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman say that the members of this athletic club would pay $48 a year and refuse to pay the extra $4.80 tax?

Mr. WATKINS. They are up against it; they are unable to pay this additional sum.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I move to amend that; I move that all debate and amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Iowa by the provision that the debate now close.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The motion as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WATKINS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WATKINS) there were 29 ayes and 79 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE VI.—EXCISE TAXES.

SEC. 600. There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the following articles sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, a tax equivalent to the following percentage of the price for which so sold or leased—

(1) Automobile trucks and automobile wagons (including tires, inner tubes, parts, and accessories therefor, sold on or in connection therewith or with the sale thereof), 3 per cent.

(2) Other automobiles and motor cycles (including tires, inner tubes, parts, and accessories therefor, sold on or in connection therewith or with the sale thereof), except tractors, 5 per cent.

(3) Tires, inner tubes, parts, or accessories for any of the articles enumerated in subdivision (1) or (2), sold to any person other than a manufacturer or producer of any of the articles enumerated in subdivision (1) or (2), 5 per cent.

(4) Cameras weighing not more than 100 pounds and lenses for such cameras, 10 per cent.

(5) Photographic films and plates (other than moving-picture films and other than X-ray films or plates), 5 per cent.

(6) Firearms, shells, and cartridges, except those sold for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, 10 per cent.

(7) Cigar or cigarette holders and pipes composed wholly or in part of meerschaum or amber, humidors, and smoking stands, 10 per cent.

(8) Automatic slot-device vending machines, 5 per cent; and automatic slot-device weighing machines, 10 per cent. If the manufacturer, producer, or importer of any such machine operates it for profit, he shall pay a tax in respect to each such machine put into operation equivalent to 5 per cent of its fair market value in the case of a vending machine and 10 per cent of its fair market value in the case of a weighing machine.

If any manufacturer, producer, or importer of any of the articles enumerated in this section customarily sells such articles both at wholesale and at retail, the tax in the case of any article sold by him at retail shall be computed on the price for which like articles are sold by him at wholesale.

The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of any article in respect of which a corresponding tax is imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1921, be in lieu of such tax.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 166, line 15, at the end of the line add the following: "Provided, That this paragraph (1) shall not apply to automobile trucks and automobile wagons (nor to the chassis thereof if sold separately) if the selling price of such chassis of such trucks or wagons is not in excess of $1,000."

Also, page 166, line 23, strike out the figure "5" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "2½."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, these two amendments have been submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and to the ranking Democratic member of that committee and have been approved. They are willing to accept them just as I have prepared them, so I think it will not be necesary to discuss them at length.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Your amendment exempts trucks and motors under $1,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It exempts trucks and automobile wagons if the chassis of them are sold not in excess of $1,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would that affect the production of anybody but Henry Ford?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Ninety per cent of the trucks and wagons of this country that are used by people themselves would be exempt.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Are there any other makes that sell for less than $1,000?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will read the gentleman a list of those that would be affected:

Buick, Chevrolet, Dodge, Ford, Dort, Gray, Durant, Mason, Maxwell, Overland, Olds, Reo, Star, and Vim.

It is not easy to learn with entire accuracy the selling price of chassis used in autotrucks and autowagons made by each and every one of these companies or by other companies, but I am confident I am speaking by the card when I say that all trucks and wagons of nearly every one of the companies I have named will be entirely exempt from taxation if my amendment shall be adopted, because the selling price of very nearly all chassis used in their trucks and wagons is not in excess of $1,000. As to other companies in the list I have given, a large percentage of their trucks and wagons will be exempted, because a large percentage are equipped with chassis which sell for $1,000 or less. You must understand the amendment I offer means that all autotrucks and autowagons, regardless of their other equipment and regardless of their selling price, will be entirely exempt from taxation if, and only if, the selling price of the chassis is not more than $1,000. It is to be the selling price of the chassis that will determine whether or not a truck or wagon, no matter how it may otherwise be equipped, shall pay a tax.

That is, every truck or wagon will be exempt if its chassis sells for no more than $1,000, and every truck and every wagon must pay the tax if its chassis sells for more than $1,000.

With all who assisted and advised with me I have given earnest thought to every plan and suggestion as to the form and substance of an amendment proper and necessary to carry into effect our purpose in this matter, and all agree that the selling price of the chassis is the only safe and proper basis to be considered. Autotrucks and autowagons have upper works of every conceivable form, style, and value, but every chassis is much the same as every other chassis except size and carrying strength and motive power. These elements or qualities largely, if not altogether, determine the selling price of the chassis. It is intelligently estimated that a chassis which sells for not more than $1,000 is the kind of chassis put into autotrucks and autowagons used by more than 90 per cent of all who carry, transport, or deliver their own products or their own goods. And I repeat that these are the people whom we wish by this amendment to benefit.

The amount of revenue that would be lost by the adoption of this amendment, as nearly as can be figured, is $3,600,000 out of a total now collected of $10,678,671.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What class of Overlands would it affect?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. All or nearly all of the Overlands would be exempt because the chassis of practically all Overland autotrucks and autowagons sell for $1,000 or less.

Mr. DYER. What would be the amount in tax if we adopted the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The amount collected last year on all the autotrucks and autowagons was a little more than ten and one-half million dollars.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. May I ask who made the estimates? They seem a little small.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Estimates have been made by several gentlemen. They have come from several associations and organizations in the automobile and truck business, each one contributing his information, and they are practically in agreement, so I have accepted them as correct.

Mr. YOUNG. All these organizations that you read gave figures as to how it would affect their sales?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No; each gave me data as to the entire autotruck and autowagon production and sales in this country. These organizations submitted statements, and my conclusion is that there were 370,000 autotrucks and autowagons manufactured in 1923, and that 262,500 of them used chassis the selling price of which was not more than $1,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If I correctly understand the gentleman's amendment, the purpose is to exempt all of these lighter trucks that are operated for the owner's own use and not used to carry freight commercially.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; my own view of the matter is, and the opinion of a great many with whom I have talked is, that the exemption ought to be given to the trucks and automobile wagons that are used by the people themselves exclusively for their own use and benefit, excepting the very large and very expensive ones that are largely used commercially. This would include practically all of the farmers' autos, all of the grocers', the butchers', and other dealers in a town, all except the great wholesalers and coal dealers in the cities who use very heavy and expensive cars, and the estimate is that it would give relief to 90 per cent of those who are using automobile trucks and automobile wagons for their own use.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And then the gentleman reduces the tax on accessories by one-half.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; but that is another item.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. How much is the loss on accessories and tires?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. My proposition is to reduce the tax on accessories, parts, repairs, and so forth, from 5 per cent to 2½ per cent. The amount collected under that item last year was $40,875,000. One-half would be a reduction of $20,437,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would inquire of the gentleman who is in charge of the committee how long he expects to run this evening? I think this a very important matter.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We expect to get through with the automobile taxes.

Mr. DYER. I think the Members generally ought to have an opportunity to discuss these items. The Ways and Means Committee spent a great deal of time upon them. I think we ought to have an opportunity to discuss them and not have the matter jammed through simply after conferring with the chairman of the committee and the ranking member on the other side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, the conference has been with the whole committee.

Mr. DYER. This is one of the largest industries in the country and involves a great deal of important matter and discussion. I do not think we ought to continue at this hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. DYER. I object.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

Mr. DYER. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan will proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let me ask the gentleman from Michigan, so that the committee may understand the situation. Apparently the House desires to consider the question of the reduction of taxes on autotrucks and parts. If I understand the gentleman from Michigan, he has conferred with his colleague [Mr. CLANCY], also with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], and with other members of the Committee on Ways and Means. It seems to be the unanimous agreement among these gentlemen, as well as the manufacturers of these automobiles and their representatives, that we adopt the gentleman's amendment, which will reduce the tax on trucks and wagons on a basis of $1,000 and under, and to cut the tax on tires and accessories in half, which will reduce the revenue about $23,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If that is agreeable to the committee, we could avoid a great deal of delay and debate if we would adopt this amendment and go on home. The idea has been to get through with these things this afternoon so that we could start on something else to-morrow.

Mr. WINGO. But we are not going to have any session to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, then we could start in on Thursday without having three or four hours' debate. If the agreement of the committee is that we can reduce these taxes by $23,000,000, surely we can get through with this tax to-night. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. My district is very much interested in the automobile industry. I understand the gentleman will exempt truck chassis which sell for $1,000 or under. A great many users of trucks buy the trucks without the chassis. Would they be exempted?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. We exempt trucks and wagons with chassis which sells for less than $1,000.

Mr. KINDRED. Suppose the chassis is not sold and the truck is sold?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, there is always a chassis with a truck.

Mr. KINDRED. Some have a chassis on hand, but not the body.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think they might not get the exemption.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for the purpose of making a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am impressed with what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has said. To-morrow we meet for memorial services of the late President and we will adjourn immediately after that. It seems to me that we can save a great deal of time if we are agreed on what we are going to do, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be had upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object with the understanding that I get an opportunity to speak for from three to five minutes. I am the man who made this agreement on this question.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman from Iowa if this unanimous-consent request would include subparagraph (8)?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but if the gentleman cares about it, I should think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] would be willing to omit that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] is recognized.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to know who has the floor and who is entitled to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] has two minutes remaining, if he cares to use them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio. I do not care to occupy the floor at all, except to answer questions.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on paragraphs 1, 2, and 3, and all amendments thereto, close at 6 o'clock.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I think I could clarify the situation if I got the floor.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not care to occupy the floor, except to answer questions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on paragraphs 1, 2, and 3, and all amendments thereto, close at 6 o'clock.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to amend that motion by making it 6.30.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on subsections 1, 2, and 3, and all amendments thereto, close at 6 o'clock, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] moves to amend that motion by making it 6.30.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the motion.

Mr. TILSON. It is not debatable.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I would like to have the Chair rule on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I demand recognition for a moment. I put to the Chair a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair absolutely ignored the inquiry I made. I believe I am entitled to that courtesy to be heard from the Chair and not some one of the mutual admiration society on the floor of this House. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Louisiana when he addressed the Chair with a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I said enough to lead the Chair to believe to the contrary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will realize that in the existing confusion here it is sometimes difficult to understand exactly what the parliamentary situation is. Section 6 of Rule XXIII is as follows:

> The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the Members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate); but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided by debate.

So that there is no further debate.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment to the motion that the debate close at 6.15.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the debate close at 6.15 on these three subsections. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that all debate on the subsections named and all amendments thereto close at 6 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McKEOWN. I mean to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, unless I get recognition pretty soon I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. TILSON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is dilatory, because it is evident that there is a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-eight Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois has the floor and can not be taken off the floor by a motion to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has the floor, and can not be taken off the floor by a motion that the committee rise. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 166, line 11, strike out all after line 11 down to and including line 24, and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) Automobiles (including tires, inner tubes, parts, and accessories therefor, sold on or in connection therewith or with the sale thereof), except tractors, 3 per cent of the amount by which the price for which they are sold or leased exceeds $1,000 and does not exceed $3,000;

"(2) Automobiles (including tires, inner tubes, parts, and accessories therefor, sold on or in connection therewith or with the sale thereof), except tractors, 5 per cent of the amount by which the price for which they are sold or leased exceeds $3,000;

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I have not consulted either the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] or anyone else about this amendment I have offered. I am simply presenting it to the committee for whatever it may be worth.

In effect this substitute strikes out of the bill the provision that levies a tax on automobile trucks and automobile wagons, and removes the tax entirely from those, and it also strikes out of the bill paragraph No. 3, the tax on automobile parts and accessories, and leaves the tax 3 per cent on the sale price of automobiles that are sold for between $1,000 and $3,000 and 5 per cent on automobiles the sale price of which is above $3,000. If my amendment is adopted, all taxes would be removed from automobiles that sell for less than $1,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I wanted to get an idea from the gentleman as to how this affects the revenue.

Mr. DENISON. I have read the hearings carefully, and I get what information I have from the printed hearings. By eliminating paragraph 3 from the bill and repealing all taxes on automobile parts and accessories we would lose about $40,000,000 a year in revenues. Eliminating the tax on automobile trucks and wagons would cost us about $11,700,000 in revenues. By removing the taxes entirely from automobiles that sell for less than $1,000 and by reducing the taxes to 3 per cent on automobiles that sell for more than $1,000 and less than $3,000 would cost us an indefinite amount of revenue. I have no estimate of the exact amount. The present tax on automobiles yields about $92,000,000 in revenues. Possibly my amendment would reduce that amount by about one-fourth or one-fifth.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman read the language which he says will remove the tax on automobile parts?

Mr. DENISON. I strike it out of the bill entirely. My idea is this: I think the time has come when Congress ought to quit trying to run the Government on automobiles. I feel we ought to take all taxes off of trucks and automobile wagons; they are not luxuries any more; they are things which people have to have to make a living; they are used to carry children to and from schools, and they are used in businesses of different kinds; they are used on the farms, around the factories, and for transportation purposes, and it seems to me Congress ought to try to find some way of financing the Government otherwise than by pyramiding taxes on automobile trucks and automobile wagons, and on automobile parts and accessories.

Mr. GARNER of Texas and Mr. CLANCY rose.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I thought the gentleman had yielded the floor.

Mr. DENISON. I had not intended to do so until my time was up. I think the most indefensible tax in this whole bill is the tax on trucks and automobiles and automobile parts.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know who has the floor. The gentleman from Texas has occupied about half the time to-day and I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. This ought not to come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman has been interrupted during almost all of his time, and the gentleman has two minutes of actual time left.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I started to say that if there is any justification at all for continuing the tax on automobiles when they are sold, I can not see any justification at all for longer imposing this tax on repair parts. [Applause.] And that part of this bill ought to be stricken out entirely, because Congress ought not to try to finance the Government on the people's necessities and misfortunes.

There are now 15,000,000 automobiles in use in this country and 4,500,000 of these are owned by farmers. Possibly three or four times that many persons are using them for pleasure or recreation or for business or professional purposes. When the country was at war it was all right to levy a heavy tax on that many people. But we ought not to do so now. If you will adopt my amendment you will remove a heavy tax burden from a great number of our people who are least able and ought not to longer have to bear it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DYER) there were—ayes 44, noes 76.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory and is made for the purpose of cutting off debate and preventing the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] from debating the amendment. There is a question of honor involved in it, because an agreement was made with the gentleman.

Mr. CLANCY. I made an honorable agreement with you gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] A sufficient number have risen, and tellers are ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. DYER and Mr. CRISP.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may I make a unanimous-consent request? I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the fact that a time limit has been fixed, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, during a division of the committee, asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] may proceed for five minutes notwithstanding the time limit fixed. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota objects.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to propound a parliamentary inquiry pending the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is rather of opinion that a parliamentary inquiry would not be proper while the Members are passing through the tellers. The Chair has already ordered the tellers to take their places and the ayes to pass through. The ayes will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 22, noes 36.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, has all debate closed under this motion?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the motion the debate closed at 6 o'clock.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. BEGG. I object.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be seated.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I objected twice to that unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be true, but the Chair did not hear it.

Mr. BEGG. I will submit it to the House.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio says that he was objecting, the Chair will put the request again.

Mr. BEGG. I will leave it to the House. I will not even say so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. I object.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I make this inquiry, Mr. Chairman. It was voted to close the debate at a certain time, but it was perfectly obvious that at least five minutes of that time was taken up in conversation between Members and the Chair. That being the case, does not the Chair think it is within the spirit of what the House intended that the debate should be extended at least five minutes? [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation. The motion was stated very plainly that all debate on these three subsections close at a definite hour, namely, 6 o'clock. It was not 10 minutes or 15 minutes or any other time but a certain hour. That hour having arrived, under the Chair's construction of it, the time for debate has expired.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. FREE. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed, not upon the subject, for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. I object.

Mr. BEGG. I object.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope no gentleman on this side of the aisle will object to the leader of the minority having time.

Mr. BEGG. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. YOUNG. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BEGG. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. YOUNG. Is it about this parliamentary situation?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is.

Mr. YOUNG. Then I object.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I voted in the affirmative to close debate at 6 o'clock. This is the day that motion was made; is it in order for me to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the committee closed debate at 6 o'clock?

The CHAIRMAN. Not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I made an honorable agreement with the dean of the Michigan delegation to give him credit for the battle I have carried on for the repeal of these taxes. The understanding was that I would be allowed a few minutes to back him up. This honorable agreement——

Mr. BEGG. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is asked.

Mr. CLANCY. All I wanted to do with the two minutes——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LONGWORTH) there were—ayes 82, noes 58.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 86 ayes and 59 noes.

So the motion to rise was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely convinced as to the order for the memorial to-morrow and whether it included dispensing with Calendar Wednesday. Therefore to make certain I ask unanimous consent that the business on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY NEXT.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Thursday at 11 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Ohio when they hope to conclude the consideration of this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On Friday.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I would like to have some sort of an agreement, for we are entitled to have as much knowledge on this side as to when you are to conclude the consideration of it as you have. I do not ask any advantage, I am asking this for the purpose of keeping you from taking advantage.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say that the gentleman has not so much difficulty in keeping his colleagues here as we seem to have on this side.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I agree that we are a little more loyal.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is not a question of loyalty, but because you are tied up tighter.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will agree that there shall be no vote taken before Friday.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But do you expect to have a vote on Friday?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope so.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. With that statement, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to meeting at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 2189. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State highway department of North Carolina to construct a bridge across the Peedee River in North Carolina between Anson and Richmond Counties;

H. R. 3198. An act to authorize the States of Alabama and Georgia, through their respective highway departments, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Chattahoochee River at or near Eufaula, Ala., connecting Barbour County, Ala., and Quitman County, Ga.;

S. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution for the appointment of one member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and

S. J. Res. 84. Joint resolution making appropriation for contingent expenses of the United States Senate, fiscal year 1924.

THE IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 185.

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 1 of the printing act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed 600 additional copies of the hearings before said committee of the Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, on bills relating to restriction of immigration.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 27, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

378. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, submitting a claim of the Powell Grocery Co., Asheville, N. C., against the United States, for damages caused by the negligence of an employee of the Public Health Service in the sum of $201.25, which requires an appropriation for its payment (H. Doc. No. 206); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

379. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Glencove Creek, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 207); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

380. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation, "that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Treasury Department for quarantine purposes that portion of La Costa Island, Fla., occupied by the Treasury Department as a quarantine station under revocable license from the War Department dated January 27, 1903"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

381. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation "for the relief of the Keene Chemical Co."; to the Committee on Claims.

382. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Fortescue Creek, N. J.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

383. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Tillamook River, Oreg.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

384. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Frankfort Harbor, Mich. (H. Doc. No. 208); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustration.

385. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Delaware River from Trenton, N. J., to Easton, Pa.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. JOST: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 3689. A bill to amend the insurance laws of the District of Columbia; with amendments (Rept. No. 231). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KELLY: Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. H. R. 6352. A bill to authorize the Postmaster General to fix the fees chargeable for registration of mail matter, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 232). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: Committee on Pensions. H. R. 7934. A bill to pension soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition; without amendment (Rept. No. 233). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PERLMAN: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 3318. A bill to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York; without amendment (Rept. No. 234). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WEFALD: A bill (H. R. 7297) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Thief River Falls, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7298) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Detroit, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7299) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Hallock, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BUCKLEY: A bill (H. R. 7300) for the purchase of a post-office site and the erection thereon of a suitable building at Maywood, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7301) for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Oak Park, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SEARS of Florida: A bill (H. R. 7302) to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Florida at or in the vicinity of Lake Worth Inlet; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 7303) to increase pensions of persons who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the Civil War, and of widows and former widows of such persons, and Army nurses of said war; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LATE PRESIDENT HARDING.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in order to fulfill the terms of the concurrent resolution adopted by the Senate and the House by attending the ceremonies about to take place in memory of the late President Harding, I move, before we proceed to the Hall of the House, that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 11.55 o'clock a. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 28, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 27, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, hallowed be Thy name, lift upon us all the light of Thy holy countenance; establish Thou the work of our hands, the work of our hands establish Thou it. Through Christ. Amen.

MEMORIAL OF WARREN GAMALIEL HARDING.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution governing our action to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent Resolution 9.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on the day and hour fixed by the joint committee, to wit, Wednesday, February 27, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian, and that in the presence of the two Houses there assembled an address upon the life and character of Warren G. Harding, late President of the United States, be pronounced by Hon. Charles E. Hughes, and that the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to invite the President and the two ex-Presidents of the United States, the former Vice President, the heads of the several departments, the judges of the Supreme Court, the ambassadors and ministers of foreign governments, the governors of the several States, the General of the Armies, and the Chief of Naval Operations to be present on that occasion; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to Mrs. Harding and to assure her of the profound sympathy of the two Houses of Congress for her deep personal affliction and of their sincere condolence for the late national bereavement.

The following was the official program of arrangements prepared by the joint committee of the two Houses:

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR WARREN G. HARDING, FEBRUARY 27, 1924.

PROGRAM OF ARRANGEMENTS.

The Capitol will be closed on the morning of the 27th day of February, 1924, to all except Members and officers of Congress.

At half past 10 o'clock the east door leading to the rotunda will be opened to those to whom invitations have been extended under the joint resolution of Congress by the Presiding Officers of the two Houses, and to those holding tickets of admission to the galleries.

The Hall of the House of Representatives will be opened for the admission of those who have invitations, who will be conducted to the seats assigned to them, as follows:

The President of the United States and his Cabinet will occupy seats in front of and on the left of the Speaker.

The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court will occupy seats in front of and on the right of the Speaker.

The General of the Armies and the Chief of Naval Operations will occupy seats back of the President and his Cabinet, on the left of the Speaker.

The ambassadors and ministers of foreign governments will occupy seats on the left of the Speaker in section A west.

The former Vice President and Senators will occupy seats back of the President and his Cabinet and the Supreme Court, and on the east and west side of the main aisle.

Governors of the several States will occupy seats on the right of the Speaker in section A east.

Representatives will occupy seats on the east and west side of the main aisle and back of the Senators and governors of the several States.

Ex-Members of the House will occupy seats assigned to them back of the Members.

The executive gallery will be reserved exclusively for the family of the President, the families of the Cabinet and of the Supreme Court, and the invited guests of the President.

The diplomatic gallery will be reserved exclusively for the families of the ambassadors and ministers of foreign governments. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the Secretary of State.

The House of Representatives will be called to order by the Speaker at 12 o'clock.

The Marine Band will be in attendance at half past 11 o'clock.

The Senate will assemble at 12 o'clock and, immediately after prayer, will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The ambassadors and ministers will meet at half past 11 o'clock in the Ways and Means Committee room in the Capitol and be conducted to the seats assigned to them in section A, on the left of the Speaker.

The President of the Senate will occupy the Speaker's chair.

The Speaker of the House will occupy a seat at the left of the President of the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House will occupy seats next the Presiding Officers of their respective Houses.

The other officers of the Senate and of the House will occupy seats on the floor, at the right and left of the Speaker's chair.

The chairmen of the joint committee of arrangements will occupy seats at the right and left of the orator, and next to them will be seated the officiating clergymen.

Prayer will be offered by the Rev. James Shera Montgomery, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The Presiding Officer will then present the orator of the day.

The benediction will be pronounced by the Rev. J. J. Muir, Chaplain of the Senate.

FRANK B. WILLIS,
THEODORE E. BURTON,
Chairmen, Joint Committee.

The Doorkeeper, Mr. Bert W. Kennedy, announced

The President pro tempore and the Senate of the United States, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The ambassadors and ministers of foreign governments.

The President and the members of his Cabinet.

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of the arrangements made by the joint committee of Congress, the President pro tempore of the Senate will conduct the further proceedings of this joint meeting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. The two Houses of Congress, with their invited guests, are assembled to pay a tribute to the memory of our late President, Warren G. Harding. You will now unite in prayer with the Reverend Doctor Montgomery, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, consider and hear our prayer. In the midst of life's perils and uncertainties remember us. Thy ways are in the deep and Thy paths are in the mighty waters, yet Thy sovereignty over us is the sovereignty of love. May our Christian faith see through the shades and cleave steadfastly to Him who is the resurrection and the life. We pause with one accord in memory of him—the gentle, magnanimous husband, statesman, and patriot who has become a part of our Nation's history. Let this hour freshen our patriotism and deepen the springs of hope, faith, and devotion. Oh, hear us as we bestow the sweet and silent tokens of our affection and sorrow. He loved his country and his vision saluted a greater future for all humanity. May his simplicity, modesty, courage, and honor not willingly die out of our grateful hearts. Comfort her who sits in the shadows and yet in the glow of a wonderful memory. We commit her to Thy gracious, tender care. While there, with open page, answering love's unconscious call, to the last—a gentle smile and his own soul passed through the valley and became immortal. O Lord, our Lord, let the chambers of our hearts be hung with the visions of Jesus and His glory, and the wonder of His undying love shall echo and resound, and we shall be made secure from time and fate. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. It is now the agreeable duty of your presiding officer to present the Hon. Charles E. Hughes, who has been selected by a committee of Congress to deliver the address on this occasion.

The Hon. Charles E. Hughes then delivered the following address:

MEMORIAL ADDRESS IN HONOR OF THE LATE PRESIDENT HARDING.

We arrest our activities to pay tribute to the chosen leader who, well beloved and crowned with the most enviable honors that confidence and station can bestow, was taken from us in the midst of the administration of his trust and at the moment of the highest possibilities of service. It is fitting that we should render the official tribute of respect, but the significance of this occasion is far deeper than that. It is the tribute inspired by love of country, as laying aside the differences and controversies, which seem but trivial in the face of man's adventures and God's providence, we stand united by the indissoluble bonds of a common patriotism, knowing well that ungrateful republics can not endure. The temples of democracy will be but as vain vestiges of a vanished faith if their altar fires are not kept burning by the memory of those who have met the supreme test and have laid down their lives in heroic fidelity and self-sacrifice. But above all we give the tribute of the deep affection which moves us to speak in tender remembrance of a generous and kindly spirit who counted human fellowship more precious than all the pomp and circumstance of power. Not only those who had the privilege of intimacy but the vast multitude who bowed in grief at his passing had responded to the grace of his gentleness and called him brother and friend as well as President.

It was not a long life, and yet to go back to its beginning is to enter another world, to recall persons and events, governments, standards, and problems belonging to an epoch now definitely closed. When Warren Gamaliel Harding was born, on November 2, 1865, this country was standing aghast at the irreparable loss of the martyred Lincoln and confronted after the crisis of civil war and without his wise and generous leadership the suspicions, hatreds, and scandals of the period of reconstruction. In England the long career of Palmerston had ended and the first ministry of Gladstone had not yet begun. The conservatism which Bright and Gladstone were opposing was well evidenced by the shock caused by Gladstone's statement on the franchise: "I contend," said he, "that it is on those who say it is necessary to exclude forty-nine fiftieths of the working class that the burden of proof rests." In France Napoleon the Third was endeavoring to conceal the decadence of the Empire with a fatuous splendor. In Italy Cavour had been laying the foundation of Italian unity, but the essential successes of Victor Emanuel were yet to come. In Germany Bismarck was pressing to the fateful victories of Sadova and Sedan and with relentless will was forging the mechanism of German imperial power. Mill's Liberty and Darwin's Origin of Species had but recently appeared, and Das Kapital of Karl Marx was shortly to be published. The electric age was in its beginning and science was yet to win the victories which have given us the practical achievements of the gas engine, the moving picture, and the radio, more revolutionary than political theories.

Within the period of 55 years between his birth and his election to the Presidency the population of continental United States had risen from thirty-five millions to one hundred and six millions. The deep wounds left by the Civil War had been healed, and the Nation with the indomitable enthusiasm of a new and abiding sense of unity, solving one problem after another, superior to the strife of politics, the conspiracies of greed and the assaults of unreason, had steadily advanced to a prosperity and power such as a free people had never known before, and at its highest point of achievement and privilege had been able to bring its resources to the rescue of liberty itself. For in this same period old rivalries and conflicting interests had lavishly sown the seeds of conflict in Europe and the opportunities won by science and industry, ready to bless the millions of toilers with an orderly progress, were made to serve an insatiable lust of power, until in titanic struggle Europe was strewn with human wreckage, and now, with Romanoffs, Hapsburgs, and Hohenzollerns dethroned, amid economic disasters still unretrieved and hatreds still unquenched, with democracy saved but not assured, with many gloomy forebodings and yet with the potency and promise of vigorous and industrious peoples, is seeking earnestly readjustments, stability, and peace. A period has closed from which mankind will hereafter make its reckonings. It was at the very moment of transition that Warren G. Harding was called to leadership in this Republic.

He was equipped for his task by inheritance and training which were completely and typically American. He was neither helped nor hampered by exceptional environment. He suffered neither from poverty nor from riches. His endowment was a keen mind and a strong body. Alert to opportunity, self-reliant, facile, and warm-hearted, he made his own way, owing his successes to his tireless persistence and his unquenchable ardor in living.

He belonged to the aristocracy of the plain people of this country. On his father's side he was of old colonial stock, going back to the Hardings who came from Scotland to Connecticut in the early part of the seventeenth century. He was directly descended from Nathan Harding, born in 1746 in Middle Haddam, part of what has been described as "that unique nutmeg section known as North, East, South, West, Middle, and other Haddams." The Hardings formed part of the migration which brought New England across the Alleghenies. They removed from Connecticut to Wyoming Valley, Pennsylvania, endured the hardships of frontier life, and did their part in the struggle for independence. The grandfather of Warren G. Harding pushed into Ohio and established himself on his own homestead clearing, near the village of Blooming Grove, in Morrow County. On that farm Warren G. Harding was born. His father not only cultivated the soil but studied medicine, taking up the arduous and useful life of the rural doctor. To this strong stock was united that of his mother, Phoebe Dickerson, of Dutch descent, belonging to the Van Kirk family of Pennsylvania, a woman of strong and noble character, profoundly religious.

It is easy to picture the life of a boy of such parentage and surroundings. It is the sort of life which has developed many of those who stand forth as the wisest and greatest of our statesmen. To those under the illusions of great cities it might seem unduly restricted. But it was the life of an individuality unsubmerged; of buoyant health nourished in the freedom of outdoors; of laborious tasks in winning sustenance from the soil where forest was being converted into farm; of the wholesome sports of an unspoiled boyhood on nature's playgrounds; of a daily routine shot through with a consciousness of responsibility and with the full understanding that boys had their share of the family burden and must find their place in the world by their own acumen and exertion. It was not a narrowing experience, for the ideals of education and refinement were never absent. There was attendance at the village school and later at the near-by college at Iberia. Warren was the eldest of eight children and must earn the money for his college course. So the days at school were interspersed with odd and varied undertakings—painting barns, driving teams, cutting corn, helping to grade the roadbed of the new railroad, and teaching at the district school. It was in the neighboring village of Caledonia that, as he said, he "first got printer's ink on his fingers." In the office of the Caledonia Argus he learned, while still a boy, to "stick type, feed press, make up forms, and wash rollers." When at 19 years of age he completed his college course, his father removed to Marion, and young Harding soon found his vocation as editor and publisher of a newspaper. Marion was then a town of 4,000 inhabitants and the Star was an infant daily with a slender hold on life. Warren Harding and a young friend acquired it with credit loaned by Warren's father, and the career of the journalist was begun.

Never was enterprise better suited to talent and temperament. It enlisted all his energies and excited an unbounded enthusiasm. Nothing was foreign to his efforts. He "deviled," set type, wrote, managed. He wrought with all the zest of adventure and with a rapidly developing facility. So long as he lived he never felt so much at ease as with a pencil in his hand. He had the advantage of a charming personality; he was strong, handsome, spirited. No disappointment could harden his heart; no trial could pervert his understanding or make him narrow or bitter.

It was in these early days that he was most blessed of fortune, winning the woman of his choice—Florence Kling—his partner in all his struggles and achievements, who with sagacity and never-failing loyalty worked by his side when opportunity was slender and only increased her efforts as his interests broadened, who brought rare grace and distinction to the discharge of the highest responsibilities, the sharer of every burden, his most trusted counselor, the companion of his soul, who with him forever will be enshrined in the memory of a grateful people.

The journalistic career affords the most valuable training school for public office because of its demand for the careful observation of events and tendencies, its opportunities for the intimate knowledge of politics, and the intelligent appraisal of policies. In a rapidly growing community, developing from a small town into a city, journalism is anything but impersonal. Of necessity young Harding was in touch with every interest of the community, throbbing with an expanding life. There could be no detachment; there was no place, as in the larger cities, for the mere looker-on with critical eye. The atmosphere was electric with enterprise. Trade was swiftly increasing, plants were being built and extended. New people were coming in to establish homes. These were the typical conditions revealing the American ideals of individual initiative and community cooperation, not the selfish individualism of those who seek to destroy their fellows, not the cooperation of groups aiming at an economic dominance, but the individualism which prizes equal opportunity and the cooperation which seeks to enhance that opportunity and thus to insure the prosperity of all. Young Harding identified his success with that of his town; he was a "booster," entering into every project of development, nursing every hope of expansion, whether industrial, commercial, religious, or philanthropic. He embodied the American spirit, carrying into the endeavors of the town the persistence and courage of his pioneer forbears who had made towns possible.

He was loyal to his political party and made a partisan paper successful. But it was indicative of his fine quality that the contests of politics, the rivalries of his journalistic world, the meanness of detractors and enemies never made him rancorous. He was ever Greatheart in newspaperdom. He not only had his principles but he codified and enforced them. This was his code as he proclaimed it for his paper:

> Remember there are two sides to every question. Get them both.
> Be truthful. Get the facts.
> Mistakes are inevitable, but strive for accuracy. I would rather have one story exactly right than a hundred half wrong.
> Be decent, be fair, be generous.
> Boost, don't knock.
> There is good in everybody. Bring out the good and never needlessly hurt the feelings of anybody.
> In reporting a political gathering give the facts, tell the story as it is, not as you would like to have it. Treat all parties alike. If there is any politics to be played, we will play it in our editorial columns.
> Treat all religious matter reverently.
> If it can possibly be avoided, never bring ignominy to an innocent man or child in telling of the misdeed or misfortune of a relative.
> Don't wait to be asked, but do it without asking, and, above all, be clean and never let a dirty word or suggestive story get into type.
> I want this paper to be so conducted that it can go into any home without destroying the innocence of childhood.

Could such a code be universally observed, most of our problems would solve themselves. Accuracy, fairness, decency—the three graces of journalism.

It is not surprising that one of such industry, such zest, such instinct for helpfulness, should have received political honors. He was an attractive speaker, and his personal charm, combined with his good judgment, brought him quickly into prominence. The object of his warmest admiration and his exemplar was William McKinley, and it was during McKinley's Presidency that Harding began his political career as State senator from the thirteenth Ohio district. Having served in the State senate for four years, from 1899 to 1903, he was elected lieutenant governor of Ohio in 1903. Defeated as a candidate for the governorship in 1910, he continued his journalistic work, and notwithstanding his party had been rent in twain and had lost the State in 1912, Harding was elected two years later to the United States Senate by a plurality of over 100,000, running 73,000 ahead of his ticket.

In the Senate he soon achieved a distinguished position. He was chairman of the Committee on the Philippines and served on the Committees on Foreign Relations, on Naval Affairs, on Commerce, on the Territories, on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, on Public Health, on Pacific Islands. He was neither eccentric nor spectacular nor censorious. Always quiet in manner and unassuming, he could not escape the distinction of his natural dignity and noble mien. His keen intelligence and common sense won for him general confidence and esteem while his unfailing friendliness made him universally beloved.

He came to the Senate soon after the outbreak of the European war and sat through the period of our own participation in the struggle and of the epochal controversy which followed the armistice. He had no patience with obstruction to the measures needed for the effective conduct of the war, no squeamishness about intrusting the President in such a national crisis with adequate powers. This was not outside the Constitution. It was to use the full constitutional power to preserve the Nation; the Constitution was not a weak contrivance which could not save itself. Whether it was the organization of a great Army by means of the selective service act or the provision of safeguards against plots and treacheries through the espionage act or the adoption of measures for the control of food, ships, or trading with the enemy, he was ready with his support. He exercised his right of criticism; he was not a blind follower. But his policy was to help, to maintain national leadership without delays or hampering tactics. This was not to aggrandize the Executive office as such, but through the Executive to bring all the national power into exercise in order to support the national arms. While he recognized this temporary necessity, he demanded restoration to the normal methods of peace as soon as the exigency came to an end. Finally, when the war was won, he had strong and immovable convictions as to the final settlement. He was one of the 37 Senators who signed the declaration declaring their disapproval of the course taken at Paris in interweaving the covenant of the League of Nations with the peace treaty, and when the treaty of Versailles was under consideration he supported the reservations reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He respected the rights of others to express their judgment, and he unflinchingly maintained his own. It was natural that the Republican convention of 1920, confronting a deadlock of the candidacies which had been most prominent in the preconvention campaign, and seeking a candidate who could furnish a basis for united action and face a severe contest with an unassailable record and a talent for composing differences, should turn to Senator Harding. Never was a party choice more completely vindicated. Carrying 37 States with the popular acclaim of a plurality of over 7,000,000, the new leader was swept into power amid an enthusiasm and with assurances of support almost unprecedented.

The Providence which guides the Nation works through the instinct of accommodation by which a free people, idealistic but with dominant practicality, is able in the midst of political strife to seize opportunities for harmonious adjustment. More than two years had passed since the armistice and we were still in a technical state of war. Rejecting the compact framed abroad, we were without an effective agreement establishing peace, opening the appropriate channels of intercourse with former enemies and safeguarding essential rights. We had expended about $40,000,000,000 on the World War, and in August, 1919, our national debt had reached its highest point at $26,500,000,000, or about ten times the amount of the national debt at the close of the Civil War. Our people were subject to a colossal burden of taxation. In 1917 the Federal Government's revenues from taxation were $1,035,000,000. In 1919 they had risen to $4,023,000,000, and in 1920 they amounted to $5,722,000,000. Economic conditions gave cause for the keenest anxiety. Our basic activities were hard hit in the inevitable reactions which followed the great expansion which was necessary to meet the demands of war. Nearly 5,000,000 workers were unemployed, and the country was looking forward with grave apprehension to a period of unparalleled suffering if conditions did not improve. As President Harding observed, "In the then existing temper of people everywhere, overwrought and exasperated at contemplated sacrifices barren of results for good, these conditions involved a menace to society." Already some were recommending a policy of public doles, a most desperate resort. Uncertainty and instability had followed the relaxing of the tension of the great struggle. The time for debate had passed; debate had been had. It was time that a controversy which could have no result but increased bitterness should end and that the path of permissible helpful effort should be sought. President Harding met the need of the hour. That need was conciliation and cooperation; he incarnated both.

He at once determined to end the technical state of war and to establish the necessary formal peace; and this he achieved with the least loss of time and in the only practicable way. He sought to relieve agriculture, to foster industry, to conserve the interests of our merchant marine. There was "a frank and confident appeal to a great people to apply their soundest sense and to cling to tried and trusted methods." There were conferences on unemployment and on housing. There were meetings of the representatives of industry, of labor, of transportation, of civic and commercial bodies.

President Harding rejoiced in the opportunity to bring "all groups, classes, interests, and sections into a splendid cooperation." Proceedings were taken speedily and efficiently to dispose of the governmental transactions incident to the war and requiring adjustment. President Harding went to the root of domestic problems by insistence on the immediate reduction of national expenditures and the lifting of the burdens of war taxation. He endeavored to reduce the staggering load of war debt by a gradual liquidation which the strictest economy could alone make possible. Said he:

> Our current expenditures are running at the rate of approximately five billions a year, and the burden is unbearable. There are two agencies to be employed in correction: One is rigid resistance to appropriation, and the other is the utmost economy in administration. Let us have both.

By the remarkable efficiency of his organization of Budget control, by the wisdom of Treasury management, by appropriate legislative and administrative encouragement of commerce and industry, by intelligent and organized attention to the problem of unemployment, the prophecies of cynics were brought to naught, confidence was restored, and, despite the exigencies that still remained and the important measures of relief still needed, there was achieved an extraordinary degree of progress. With industry revived, labor was fully employed. On June 30, 1923, the national debt had been reduced to $22,400,000,000, and the Government's program now calls for a reduction of half a billion a year. The indebtedness of Great Britain to the United States was funded on a sound basis, putting, as the President well said, "a fresh stamp of approval upon the sacredness of international obligations." The cost of government—that is to say, the expenditures of the Federal Government, exclusive of expenditures payable from postal revenues and the principal of the public debt—which had amounted to $6,139,000,000 in 1920 and to $4,880,000,000 in 1921 was reduced to $3,647,000,000 in 1923. The Treasury was able to balance the Budget and close the last fiscal year with a surplus of $309,000,000. And by virtue of this successful administration of the Government's business the people are now able to look forward with the utmost gratification to a further reduction of the tax load. In meeting domestic exigencies, in planning every remedial endeavor, President Harding constantly sought cooperation. He was not merely the Chief Executive, but endeavored to be the effective coordinator of the functions of government. Wherever he worked, whether in the limited range of early activities or in the broad sphere of national leadership, the mainspring of his action was always the intense desire to harmonize, to find a way of agreement, to bring about teamwork. He hated strife; his gospel was that of understanding.

It was with an intense desire to contribute to the promotion of peace and find avenues of helpfulness that he contemplated the chaotic conditions left by the Great War and our relations to other peoples. His was not the spirit of a narrow or selfish nationalism. He wished no commitment which would forfeit or impair the independence and liberty of action which was the heritage of the Republic. But he desired to safeguard this fortunate detachment from the ambitions and rivalries which had vexed the Old World not only to conserve our own security but that America might use her freedom for an enlarged service. Let these eloquent words of his inaugural address reveal his conviction and his outlook:

> The recorded progress of our Republic, materially and spiritually, in itself proves the wisdom of the inherited policy of noninvolvement in Old World affairs. Confident of our ability to work out our own destiny, and jealously guarding our right to do so, we seek no part in directing the destinies of the Old World. We do not mean to be entangled. We will accept no responsibility except as our own conscience and judgment, in each instance, may determine. Our eyes never will be blind to a developing menace, our ears never deaf to the call of civilization. We recognize the new order in the world with the closer contacts which progress has wrought. We sense the call of the human heart for fellowship, fraternity, and cooperation. We crave friendship and harbor no hate. * * *
> To-day, better than ever before, we know the aspirations of humankind, and share them. We have come to a new realization of our place in the world and a new appraisal of our Nation by the world. The unselfishness of these United States is a thing proven; our devotion to peace for ourselves and for the world is well established; our concern for preserved civilization has had its impassioned and heroic expression. There was no American failure to resist the attempted reversion of civilization; there will be no failure to-day or to-morrow. * * *
> America is ready to encourage, eager to initiate, anxious to participate in any seemly program likely to lessen the probability of war and promote that brotherhood of mankind which must be God's highest conception of human relationship. Because we cherish ideals of justice and peace, because we appraise international comity and helpful relationship no less highly than any people of the world, we aspire to a high place in the moral leadership of civilization, and we hold a maintained America, the proven Republic, the unshaken temple of representative democracy, to be not only an inspiration and example but the highest agency of strengthening good will and promoting accord on both continents.

These were not idle words to catch a transient applause. He meant what he said. He knew what it was vain to attempt; he had no illusions as to causes of European disorder. He knew that the evils which afflicted Europe could find no cure except in the abatement of strife and in settlements which could not be imposed from without, but could only be achieved when the powers directly concerned had a will to peace and were willing to agree. But his clear perception of existing difficulties made him only the more keen to find some opening for helpful effort, some way to further the cause nearest his heart, the cause of world peace, and that way was found.

His aspiration had long been declared. In accepting the nomination for the Presidency he had said:

I can hear in the call of conscience an insistent voice for the largely reduced armaments throughout the world, with attending reduction of burdens upon peace-loving humanity. We wish to give of American influence and example; we must give of American leadership to that invaluable accomplishment.

In his inaugural address he recorded his purpose and made his pledge:

We are ready to associate ourselves with the nations of the world, great and small, for conference, for counsel; to seek the expressed views of world opinion; to recommend a way to approximate disarmament and relieve the crushing burdens of military and naval establishments.

This pledge was kept. Opportunity was soon found, and in August, 1921, President Harding invited the great powers composing the group which, with the United States, had been described as the five principal allied and associated powers, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, to meet for conference on the subject of limitation of armament, and four other powers—Belgium, China, the Netherlands, and Portugal—were invited in order that Pacific and Far Eastern questions, in which they were interested, might also be considered. The representatives of the powers convened on November 12, 1921, and the spirit of the meeting was finely expressed by the President in his opening address:

A world staggering with debt needs its burden lifted. Humanity which has been shocked by wanton destruction would minimize the agencies of that destruction. * * * The United States welcomes you with unselfish hands. We harbor no fears; we have no sordid ends to serve; we suspect no enemy; we contemplate or apprehend no conquest. Content with what we have, we seek nothing which is another's. We only wish to do with you that finer, nobler thing which no nation can do alone. We wish to sit with you at the table of international understanding and good will. In good conscience we are eager to meet you frankly and invite and offer cooperation. The world demands a sober contemplation of the existing order and the realization that there can be no cure without sacrifice, not by one of us, but by all of us. * * * Our hundred millions frankly want less of armament and none of war.

The conference is an instrument of diplomacy, not a substitute for it. Its contacts facilitate the negotiations of a group of powers, avoiding the delays and circumlocutions of separate communications through ordinary diplomatic channels and providing exceptional opportunities for the informal conversations which promote accord. Proposals may be direct and discussions immediate. Delegates form drafting committees to put suggested agreements to the test of statement.

The conference is a most efficient agency of diplomatic endeavor where the participants have a paramount common object and a common desire to overcome by candid interchanges of views the obstacles to its achievement. But the machinery of conference affords no escape from the essential condition of unanimity of action. When the representatives of independent sovereign States meet it is the dissenting opinion that is the prevailing opinion. If nations find their interests to be diverse and will not yield, there is no potency in a majority vote against them. And contacts may develop differences as well as agreements.

The distinctive feature of the Washington conference was the definite and limited character of its aim. As the President said, it did not seek "to remake humankind." It did not waste its time in futilities. It sought results, not the vanities of reiterated professions without accomplishment. It strove for limitation of armament, but in the field where it could labor with a measure of success, that of naval armament, it made that success possible by coupling with the discussion problems of the Far East and thus endeavoring to remove the causes of irritation and to find a basis for agreement as to principles and their application. The course of events in recent years, which this is not an appropriate occasion to describe, had unfortunately created an atmosphere of suspicion and distrust. Peoples who had every reason for cultivating the mutually beneficial relations of friendship had been developing a feeling of estrangement and antagonism. This was an unhealthy condition demanding remedy. The conference succeeded because suspicions were allayed. The limitation of great arms of naval warfare, the fighting ships of vast expense, was important, but the limitation of apprehensions was much more important. The menace of distrust gave place to the spirit of cooperation. The naval treaty, the four-power treaty, the two treaties in relation to China, were not simply formal engagements but the revelation of a new state of mind. They were not mere promises but in themselves accomplishments, a record of a change of heart.

There will always be problems in the Far East, but it is not too much to say that the Pacific and far eastern questions, as they existed at the time of the conference, with their menace to the peace of the world, are no more. The tranquilizing spirit of President Harding permeated the endeavors of the conference. With a broad-minded appreciation of every difficulty and every aim, he was generous in his confidence and ungrudging in his support, while his gracious personality happily and convincingly interpreted to the representatives of foreign powers the friendly disposition of the American people. And at the close he was able to say:

Stripped to the simplest fact, what is the spectacle which has inspired a new hope for the world? Gathered about this table nine great nations of the earth—not all, to be sure, but those most directly concerned with the problems at hand—have met and have conferred on questions of great import and common concern, on problems menacing their peaceful relationship, on burdens threatening a common peril. In the revealing light of the public opinion of the world, without surrender of sovereignty, without impaired nationality or affronted national pride, a solution has been found in unanimity, and to-day's adjournment is marked by rejoicing in the things accomplished. If the world has hungered for a new assurance, it may feast at the banquet which this conference has spread. * * * There were no victors to command, no vanquished to yield. All had voluntarily to agree in translating the conscience of our civilization and give concrete expression to world opinion. * * * Not all the world is yet tranquilized. But here is the example to imbue with new hope all who dwell in apprehension. At this table came understanding, and understanding brands armed conflict as abominable in the eyes of enlightened civilization. I once believed—in armed preparedness. I advocated it. But I have come now to believe there is a better preparedness in a public mind and a world opinion made ready to grant justice precisely as it exacts it. And justice is better served in conferences of peace than in conflicts at arms. * * * No intrigue, no offensive or defensive alliances, no involvements have wrought your agreements, but reasoning with each other to common understanding has made new relationships among Governments and peoples, new securities for peace, and new opportunities for achievement and attending happiness. * * * It is all so fine, so gratifying, so reassuring, so full of promise, that above the murmurings of a world sorrow not yet silenced, above the groans which come of excessive burdens not yet lifted but soon to be lightened, above the discouragements of a world yet struggling to find itself after surpassing upheaval, there is the note of rejoicing which is not alone ours or yours, or of all of us, but comes from the hearts of men of all the world.

President Harding earnestly supported the cause of international justice. He desired the maintenance of adequate judicial administration by a permanent tribunal to which international controversies of a justiciable nature could be brought for judicial settlement. Wherever he saw an opportunity to aid in removing causes of strife he took advantage of it. He was especially alive to the importance of pursuing our traditional policy of cooperation with our sister Republics in this hemisphere. He was solicitous to establish our relations with Mexico on a sound basis. It gave him keen satisfaction that by the friendly offices which he was able to offer one of the gravest controversies which had vexed relations between Latin-American countries, that between Chile and Peru, was put on the way to settlement.

The Presidency of the United States is the most burdened office in the world. There centers the patriotic sentiment which is never satisfied with mere charters, constitutions, or abstractions, and ever attaches to the person of the Chief of State, the human symbol of national prestige and authority. There rest the powers of the constitutional Executive and even the restrictions of these powers create responsibilities. The President is charged with the conduct of our foreign relations; he must keep in touch with every important development throughout the world. As demands of administration multiply and the range of the activities of the various executive departments widens he remains the sole primary administrative head, to whom each grave problem must come, the single ultimate coordinator of interdepartmental interests. As a part of the legislative power, the country looks to him for leadership in proposing and supporting legislative measures, although he is both more and less than a parliamentary leader, and must ever pay proper heed to the constitutional authority of the Congress. He must have his policies and expound them. In the midst of his administrative cares he must think of the people and make known his thoughts on every serious problem of government. The economic interests of the country present an ever-increasing complexity and he must understand them, not as an observer, but as the public trustee from whom the people expect intelligence and resourcefulness in diagnosing unwholesome economic conditions, in devising remedies, in encouraging sound hygiene, and in exposing injurious political quackery. As population grows and the machinery of government is extended in every direction, he remains but one, with no expansion of available hours and no enlargement of faculties or strength. But this is not all. To his constitutional burdens are added a host of others piled up by the appreciation and esteem of friends and supporters. No chief of state in any great power is so accessible as he. We are all oppressed by the volume of things, but no one so much as he. The typewriter facilitates the correspondence of others as well as our own. We have every facility in sending messages, but the busy officer receives a hundred for every one he wishes to convey. Ease of communication hampers good work. It may be one great difficulty with the world that everywhere grave problems wait on the attention of men who must consider them in the midst of innumerable vexing demands. Our national leader finds it impossible to escape his extraconstitutional burdens.

He depends for his support and success only in part upon the intelligent conduct of the Government's business, which few of the people are in a position to know intimately and accurately appreciate, and very largely upon the impression that he gives in response to a thousand importunities. He is under a strong temptation to endeavor to be all things to all men. I believe there was a time when communities depended upon local talent for great local occasions. Now they desire their celebrations to be graced by the head of the Nation or by some high official. For each invitation there is urged some special reason why it should be entertained. If the President can not come, he must send a message. No enterprise can point with pride to its anniversary without a presidential blessing.

Countless organizations demand for their undertakings the expression of his approval. Every human virtue must have his explicit encouragement. He must speak of homes, of thrift, of mothers, of fathers, of schools and curricula, of temperance, of play, of the ambitions of youth, of the solaces of age. He must be the guide, philosopher, and friend—the constant energizer and inspirer of the American people. These demands are natural and reflect the wholesome and abounding life of an idealistic people, cherishing aspirations which they desire to have expressed in the most influential manner, but they are demands which bear heavily upon one already overladen with official responsibilities.

President Harding was peculiarly susceptible to these requirements. John Hay wrote to Garfield when President elect:

> One thing thou lackest yet; and that is a slight ossification of the heart. I woefully fear you will try too hard to make everybody happy—an office which is outside your constitutional powers.

President Harding had no ossification of the heart. He literally wore himself out in the endeavor to be friendly. It was pain to him to refuse a courtesy; personal convenience could never be considered if it was an obstacle to any act of grace. He dealt personally with a vast correspondence, not being content with mere acknowledgments, but writing friendly letters with the touch of a keen human interest. His generous receptivity multiplied the appeals. He sought relaxation in the intimate contacts of old friendships, and this led him even in his diversions often to give himself to an undue exertion instead of rest.

The crisis came in his fateful western trip last summer. There had been solemn warning in the tragic experience of his distinguished predecessor, who, overcome by incessant labor, was struck down in the midst of fatiguing journeys and addresses in which he made response to the imperious demands of leadership. The Presidency is a superoffice, but nature, imposing her limitations upon the greatest, has supplied no supermen to fill it. President Harding's health had been impaired by the exceptional strain of the preceding winter, when to official cares had been added the heaviest burden of anxiety a devoted husband could bear. But as this burden was lifted and his skies brightened with the coming of the spring, his buoyant nature made light of the solicitude of those about him. He desired to make the trip to Alaska in order to see for himself its wonders, to appraise by personal examination the resources and exigencies of that great territory. Having been in office over two years, he wished to address the people upon the achievements of his administration and to present directly to them his conception of the solution of urgent problems. Above all, he craved the inspiration of direct contact with the people in many communities and the assurance of their personal interest and kindly support. That to every Executive, however masterful, is the wine of life.

> It is heartening—

Said President Harding—

> to those charged with the affairs of government to go out over the land and see the reflexes of sentiment and the measurable contentment and hopefulness that come from the enjoyment of fairly fortunate conditions. * * * It is a joy to get out and breathe the wholesome atmosphere of the expanding West.

He made his journey to Alaska, and in the course of six weeks delivered about 85 speeches, many of which had been carefully prepared and were most instructive discussions of a vast range of topics, such as the International Court of Justice, transportation problems, agriculture, law enforcement, taxation and expenditures, national business conditions, social justice, development, reclamation and water utilization, the Territory of Alaska; and there was another address, which he had written and personally released for publication but was unable to deliver, giving a comprehensive review of foreign relations.

Throughout his journey he was received with the most cordial greetings. Warmed and uplifted by the enthusiasm of the countless thousands who were fascinated by the charm of his presence and hung upon his words, and perhaps with an instinctive feeling, not less real because unexpressed, that he was transcending the limits of his strength and, borne by a current he was unable to resist, was hastening to the end, he displayed an earnestness and dignity and a convincing quality of utterance, especially in his extemporaneous speeches, by which he surpassed himself in eloquence and moving appeal.

It was just before the breakdown that he stepped on foreign soil at Vancouver and voiced our historic friendship for the people of the great Dominion.

> What object lesson of peace is shown to-day—

He exclaimed—

> by our two countries to all the world. No grim-faced fortifications mark our frontiers; no huge battleships patrol our divided waters; no stealthy spies lurk in our tranquil border hamlets. * * * Our protection is in our fraternity; our armor is our faith; the tie that binds more firmly year by year is ever-increasing acquaintance and comradeship through interchange of citizens; and the compact is not of perishable parchment, but of fair and honorable dealing, which, God grant, shall continue for all time.

It was after he was stricken and in his name, although not by himself, that the last address he had prepared was delivered, breathing the deeply religious sentiment which formed the basis of his philosophy of life and of the service and fellowship which make life attractive whether in station high or humble. And these were his last words to his fellow countrymen:

> We need less of sectarianism, less of denominationalism, less of fanatical zeal and its exactions, and more of the Christ spirit, more of the Christ practice, and a new and abiding consecration and reverence for God. I am a confirmed optimist as to the growth of the spirit of brotherhood. * * * We do rise to heights at times when we look for the good rather than the evil in others and give consideration to the views of all. The inherent love of fellowship is banding men together, and when envy and suspicion are vanquished fraternity records a triumph and brotherhood brings new blessings to men and to peoples. * * * Christ was the Prince of Peace, and we who seek to render His name glorious must move in the ways of peace and brotherhood and loving service.

Then swiftly came the end. The tired heart, pressed beyond its powers, could no longer respond. Not long before, in intimate converse, when informed of the gravity of his condition and of the probability that if rescued from the immediate peril he would still be condemned to a life of invalidism and to the exercise of a constant care which would preclude the resumption of the routine of his labors, he had exclaimed:

Well, if that is so, this story might as well come to an end.

And that was true. The only life he desired—that of energy and usefulness—he could no longer hope to enjoy. Without warning and in a moment of apparent refreshment there was a slight movement and he was gone. The cares of his stewardship were lifted and he was at rest in God's peace.

To the people who with unfailing interest had followed his experiences and marveled at the extent of his activities and his apparently inexhaustible vigor the news of his illness and the grave bulletins issued from his bedside caused an indescribable shock, and as they were being comforted with some words of reassurance and hope was revived the final dread announcement was spread through the land by myriad messengers.

The Nation poured out its feelings in unprecedented tribute. As the body of the beloved President was borne from San Francisco across the continent to Washington it passed in the vast stretch of country through almost continuous lines of silent mourners, while in towns and villages and cities entire populations were massed to express not merely interest and respect but the sense of personal loss and profound grief. To the one most stricken and bereft, suddenly passing from the radiant sunshine to the darkest shadows but meeting destiny with a supreme courage, the heart of the people went out in deepest sympathy. In this emotion political differences were forgotten and the voices of criticism were hushed. A united people stood before the open tomb.

From the Executive Mansion and the Capitol, from the impressive official ceremonies, from the seat of highest distinction, and the center of the exercise of an influence which had extended throughout the world, the body of Warren G. Harding was brought to the city where he had won his first success and to his father's house. Never was there more impressive scene than this return to the place where in the strength and glory of young manhood he had put forth his earliest efforts. In a flash were revealed the ardor, the hope, the opportunities of this favored people; the privilege, the power, and vanity of human life.

Already, and immediately after the passing of the late President, among the hills of Vermont, in a father's house, and a boyhood home, stood another called to assume the responsibilities which permitted no hiatus in authority. Here was the symbol not only of the stability and continuity of administration of Government but of the constant renewal of the life of the Republic in modest, unspoiled homes, and stout patriotic hearts, where the old virtues of simplicity and sobriety, of industry and self-denial, are cherished and practiced, where are found the never-failing springs of our national strength. Without a moment's uncertainty or confusion, a new and skillful helmsman took his place at the wheel, and the ship of state, responding to his sure guidance, held on her course.

Warren G. Harding gave his life to his country. No one can do more than that. He exhausted himself in service, a martyr in fidelity to the interests of the people for whom he labored with a passionate devotion. He was a man of the people, indulging no consciousness of superiority, incapable of arrogance, separated from them neither by experience nor by pride nor by eccentricity. He was a brother to all whose strivings in countless communities, whose eagerness, adaptability, energy, venturesomeness, and common sense give the stamp of the American character. Nothing human was alien to him, and he had "the divine gift of sympathy." He wrought mightily for the prosperity of the Nation and for the peace of the world, but he clothed the exercise of power with the beautiful garment of gentleness. If American life, with all its possibilities of conflict and turmoil, is to be worth living, it must be lived in the spirit of brotherly understanding, of which he will ever be an exemplar in high office.

Let who has felt compute the strain
Of struggle with abuses strong,
The doubtful course, the helpless pain
Of seeing best intents go wrong.
We, who look on with critic eyes,
Exempt from action's crucial test,
Human ourselves, at least are wise
In honoring one who did his best.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. The Chaplain of the Senate will pronounce the benediction.

The Rev. J. J. Muir, Chaplain of the Senate, pronounced the benediction, as follows:

May the grace of our Lord, Jesus Christ, the love of God our Father, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit be with us now and always. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. The purpose of the assembly having been now accomplished, it will be dissolved.

Thereupon the President and his Cabinet, the diplomatic corps, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Senate retired.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE THANKS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 14, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 14.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to the Hon. Charles E. Hughes for the able and appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of Warren G. Harding, late President of the United States, in the Representatives' Hall before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests on the 27th day of February, 1924, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved further, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of Warren G. Harding be requested to communicate to Mr. Hughes the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late President Harding, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.), in accordance with order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 28, 1924, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 28, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we come this morning with gratitude as the recipients of Thy infinite mercy. We rejoice before Thee that Thou canst be to us a very near and a very accessible presence. We would have Thee rule in our hearts, direct all our plans, and ever be ready to succor us in time of need. Be very gracious in Thy dealings this day, and help us to fulfill Thy good pleasure. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LATE PRESIDENT HARDING.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had adopted a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 14) providing that the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. Charles E. Hughes for the memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of Warren G. Harding, late President of the United States, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the concurrent resolution just received from the House be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 14.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to the Hon. Charles E. Hughes for the able and appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of Warren G. Harding, late President of the United States, in the Representatives' Hall before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests on the 27th day of February, 1924, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved further, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of Warren G. Harding be requested to communicate to Mr. Hughes the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed and bound in cloth, in the form of eulogies, 24,000 copies of the oration delivered by the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes in the House of Representatives during the exercises in memory of the late President Warren G. Harding on February 27, 1924, including all the proceedings and the program of exercises, of which 8,000 copies shall be for the use of the United States Senate and 16,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable photogravures to be bound with the proceedings.

STABILIZATION OF AGRICULTURE.

VIOLATIONS OF ANTITRUST ACTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, in response to Senate resolution 73 (submitted by Mr. KING and agreed to January 21, 1924) directing the Attorney General to report to the Senate the particulars of cases sent to him by the Federal Trade Commission in violation of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to law, a letter from the Judge Advocate General of the Navy describing certain valueless records which are no longer needed in the transaction of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and asking for action looking toward their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The President pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE and Mr. SWANSON members of the committee on the part of the Senate, and ordered that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
Department of State.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, R. A. Sneed, secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of senate concurrent resolution 6, passed by the senate and house of representatives February 2 and 9, respectively, 1924, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of State.

Done at the city of Oklahoma City this 20th day of February, A. D. 1924.

[SEAL.] R. A. SNEED,
Secretary of State.

Senate concurrent resolution 6. (By soldiers' relief committee.)

Memorializing Congress of the United States to consider and enact a law providing for adjusted compensation to soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses who served honorably in the World War.

Whereas the soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses who served honorably in the World War by their entrance into the service offered their service and their lives in defense of the Nation and its principles and evidenced the most supreme American patriotism, and by their entrance into the service abandoned their individual properties, vocations, and business at their respective homes and were deprived of the opportunity of participating in the opportunities commercially so profitable and wonderful by virtue of the activities of war; and

Whereas the compensation provided for and paid to those who served in the World War was less than 25 per cent of the most common wages paid for daily labor to civilians during the period of the war; and

Whereas subsequent to establishment of peace the National Government has paid to railroad corporations taken over during the war additional adjusted compensation to approximate amount of $824,000,000, and has paid to war contractors an additional adjustment on war contracts with the Government of an approximate amount of $700,000,000, and has paid to civilian Federal employees an adjusted compensation of $265,000,000, and to Federal civilian employees of Army and Navy an adjusted compensation of $235,000,000; and

Whereas it is not in keeping with the American policy to discriminate against its citizens, and especially should that not be done as against those who offered their lives and property in defense of the Nation during the World War; and

Whereas France, England, Australia, New Zealand, Italy, and Canada have heretofore paid adjusted compensation to their soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses who served honorably during said war: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oklahoma (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, profoundly urged to give mature consideration and to enact a law making an adjustment in compensation to the soldiers, sailors, marines, and nurses who served honorably in the World War, to the end that the patriotic service during the war of the American soldier, sailor, marine, and nurse may be on a parity in so far as compensation for service is concerned with the common daily labor of those in civil life during the emergency.

That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Oklahoma are urged to support such a provision of law.

That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to both branches of Congress and a copy to each member of the Oklahoma delegation therein.

Adopted by the senate this the 2d day of February, 1924.

F. A. CALVERT,
Acting President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house of representatives this the 9th day of February, 1924.

W. D. MCBEE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Correctly enrolled:

C. B. LEEDY,
Vice Chairman Committee of Enrolled and Engrossed Bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from the Society of Automotive Engineers (Inc.) praying for the passage of legislation authorizing the attendance of Government experts at meetings participated in by nongovernmental persons and that necessary appropriations be made therefor, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, president, and Mrs. Edward Franklin White, legislative chairman, of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, of Minneapolis, Minn., and Indianapolis, Ind., respectively, praying that the Isle of Pines be placed under the administration of the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from Robert Lee Wright, of Washington, D. C., relative to certain letters patent, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegrams, letters, and resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. EDGE. I desire to have inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Finance Committee a letter addressed to the National Headquarters American Legion, Indianapolis, Ind., by De Witt Coleman Post, No. 167, of Tenafly, N. J., opposing "adjusted compensation for able-bodied veterans of the World War."

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DE WITT COLEMAN POST, No. 167, AMERICAN LEGION,
Tenafly, N. J., February 9, 1924.

National Headquarters American Legion, Indianapolis, Ind.

DEAR SIRS: At a meeting of the De Witt Coleman Post, No. 167, American Legion, Tenafly, N. J., held on February 6, 1924, notices of which had been mailed to every member advising that a vote on adjusted compensation would be taken, and which meeting resulted in the largest attendance since organization, it unanimously voted that this post go on record as opposed to any form of adjusted compensation for able-bodied veterans of the World War, and it was further unanimously voted that the result of this vote as herein embodied in this letter be forwarded through proper channels to National and State headquarters of the American Legion, to be followed three day's later by copies of this letter to the President of the United States and the congressional Representative from this district and to the press.

H. LEROY DEMAREST,
Post Commander.
S. M. WEEKS,
Post Adjutant.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a resolution adopted by the St. Joseph's Mutual Aid Society, of Fort Smith, Ark., favoring the passage of the so-called Newton relief bill, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry clerks and carriers of the Forrest City (Ark.) post office, praying for the passage of legislation increasing the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a letter from C. A. McDonald, secretary Federated Shop Crafts of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, of St. Louis, Mo., together with an article from the Kansas City Star, calling attention to propaganda being carried on by the railroads and some of their employees against amendments to the transportation act, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania presented a memorial of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, praying for the passage of legislation reducing the fees charged for the issuance of passports and visés, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KEYES presented the petition of Arthur S. Frazier and 65 other citizens in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation repealing or reducing the so-called nuisance and war taxes, especially the tax on industrial alcohol, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NORBECK presented the petitions of Jesse J. Baker and 56 other citizens of Reliance and Oacoma; of Albert Schinn and 20 other citizens of Canton; of R. H. Shepard and 72 other citizens of Mellette, Brentford, and Conde, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the repeal or reduction of the so-called nuisance and war taxes, especially the tax on industrial alcohol, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER. I present a resolution recently adopted by the National Farmers' Union, at Omaha, Nebr., favoring a Constitutional amendment prohibiting the further issuance of tax-exempt securities, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by National Farmers' Union, Omaha, December 21, 1923.

The constantly growing volume of tax-exempt securities imposes an unjust burden on the owners of tangible property. We therefore urge the prompt submission of a constitutional amendment for the correction of this injustice. In this connection we renew our objection to the proposed sales tax and again demand the restoration of the excess-profits tax and the retention of the higher surtaxes on incomes. We also urge the enactment of a graduated inheritance and gift tax law that would take all of an estate in excess of $1,000,000.

Mr. CAPPER also presented the petition of Great Western Lodge, No. 24, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway System, of Parsons, Kans., praying for the passage of legislation granting increased compensation to postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions of the American Legion Auxiliary, Kansas department, of Topeka, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation granting adjusted compensation to veterans of the World War, and requesting that the so-called Forbes investigation be pushed with all possible vigor, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition, numerously signed, of citizens of Girard, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation granting adjusted compensation to veterans of the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce, of Emporia, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation restricting the production of narcotics to the medical and scientific needs of the world, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FESS presented a resolution of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, Portsmouth Lodge, No. 840, of Portsmouth, Ohio, protesting against the passage of the so-called Johnson selective immigration bill, as being discriminatory, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Holgate, Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation repealing or reducing the so-called nuisance and war taxes, especially the tax on industrial alcohol, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions, numerously signed, of citizens in the eighth congressional district of Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation granting adjusted compensation to veterans of the World War, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition, numerously signed, of members of the New Era Club of Caldwell, Ohio, praying an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Asbestos Workers Union No. 3 at the International Association of Heat and Frost Insulators and Asbestos Workers, at Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation restricting the production of narcotics to the medical and scientific needs of the world, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition, numerously signed, of citizens of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation repealing or reducing the so-called nuisance and war taxes, especially the tax on automobiles and parts, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota presented the petitions of H. H. Stonjohann and 27 other citizens and of Walter Pilchkowskii and 60 other citizens, of Browns Valley and vicinity, in the State of Minnesota, praying for the passage of legislation repealing or reducing the so-called nuisance and war taxes, especially the tax on industrial alcohol, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petitions of Mrs. J. D. Morrison and 40 others, of Winona; Earl B. Walters and 55 others, of Nashua; H. H. Brier and 15 others, of St. Paul; and J. C. Peterson and 120 others, of Blooming Prairie, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the passage of legislation granting adjusted compensation to veterans of the World War, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorials of Albert A. Uecker and 62 others, of Gaylord, and E. H. Gade and 53 others, of Gaylord, in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the passage of legislation creating a Federal department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of the Yellow Cab Co. and five other taxi companies of Minot, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation reducing Federal licenses on taxi and bus service, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of H. E. Fraser and 11 other rural letter carriers of Emmons County, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to rural carriers an equipment and maintenance allowance equal to that paid city mounted carriers, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the petition of Charles Knutson and 17 other citizens of Sargent County, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation creating an export corporation and remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called Mellon tax-reduction plan, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petitions of A. Weber and 101 other citizens of Ashley, of Mike Schlenker and 131 other citizens of Wells County, and of W. Welin and 21 other citizens of Omemee, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the tariff duty on wheat, the repeal of the drawback provision and the milling-in-bond privilege of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act of 1922, and the establishment of a Government export agency, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Bergen Community Farmers' Club, of Pekin, N. Dak., favoring the enactment of legislation providing a $50,000,000 revolving loan to the livestock industry, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the memorial of Walter Rick and 50 other citizens of McKenzie County, N. Dak., remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called Mellon tax-reduction plan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Henry S. Grunde and 15 other citizens of Eddy County, N. Dak., praying for the adoption of the so-called Mellon tax-reduction plan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of George Heilman and 24 other citizens of Golden Valley, N. Dak., remonstrating against the passage of legislation creating a Federal department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR BORAH.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on January 5 last the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] delivered a very interesting and instructive address in New York City before the National Republican Club on the general question of taxation. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator repeat the statement? I could not hear it, although I endeavored to do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On January 5 last the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] delivered a very interesting and instructive address in New York City before the National Republican Club, a nonpartisan gathering, on the general question of taxation. I have a copy of it here, sent to me from New York City, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF SENATOR WILLIAM E. BORAH, OF IDAHO, BEFORE THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CLUB JANUARY 5, 1924.

Senator BORAH spoke as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, Commander Spafford, and friends, I am a little at a loss to understand why I was invited here to discuss the subject which is before the club. I do not feel at all that I am an expert upon the subject which is before you, especially the tax-reduction feature of it. The Secretary of the Treasury has presented a plan for the reduction of taxes, and I would feel at a loss to undertake to add anything to what has been said by his representatives here upon that subject, or what has been said by the Secretary a number of times in public print. Whatever else may be said for or against Secretary Mellon, he is a financier. He has been caught with the goods on him and we know that he is. But I am tremendously interested, and have been for some time—indeed, ever since the signing of the armistice—in curtailing national expenditures and reducing taxes. I think it has reached a point where it is not only an economic problem but it is a moral problem, and I want to present the few remarks which I have to submit to you in a rather broad view of the subject of expenditure and of the reduction of taxes.

"While I should, of course, be greatly interested in any proposition for the reduction of taxes, yet I would not be so profoundly concerned about this matter if I did not feel that it is a move, the beginning of a nation-wide fight, including cities, States, and the National Government, to reduce expenditures and to relieve the country from the demoralizing effect of these increased taxes. [Applause.]

"I call your attention at the beginning to a few figures along this line. We may broaden the discussion to what seems to me to be really included in this move. The tax bill in 1913 for State, local, and Federal Government to the American people was $2,194,000,000. In 1921 it was $8,363,000,000. That was in the short space of eight years. Since that time the Federal burden has been somewhat reduced, but the State taxes were 8 per cent higher in 1922 than they were in 1921. The per capita tax in 1903 was $17.03; in 1913, $22.73; in 1922, $64.63; and in some of the cities $91 per capita.

"My friend across the table spoke of creeping paralysis. This is something worse. If this expenditure and this waste of public funds terminated with the war, or if it had been peculiar to the period of the war, we would not be so much alarmed over the situation, but it is a condition of affairs which has confronted us for the last 20 years, growing worse year by year, in city, in State, and Nation.

"I beg my friend here to my right—Commander Spafford—to bear in mind that some of us look upon this contest as involving the very institution which he and his comrades went forward to preserve. [Applause.]

"In 1913 we took 6.4 per cent of the national income for taxes. In 1922 we took 12.1 per cent. And now let me call your attention to a few figures which relate particularly to my own part of the country, because I have the good fortune, while not a member of the farm bloc, to live in a farmer's country.

"The farmers' tax bill in 1913 was $624,000,000. In 1922 it was $1,436,000,000. Measured by the ratio of income, the farmer's taxes of 1913 were 10.6 per cent on the return of his income, as compared with 4.1 per cent of the remainder of the community.

"In 1922 the ratio of the farmer was 16.6 per cent, leaving the balance of the community with 11 per cent. One of the most important features of our situation in the West is that of freight rates. We are practically cut off from the eastern part of this country by reason of the fact that while we produce, we can not reach you with our products without paying a bonus to the railroad. But, my friends, I realize that so long as we impose the taxes upon the railroads which we are doing, and at the rate at which we are doing, it is idle to tell the American farmer that you are going to reduce freight rates. [Applause.]

"Let me call your attention to this situation with reference to the railroad, because this tax question touches us at every point of life and from every angle of industrial activity.

"In 1892 the railroad tax per mile was $209; in 1902 it was $272; in 1913 it was $485; in 1922 it was $1,241 per mile.

"We are interested, therefore, in what I hope may prove a great movement to lift the burden and at the same time to call the attention of the American people to the fact that they are traveling along a road which means disaster.

"There is one thing that is very difficult for us western people to escape, and that is taxation, because everything we have got is on top of the surface, very little in untaxed security. So I have in a humble way been an advocate of tax reduction and the curtailment of expenditure since the signing of the armistice, and that brought me in conflict with men whom no one desires to offend, not only for political reasons but for sentimental reasons, and that is the boys who were at the front during the great World War.

"Some time ago I contributed an article to the press upon the subject of agricultural conditions and the tax burden, and I mentioned the fact in one of the great agricultural counties of the West I had seen a newspaper carrying 6,000 items—notice of tax sales of different kinds of property—and I suppose I must have received a dozen letters from New York City alone asking me if I were not mistaken or if it was not a misprint; was not my figure 600 instead of 6,000? But I was not mistaken.

"The figures were correct, and they present a situation which, as I said a moment ago, makes the question of tax reduction and the curtailment of public expenditures not merely an economic question but a moral question which involves American homes and American families. In other words, these figures show the increase of taxes during the past six or eight years and to my mind present the most searching tragedy in American life to-day. The anxiety, the discouragement, and the broken plans underneath this tax burden, language is inadequate to tell.

"You people here in the East, in the great industrial center, know well your problem, and I also know that it is serious enough. Indeed, no man, woman, or child, no part of the entire country, and no kind of legitimate business escapes the demoralizing effect of these constantly increasing taxes and this constantly increasing tax burden. But while your situation here in the East is serious enough, in my mind, it is more serious elsewhere. Out in these great agricultural regions to which I call attention, where in the last analysis must be found the source of our national wealth and strength, the point from which we are fed, there is a condition far more serious than yours, and a patient, dogged struggle is going on to preserve homes and farms by reason in a large measure of these taxes which no one can appreciate who has not come in contact with them. These men and women who have tamed the desert, who under the most adverse circumstances have opened up farms and made homes, who have suffered and sacrificed, after 50 years of struggle now stand in mortal dread of the coming of the tax collector with his ever-increasing burden. They have seen their taxes mount from 300 per cent to 500 per cent in the brief space of a few years, and in thinking over what has happened, they are infinitely more alarmed about what may happen. This mad saturnalia for spending is even more alarming to them than their present plight. The question of tax reduction ought to be made a crusade in this country. [Applause.]

"Men may differ as to the details of the tax bill, but we ought not to differ, my friends, as to the task or as to the duty which devolve upon us at this time. The subject is here. It can be neither side-stepped nor mystified, and in my opinion, those who cavil or side-step the issue, those who refuse to meet it will find that it is a dangerous thing to deal in mere expediency with so grave a problem. There is one thing that we ought not to do in the present situation in this country and that is to underestimate either the intelligence or the intensity of thought of the American voter. A man may be for the bonus, if he thinks it is right, although I differ with him. A man can be for tax reduction and he ought to be. But you can not be for both. [Applause.] You can not take off a burden temporarily of one hundred and fifty or two hundred million dollars and add on a permanent burden of three to five billion dollars and call it a tax reduction. [Applause.]

"It would be too great a strain upon the credulity of the voter. [Laughter.] It would be a dangerous experiment. It would defeat any political party that would undertake it, and it ought to. When the political seas are calm and the voyagers are all happy and content, it may be all right to proceed upon the mere question of expediency or try to calculate how many votes are on one side or how many on another, but it is a dangerous experiment when there is a storm on and the people have concentrated their minds upon the question of how they are going to get relief.

"Now, permit me to digress just a moment. Of course, the whole fire upon this question now is centered upon Congress—a lack of unanimity. Well, of course, there is never unanimity in Congress. It would be a dull and monotonous place if that were so. But, my friends, I think there is a lack of unanimity with the administration. At a time when economy should be the cry and is the cry, at a time when the morals of those who are in favor of tax reduction is high, I dislike very much to see departments at Washington and the heads of departments coming in asking for increased appropriations of from fifty to a hundred million dollars. [Applause.]

"The Secretary of War has filed a report—a very able gentleman, also a financier—and he says there is no war in sight, but he wants to increase the Army to 150,000 and the National Guard to 268,000, I believe; and the Navy comes along and says it wants to tilt the guns a little at a cost of thirty millions and build $40,000,000 worth of airplanes.

"Now, my friends, of course we are not going to break down entirely upon the question of national defense, but in my opinion the strongest and most commanding nation upon the face of the earth to-day is the nation which is economically sound, economically strong, and whose people are happy, prosperous, and contented. [Applause.] We ought to present a united front upon the question of holding these tax burdens down to the necessity of the situation, and I trust that those who are in favor of tax reduction, especially some of the great papers of New York, all understand that they are demoralizing the fight very much by advocating that we take $100,000,000 and put it upon these unnecessary bureaus. If you want to defeat it, that is a good way to do it. In other words, it would be difficult to ask Congressmen and Senators to refuse the American soldier if you are going to contribute it to a cause which they do not think essential. I say that for the reason that I am interested in the tax reduction, and I am not interested in any particular individual.

"The great obstacle to be overcome in tax reduction is the bonus. I am very clear in my mind; I think everybody else is. I think Commander Spafford is perfectly clear on that proposition—that you can't have the bonus and tax reduction too. He says that he is in favor of tax reduction compatible with paying the bonus—compensation. [Laughter.]

"I assume, as Commander Spafford said, that those who favor the bonus are interested in the bonus or the compensation bill and want to do something to aid materially, economically, and financially those who were in the war. It doesn't make any difference how you arrive at the conclusion, what you want to do is to contribute something to the material comfort and welfare of those who were at the front or who were ready to go to the front. Well, my friends, in my opinion, there is no way in the world by which you can contribute to the welfare of the soldier at this time so much as to bring this country back to an economically sound basis. [Applause.]

"These brave men are now back in civil life. They have entered their several avocations, callings, and professions. They are a part of the economic and politic life of the country. If they stood apart, were segregated, and separated from the other portion of the country you might contribute something to their welfare and they might feel the material benefit of it, but just in so far as you hold back the American farmer, the American business man, or deaden the effort to get back to a prosperous condition in the country, just so far you affect every single ex-service man who is now part of the civil life of the country. They can not escape the effect of it upon the country any more than you business men can escape from the effect of it, because they are a part of it, and as said by the gentleman across the table, they will contribute in a very large measure to the payment of their own compensation. So, if we view it from the standpoint of material benefit alone, it seems to me that it is a mistake to assume that you can discourage business and discourage agriculture and continue to add to this burden and at the same time help the American ex-service man.

"But, my friends, I do not regard the economic argument as the most serious objection to the bonus or to compensation. I have felt from the beginning that it was a mistake, a very serious mistake, to put it upon that ground alone. If compensation can be justified as a matter of principle, if it can be sustained as a sound policy of government, then I would not regard the increase of taxes as a sufficient argument against the payment of the obligation, if it be such or so called. In other words, if there is any way by which to pay for such services in dollars and cents, if there is any rule of compensation by which you can estimate the value of such services, and finally, if it is wise and sound as a matter of government, if it is believed to be in the interest of institutions which rest at last upon the unpurchased and unpurchasable loyalty of the citizen, then let us call these young men to the pay window and apologize for these five years' delay. But, my friends, there is a very prevalent feeling in this country, a feeling now shared by hundreds and thousands of ex-service men, that this pittance, this belated dole, is neither compensation nor gratitude; that the exchange which the soldier will receive and the one which he will most cherish in the future comes not from the coffers of the Government but from the hearts and minds of the American people [applause], and that the acquittance which he in turn signs is not a Treasury receipt but a sense of duty gloriously performed.

"I think, my friends, if you could look into the hearts and read the minds of those who are opposed to the bonus, you would find there no lack of appreciation, no want of gratitude; but we can not bring ourselves to believe that it is any manifestation of appreciation or that it is any expression of gratitude to offer these men a charwoman's wage for the magnificent service which they performed during the war. [Applause.]

"Cæsar's legion, the Old Guard of Napoleon, Washington's veterans at Yorktown, Meade's men at Gettysburg, Grant's bronzed heroes of the Wilderness never faced a greater ordeal nor met that ordeal with finer fortitude and more gallant bearing than these men, practically untrained and undisciplined, met the ordeal in that indescribable hell at Chateau-Thierry and Belleau Wood; and when I am asked to fix a compensation as a legislator for such service at two or three dollars a day I can not but feel down in my heart that I am detracting from the record; that I am robbing the soldier of part of his great asset in the future struggle for success, an asset the value of which no one can overestimate. If I were a soldier with the record behind me that these men have, looking forward to the commendation and approval and support of my countrymen, seeking for success among 110,000,000 people, I would defy any man to write across my record 'Adjusted compensation.' [Applause.] It is not compensation; with all respect to those who call it such, it is absurd to call it compensation. Why, the boys carrying water upon the public works at Washington receive twice a day what these boys propose to take as compensation. No; if it were compensation, I ask you again, how would you fix it? What price would you fix? It was a service which they performed concerning which you can not fix a value in compensation, and in after years you will thank God that your Government didn't do so.

"The cry has been raised in this country by hundreds and thousands of ex-service men—for the disabled, everything; for the able-bodied, nothing. With all due respect to those who hold a different opinion, I think it was a glorious thing to do. It points magnificently in the right direction. It tells you and me of that reserve character, that reserve patriotism, that reserve citizenship upon which we depend in this country for the future more than we do upon constitutions and laws. The American soldier did a most distinguished service when he won the World War, as he did. [Applause.] No pen can adequately tell the story.

"If the American soldier will now give us a new rule in civil life, if he will give us a new rule in American politics, if he will lift this great American game above the level of expediency and gain, if he will help give us a party in this country which is not afraid to lose an election, and if he will give us a breed of public men who are not afraid to lose office, the glory of the past will not excel that of the future. [Applause.]

"We hear and see in these days from the American Legion and everybody else that the world is asking for leadership, that America is asking for leadership, brave, intellectual, moral leadership. Let us begin at home and now by taking the Federal Treasury out of politics, let us give the American taxpayer representation at Washington, and let us do, as some of these ex-service men have indicated, substitute principle for appropriation.

"Let me say to the Republican Party—I do not have an opportunity often to talk to a Republican club—as we face this task, that we want to bear in mind that in politics as in mechanics, the power which is to keep the engine going must be found outside of the machinery. [Applause.]

"The next election will be decided and determined by the voter who will care very little about the party whip and less about party appeal. The question which he will ask the party in power is, 'What have you done for the public weal?' and to that we will have to give answer. We can not win the next election upon anything that we put in the Cleveland platform. We can not win it upon party appeal. We can only win it upon the record which we will make in the Congress of the United States between now and the ides of next November. [Applause.]

"I listened to my friend Spafford, and I must say that in my opinion he made the strongest argument for the compensation bill that I have heard, but I listened with regret to one feature of it, and that is where he undertook to show where the votes were in the coming election. The figures didn't have a very pronounced effect upon me. I got used to that last summer when I was out home and Commander Owsley came into the State and made several speeches against me and booked me for defeat. Of course there are no politics in this. I had voted against the bonus from the beginning, but there was no politics in the speeches which he made against me. A man who has been in the Senate 17 years, at $7,500 a year, does not get very badly excited over the fact that he is going to be retired. [Applause.]

"No, my friends, there is another question involved. A great deal has been said lately about propaganda, on this side and upon that side, propaganda for the bonus, for compensation, propaganda for the tax bill. Well, of course there is propaganda everywhere. There is not anything that comes up in Congress that there is not an onslaught of this propaganda. If a public man undertook in these days to dissect that and to arrive at a conclusion where the most votes were he would be in the insane asylum inside of six months. There is only one way to deal with this miserable propaganda, and that is to sit down and take the bill itself and determine upon its merits and its demerits. That you may be able to do. If you have a conscience and a brain, there is no trouble about doing it, but no man on earth, even after listening to Commander Spafford, could tell where the most votes are upon this question. Better, infinitely better, that we do what we think is right, and let the question of votes take care of itself. If there were 10,000,000 votes upon the other side of the question it would still be the duty of a Senator who disbelieves in the bonus to vote against it. [Great Applause.] We do so not because we fail to appreciate these young men; we do so for the same reason that they performed their service, for the reason that you believed it to be in the interest of your country. Nothing could have deterred you from doing your duty, and I venture to believe that there are men in the Senate of the United States who feel under the same command to do their duty as they see it." [Applause and cheers.]

SITES AND APPROPRIATIONS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the letter and exhibits submitted to the Senate on calendar day, January 29, 1924, by the Secretary of the Treasury in response to Senate Resolution No. 94, submitted by me, calling for information relative to sites acquired and appropriations necessary for the erection of certain public buildings; also a letter addressed to me by Assistant Secretary Moss under date of February 27, 1924.

Based upon the information contained in the letter from Assistant Secretary Moss it appears that there is now available in the Treasury of the United States $9,280,822 for the construction of the certain public buildings referred to in the exhibit which accompanied the letter of Secretary Mellon; that it would be necessary for Congress to appropriate $15,130,780 additional in order that those buildings may be constructed; and that in order to construct suitable buildings on sites heretofore acquired, for which no appropriations have been made, it would be necessary for Congress to appropriate $23,557,500.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that in view of the fact it has been publicly stated that the President is opposed to the enactment of a general public buildings bill it would be in order and appropriate and would show good faith on the part of Congress and the President, assuming that there will be no general public buildings legislation enacted during this session, to give careful consideration to the matter of appropriating the additional funds necessary for the purpose of constructing the buildings heretofore authorized, and also for the purpose of constructing buildings on those sites heretofore acquired for which no appropriations have yet been made.

The situation at this time is that in order to carry out the intent and purpose of Congress to erect buildings on those certain sites—appropriations for which have heretofore been made—it will be necessary to appropriate $15,130,780 in addition to the $9,280,822 heretofore appropriated; and in order to erect suitable buildings on sites heretofore acquired for which no appropriation has been made for the erection of buildings it will be necessary to appropriate $23,557,500, or a total of $38,688,280.

It is well known that there has been no general public buildings legislation since 1913; that millions of dollars have been appropriated for the purpose of acquiring sites for buildings on which no buildings have been erected; and that the Government is now occupying inadequate quarters in many cities and towns at an enormous rental—much greater than the cost would be should the Government own and occupy its own buildings.

It occurs to me it would be much better and that it would not greatly disturb the economic conditions of the country should these appropriations be made available immediately, assuming that a "general public buildings bill" would not meet the approval of the President at this time; and that at a later date Congress could well consider the advisability of enacting legislation for the purpose of acquiring additional sites and erecting suitable buildings thereon in other cities and towns throughout the country where the needs of the public service require and circumstances justify.

In several cases sites were donated on the assumption that a public building would be erected at once. The donors have been deprived of the use and rental of the properties. As an illustration of what is happening, on January 9, 1917, Mr. Charles Murray, sr., and wife, of De Funiak Springs, Fla., donated a valuable lot on which there were improvements returning a nice income, and soon thereafter the Government caused all improvements to be removed. So far as known the Government has not derived any income from that property and neither has Mr. Murray or any other person. It has enhanced greatly in value since 1917 because of the improvements made in the neighborhood.

Mr. President, that is illustrative of the situation over the country. Building sites have been donated or sold at low prices with the understanding that buildings would be erected thereon; in some instances buildings have been authorized and appropriations have been made to construct them, but the appropriation was later found to be inadequate, and now there is necessity for appropriating additional sums sufficient to erect the buildings. I submit these facts and ask that the documents to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD, in connection with what I have stated on the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ERECTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 94, information relative to sites acquired and appropriations necessary for the erection of certain public buildings.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 24, 1924.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In response to Senate Resolution 94, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish certain data in reference to public buildings, I have the honor to submit the following:

The information desired, together with certain additional data not specifically called for by the resolution, but without which the statement in regard to the status of authorized buildings and sites would not be complete, is set forth in Exhibit A, as follows:

(a) Name of each city or town (by States) where authorizations have been made for acquisition of a site, construction of a building on site already owned, or for site and building.

(b) Date site was acquired; or, if not acquired, its present status.

(c) Consideration paid for each site.

(d) Amount authorized for site, site and building, or for building only.

(e) Balance available for building.

(f) Estimated cost of building on site authorized.

(g) Amount of increase required where existing authorization is insufficient.

There is also submitted Exhibit B, which includes the names of certain projects, mentioned in Exhibit A, where drawings have been prepared, or are contemplated, for buildings of a very simple type that may possibly be provided within the existing limit of cost by the adoption of much cheaper methods of construction than has been the practice heretofore of this department; or by furnishing space to satisfy present needs only, without room for future expansion; or by not including accommodations for Government activities that may be located in the places named but where the legislation is for a post office only.

Respectfully,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, February 27, 1924.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your letter of February 22 asking to be furnished with certain totals of the amounts in connection with authorized public buildings and sites contained in Senate Document No. 28. These amounts are as follows:

(1) The total amount of appropriations available for the construction of certain buildings (col. e)---------- $9,280,822
(2) An estimate of the total additional amount necessary for Congress to appropriate in order that those buildings may be constructed (col. g)---------- 15,130,780
(3) The total amount estimated necessary to be appropriated for the construction of buildings on sites heretofore acquired for which no appropriation was made for the construction of a building (col. f)---- 23,557,500

Very truly yours,

MCKENZIE MOSS, Assistant Secretary.

ADDRESS BY NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER (S. DOC. NO. 55).

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have printed as a Senate document an address recently delivered before the Republican State Editorial Association at Indianapolis, Ind., by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, New York, on "The discontent with democracy."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INDIANS IN SAN JUAN COUNTY, UTAH.

Mr. SMOOT. The other day while the Interior Department appropriation bill was under consideration there was an item affecting the Piute Indians and a mistake was made in a statement on the floor of the Senate. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has written me a letter calling attention to the mistaken statement, and I ask that his letter be printed in the RECORD so that both statements may appear there.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 27, 1924.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMOOT: My attention has been attracted to a discussion on the floor of the Senate, in which you took part, during the consideration of certain items affecting Indians in the State of Utah. The discussion referred to took place on Thursday, February 21, and appears on pages 2883 and 2884 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that date.

As there seems to be some misunderstanding on your part and probably on the part of other members of the Senate regarding what this department has been doing, is now doing, and plans to accomplish for the benefit and in the interest of the Indians in San Juan County, Utah, your attention is respectfully invited to the following statement of conditions with respect to these Indians.

In April of last year instructions were issued to one of our allotting agents to proceed to Allen Canyon and that vicinity for the purpose of assisting the Indians in making applications for allotments under the provisions of the fourth section of the general allotment act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L. 388) as amended. The Indians affected by these instructions are members of two small bands of Utes and Piutes who were occupying tracts in Allen Canyon and that vicinity and also along Montezuma Creek, the Utes being led by an Indian named Polk and the Piutes by Old Posey, now dead. It became evident that there was not enough land suitable for allotments to these Indians outside of the boundaries of the La Sal National Forest, and after negotiations with the Department of Agriculture a considerable area consisting of about 13½ sections of land was eliminated from the forest by presidential order for the accommodation of these Indians. In this connection it may be said that some of the Indians had been occupying lands within the boundaries of the forest for a considerable period. Since that time the work has been progressing and applications have been filed in the local land office for the lands occupied and claimed by the Indians as individuals. These applications are being handled through the customary channels and will eventually result in the issuance of trust patents to the Indians concerned.

In addition to this phase of the work, a tract of 40 acres was withdrawn by order of the President dated August 23, 1923, for and as a school site. As section 27 of the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L. 3-34), prohibits the withdrawal of public lands by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise for or as an Indian reservation, except by act of Congress, it became necessary to present the matter to Congress, where it is now pending. In the meantime authority has been obtained for the erection of a building on the tract withdrawn to be used as a schoolhouse. This work is being expedited as much as possible under existing conditions, and it is hoped that all arrangements may be completed for the teaching of the Indian children during the current year.

For your further information attention is invited to the fact that these two bands of Indians, numbering about 200 souls, have been placed under the supervision of the superintendent of the consolidated Ute agency at Ignacio, Colo., and reports on file indicate that he has outlined an extensive program involving the expenditure of more than $8,000 during the present fiscal year, as evidenced by the items here tabulated, which are taken from his report dated February 8, 1924:

Barbed wire, 20,000 pounds	$1,600
Staples, 500 pounds	50
Plowing for Indians who have no horses	600
Roads and bridges on road to canyon	1,000
Tools and machinery for farming, to loan to Indians by stockman	1,000
Blacksmith and carpenter tools for stockman to do repairing for Indians	400
Lumber for blacksmith and carpenter shop	400
Rations for Indians (beat to be purchased in open market after advertising)	1,000
Purchase of seeds for Indians	500
For other general expenses of administration that will occur during the present year	2,000
For small bills contracted by stockman since Sept. 1, 1923, such as hay, oats, camp outfit, and some few tools	200
Total	8,750

It may be added that no special appropriation has been asked for these particular Indians, for the reason that necessary funds have so far been obtainable from various sources, including Ute tribal funds available for use of Indians under the jurisdiction of the consolidated Ute agency. It is not believed that this office has been in any manner dilatory in extending relief to the Utes and Piutes in San Juan County, Utah, at least during the present administration, and you are assured that we intend to do everything necessary with such means as we have at our disposal for their benefit. A letter similar to this has been addressed to your colleague, Hon. WILLIAM H. KING.

Cordially yours,

CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 124) directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to secure information relative to amount of money expended for the purpose of creating public interest favorable to railroad sentiment, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1499) to promote the safety of passengers and employees upon railroads by prohibiting the use of wooden cars under certain circumstances, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 703) making an adjustment of certain accounts between the United States and the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 177) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1787) authorizing the extension of the park system of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 178) thereon.

Mr. GOODING, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 185) to promote agriculture by stabilizing the price of wheat, reported it with amendments, and without recommendation.

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2401) providing for the compensation of retired warrant officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, or any other service or department created by or under the jurisdiction of the United States Government, and warrant officers and enlisted men of the Reserve Corps of the Army and Navy, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 179) thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED.

Mr. WATSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on yesterday they presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) making appropriation for the contingent expenses of the United States Senate, fiscal year 1924.

WEST PEARL RIVER BRIDGE, LOUISIANA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 4807) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across West Pearl River in the State of Louisiana, and I submit a report (No. 176) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Commission of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the West Pearl River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, approximately 1 mile north of Pearl River station in the State of Louisiana, and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PEARL RIVER BRIDGE BETWEEN LOUISIANA AND MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 4808) granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Pearl River between St. Tammany Parish in Louisiana and Hancock County in Mississippi, and I submit a report (No. 175) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Commission of Louisiana in cooperation with the proper authorities of the State of Mississippi, or of Hancock County, in the State of Mississippi, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Pearl River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the Parish of St. Tammany in the State of Louisiana and the County of Hancock in the State of Mississippi, approximately 4½ miles northeast of Pearl River station in the State of Louisiana and 5 miles south of Nicholson in the State of Mississippi and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2666) making appropriation for a loan, reimbursable from tribal assets, to provide capital and credit for the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians having tribal rights on the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) for the relief of the drought-stricken farm areas of Montana; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENTS TO TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000, Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $80,000, and Mr. McKINLEY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 for the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices in the cities of Boston, Mass., St. Louis, Mo., and Chicago, Ill., respectively, intended to be proposed by them severally to House bill 6349, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PUBLICITY OF CERTAIN INCOME-TAX RETURNS.

Mr. McKELLAR. I submit a resolution and ask that it may be read, and will then ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 180) was read, as follows:

Senate Resolution 180.

Whereas the revenue act of 1921, section 257, provides, in part, as follows: "That the returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records, but they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President"; and

Whereas the investigation of oil leases now being conducted by the Public Lands Committee of the Senate has disclosed that E. L. Doheny; E. L. Doheny, jr.; and H. F. Sinclair paid large sums of money to A. B. Fall while Secretary of the Interior under circumstances strongly indicating that said moneys were paid for illegal purposes; and

Whereas from said hearings it is not certain whether the sums were paid to A. B. Fall by E. L. Doheny, E. L. Doheny, jr., and H. F. Sinclair individually or whether they were charged to and paid by corporations controlled, or largely controlled, by those individuals; and

Whereas the income-tax returns of the said individuals and corporations hereinafter named, in which said individuals are interested, would no doubt show the true facts; and

Whereas the Bureau of Internal Revenue permits attorneys' fees and general expenses to be used as deductions in computing net taxable income, and it is advisable to know whether said sums have been so deducted in the income-tax returns of the said E. L. Doheny, E. L. Doheny, jr., and H. F. Sinclair, or the corporations controlled by them and hereinafter named; and

Whereas both E. L. Doheny and H. F. Sinclair have admitted that they contributed large sums to both political parties in the last presidential campaign, and it is desirable to know whether such sums so contributed by the said E. L. Doheny and H. F. Sinclair or by any one of the corporations controlled by them were deducted as attorneys' fees or general expenses in making their income-tax returns; and

Whereas it appears from said investigation that the Hyva Corporation, organized by H. F. Sinclair, was organized under peculiar circumstances and apparently for unnamed purposes, presumably for the purpose of escaping taxation contrary to section 220 of the revenue act of 1921; and

Whereas it appears from said hearings that by reason of said leases the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co., the Mammoth Oil Co., the Selah Corporation, the Hyva Corporation, and H. F. Sinclair, all inseparably connected, have apparently made large profits in the acquirement and sale of stock in said companies, and that an investigation of the tax returns and settlements of each for the year that the leases were consummated and for the years prior and subsequent thereto is advisable; and

Whereas in like manner it appears from said hearings that E. L. Doheny, E. L. Doheny, jr., the Mexican Petroleum Co., and the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. likewise made large profits and that one or the other of them paid large sums in payment to the then Secretary of the Interior in connection with said leases, and that an investigation of the tax returns of E. L. Doheny, E. L. Doheny, jr., the Mexican Petroleum Co., and the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co. for the year in which the leases were consummated and the years prior and subsequent thereto is necessary for the purpose of determining, among other things, whether or not said $100,000 paid to A. B. Fall, Secretary of the Interior, was accounted for in said tax returns or used as a deduction in computing net taxable incomes in one or the other of said companies or in the individual returns of E. L. Doheny or E. L. Doheny, jr.; and

Whereas it appears that the said A. B. Fall received, in addition to his salary and such other incomes as he may have received, the sum of $100,000 from E. L. Doheny and E. L. Doheny, jr., and in another year at least $25,000 from the attorney of H. F. Sinclair, and it is desirable to know whether such sums were included in the income-tax returns of the said A. B. Fall; and

Whereas it has been openly charged in the press that "scores of millions of dollars were wrongfully diverted from the Federal Treasury to the coffers of private oil companies through the interpretation of the discovery act by a special Treasury Department board," and that the truth or falsity of such heinous charges with respect to the oil companies in question can only be determined by an examination of the income-tax returns of said individuals and corporations above referred to: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to turn over to the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, as by law he is authorized to do, the income-tax returns filed by the said H. F. Sinclair, the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co., the Mammoth Oil Co., the Hyva Corporation, the Selah Corporation, E. L. Doheny, E. L. Doheny, jr., the Mexican Petroleum Co., the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., and A. B. Fall, together with all files, claims, papers, settlements, reports formal and informal, adjustments, memoranda, or refunds, and all other files and data attached thereto or connected therewith, in the years for which said leases were consummated and for the years prior and subsequent thereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this resolution. It merely requests the President to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish these tax returns to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, which is now examining this matter. It seems to me that it is a resolution that ought to be passed, and it is information that the Public Lands Committee ought to have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator that this is information which should be had; but in listening to the reading it occurred to me that there are some omissions from the list of corporations enumerated, and I desire to make some inquiry and possibly offer an amendment to the resolution. Therefore I shall have to object to its present consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask, then, that the resolution may be printed and lie on the table, and I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. MOSES. I will say to the Senator that I want to see the resolution in printed form, and that is why I am making the objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will be printed right away, and the Senator can have it to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee desires that the resolution shall lie on the table?

Mr. McKELLAR. That it shall be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

INCOME TAXES OF CORPORATIONS OWNING OIL WELLS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 181) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury report to the Senate the number of corporations which have filed income-tax returns claiming deductions for depletion of oil wells, together with a statement of all deductions and discovery values which have been allowed such corporations, and also a statement of the number and amount of all claims which have been filed for the refund of taxes by such corporations, the grounds alleged for such refunds, what refunds have been allowed, and the number and description of claims for refund which are now pending.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can conceive of no objection to the adoption of the resolution; but, for fear that some Senator may not comprehend its full import, I give notice that I shall ask for its consideration to-morrow. In the meantime I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie over under the rule. Morning business is closed.

RENTAL CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. EDWARDS obtained the floor.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Jersey will permit me, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 158. I should like to state that this resolution simply authorizes a survey to find out the number of vacant houses in the District of Columbia at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the number of the resolution on the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is Order of Business 179. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 158. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it be read.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I have not yielded for legislation. I yielded for a question or some brief remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hold that the Senator from New Jersey will not lose the floor by yielding for the consideration of the resolution. The Secretary will read the resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from New Jersey had the floor——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He had.

Mr. KING. And the Senator yielded for the purpose of introducing a resolution but not for its consideration. I ask the Senator from Delaware to lay aside his resolution temporarily, until the Senator from New Jersey has finished his remarks.

Mr. BALL. If that is the desire of the Senator from New Jersey, who has the floor, I certainly will.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on February 27, 1924, the President approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) making appropriation for the contingent expenses of the United States Senate, fiscal year 1924.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "BARON BERWICK" (S. DOC. NO. 56).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report concerning a claim against the United States presented by the British Government for damages sustained by the British steamship Baron Berwick as a result of a collision in Quiberon Bay, France, on August 22, 1918, between that vessel and the U. S. S. Iroquois (now Freedom), and a further collision in Roscanvel Bay, France, on October 5, 1918, of the U. S. destroyer Truxton with the Baron Berwick. The report requests that the recommendation of the Secretary of War and of the Secretary of the Navy as indicated therein be adopted, and that the Congress authorize the appropriation of the sum necessary to pay the indemnity offered by the representative of the American Expeditionary Forces.

I recommend that, in order to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, the Congress, as an act of grace and without reference to the legal liability of the United States in the premises, authorize an appropriation of an amount which will be equivalent to £6,200.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1924.

ENFORCEMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate at this time in support of my resolution, No. 171; and I further request and will certainly appreciate it if Senators will not interrupt me. If they wish to ask me any questions when I am through, I shall be very glad to answer them if I can.

Mr. President, on the night of the 15th of February, 1924, a United States Senator was struck down by a stray shot while walking along Pennsylvania Avenue accompanied by his wife. Pennsylvania Avenue is the main thoroughfare in our National Capital and one of the historic thoroughfares of the world. It connects the Capitol Building with the White House. The appalling tragedy referred to occurred almost within the shadow of the Capitol. The newspaper stories are to the effect that there was a running battle between an agent of the national prohibition department and suspected bootleggers, in which pistol shots were freely exchanged, and that one going wild struck Hon. FRANK LESTER GREENE, a United States Senator from the State of Vermont, in the head. He is still in the hospital, his life hanging in the balance. Our common prayer is for his speedy and permanent recovery.

The circumstances surrounding this deplorable affair, the prominence and the official position of the innocent victim, the geographical setting, and the criminal recklessness of the prohibition agent and the bootlegger alike, make it stand out like a mountain against the sky. I have been waiting patiently for some one who advocates straight-out prohibition, or for some one who apologizes for the inexcusable excesses of the law-enforcement branch of the national prohibition department, to take official cognizance of this latest evidence of contempt for the general public in the alleged effort to enforce a law that is not enforceable. I have waited in vain. Therefore I have taken the initiative, so far as the Senate is concerned, and have introduced a resolution to investigate the national prohibition department. I do not understand the studied silence on the part of those in authority. To me it has a sinister aspect. Have we reached the point where it is no longer safe for United States Senators to walk along the principal thoroughfares of the Nation's Capital City? Is the law to enforce the eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution so much more sacred than the laws to enforce the other amendments that those charged with its enforcement may without regard to the great third party, the public, engage in pistol duels with lawbreakers, alleged or real, in places where hundreds of people pass to and fro at all hours of the day and far into the night? Is the eighteenth amendment so much more holy and sacred than the fourth and fifth amendments that the enforcement branch of our national prohibition department is justified in violating either one or both of them to enforce it? If so, why?

If I have read the news dispatches aright, the running pistol duel between the prohibition agent and the suspected bootleggers the 15th instant was not an exceptional occurrence but is becoming typical of the methods pursued by the national prohibition department. There have been numerous stories in the public prints about similar running duels in thickly populated and much-traveled sections of our National Capital. The wonder has been that the lamentable tragedy which has riveted the country's attention on the unsavory situation existing in our National Capital was so long delayed. It sometimes takes a great tragedy to shock people into their senses. If the inexcusably careless shooting of a United States Senator will shock the law-enforcement officials in the national prohibition department into their senses to the extent that in the future they will have more regard for the lives of innocent bystanders, it will not have been altogether in vain. However, if it be true that the only way we have of judging the future is by the past, I am not sanguine that even this latest evidence of criminal recklessness and contemptuous disregard for human life will result in bringing about a changed attitude on the part of those in authority in the national prohibition department. They seem to be drunk with power. And like all officials drunk with power they are intolerant rather than tolerant, narrow and cruel rather than broad and sympathetic, Pharisees rather than Samaritans. Christ ended his ministry on earth with the great command that has come ringing down through the centuries, namely, to preach the gospel to all men everywhere. He did not tell us to shoot the gospel into all men everywhere. We are doing a lot of things in the name of Christ nowadays in a manner wholly contrary to anything He ever said or did or taught.

One of the reasons I have given in my resolution why the national prohibition department should be investigated is that it has been publicly charged in the house of its friends that it has broken down. This is a very serious charge. If true, it means that our national prohibition department is not functioning properly. The people are entitled to know whether the charge is founded in fact or in fiction. I would not have presumed to have asked the Senate to add to the number of investigations, either already under way or proposed, if the charge against the national prohibition department had been made solely by antiprohibitionists like myself. But when nationally known friends of prohibition and the Volstead Act make the charge, investigation to ascertain the facts is, in my judgment, justified.

On Sunday afternoon, October 14, 1923, before a mass meeting of delegates to a citizenship conference in the Central High School auditorium, in Washington, D. C., Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, one of the outstanding drys in the country, a Republican, and incidentally mentioned as a candidate for the Presidency, delivered an address. He assured the world that prohibition can and will be enforced, had much praise for the work done by the State Police of Pennsylvania, had a kind word for the Department of Justice, but only criticism for the national prohibition department. For instance:

> The eighteenth amendment has been betrayed in the house of its friends. Measured by the respect accorded to it it has failed, and the reason is that no sincere, intelligent, and concerted nation-wide effort has ever been made to enforce it.

Further along, when telling of the troubles experienced by State enforcement officers, Pennsylvania's prohibition governor made this trenchant criticism of the national prohibition department:

> Unfortunately they are handicapped, because the most elementary principles of good business management have been disregarded in the organization of the Government enforcement work. * * * It is commonly believed, and I share that belief, that certain agents of the Federal department not only wink at the violation of the law but have served, or are serving, as collectors of the six or seven dollars a barrel graft money paid by brewers for immunity.

Three months later, January 16, 1924, when the ultradry Governor of Pennsylvania addressed the Anti-Saloon League jubilee convention in Washington, D. C., his strictures on the national prohibition department's law-enforcement program were even more severe, so severe, in fact, that National Prohibition Commissioner Roy A. Haynes issued a 3,000-word statement in reply. Incidentally that particular jubilee convention was to have been turned into a great law-enforcement rally, the effect of which would reach the farthest nook and corner of the country. But the split between the followers of Governor Pinchot and the followers of Commissioner Haynes became so pronounced that the ambitious program which had been so carefully prearranged was scrapped. The Washington Post is authority for the statement that "Prohibition ranks are split wide open as the result of the '30-year jubilee convention' of the Anti-Saloon League of America, held here to celebrate the fourth anniversary of the dry law going into effect." So that's that with reference to the jubilee law-enforcement convention, about which we heard so much before it convened, and about which we have heard so little since it adjourned. A more dismal failure has probably never been staged by a nation-wide convention of delegates in our National Capital. If the friends of prohibition are at sixes and sevens over their law-enforcement program, how can they expect to command the respect, much less the confidence, of the country, either in their sincerity or in their ability to carry out such a program?

Another biting criticism from an altogether different but friendly source is that of William Dudley Foulke in Good Government, the organ of the National Civil Service Reform League, New York City, republished in the National Municipal Review for January, 1924. The burden of Mr. Foulke's criticism is fairly well summed up in the first paragraph, which reads:

> Commissioner Haynes, of the prohibition enforcement bureau, who used so willingly the clause in the Volstead Act making political plunder of the field service of his unit, who turned out with such alacrity the Democratic scoundrels he found in office and appointed on the recommendations of Republican Congressmen and politicians an equal number of Republican scoundrels in their places, men who have made his service a byword of corruption and inefficiency, this man now publishes what he would have us believe is a fair account of the conduct of the prohibition enforcement service. For a long time his policy has been one of concealment and of insisting that all was going well.

As an illustration of the commissioner's program of concealment, Mr. Foulke tells us that in October, 1922, when the office of the prohibition officer in New York State was being investigated by a Federal grand jury the commissioner gave out a statement that the New York office was in "excellent condition." When the grand jury reported, it was to the effect that the New York office "had been conducted in a disgraceful manner." Mr. Foulke goes on to say that "6 of the enforcement officers and 27 of their dependents were indicted for conspiracy for violating the Volstead Act."

Mr. Foulke takes Commissioner Haynes to task for making an "outrageously disingenuous and misleading statement" in his twenty-first installment of "Prohibition Inside Out," published in the New York Times during the summer of 1923, the statement being to the effect that the prohibition force at that time was "99 per cent honest." Mr. Foulke counters with the statement that "a great proportion of your service is rotten to the core." Leading up to this climax are these illuminating observations:

> You tell us of the 43 convictions, but you say nothing of the almost "numberless" cases mentioned by President Harding in which "immediate dismissal" was necessary. Why are you silent on the Rhode Island service, which had to be reorganized from top to bottom? Why do you tell us nothing of the service in New York, where one director after another with his chief subordinates left the service with the marks of infamy upon his brow? Why nothing of Pennsylvania, where subordinates were actually dismissed by those higher up because they tried to enforce the law? Why nothing of Montana, Wisconsin, and elswhere, where your chief officers were faithless to their trust? I appeal from your misleading statistics to the common consciousness of the country that a great proportion of your service is rotten to the core.

There is other interesting information in Mr. Foulke's article showing that Commissioner Haynes's own figures prove "the enormous number of law violations"; that the report of the Attorney General to the President in regard to the enforcement of the Volstead Act differs very materially from the reports given to the public from time to time by Commissioner Haynes; and that "the inevitable inference is violations of the enforcemen act are increasing day by day and month by month, and that the failure of the bureau to enforce the law under the spoils system is becoming each year more apparent." With the merits of the question uppermost in Mr. Foulke's mind, namely, that absolutely every appointment made by the national prohibition commissioner should be from a civil-service register, as the result of examinations, I shall not deal at this time. My sole purpose in bringing his views to the attention of the Senate is to use them as an argument in support of my resolution calling for an investigation of the national prohibition department.

Mr. President, that those Senators who are interested in how the prohibition department is being run may have the full benefit of the article from which I have quoted, I ask that it be printed in full at the end of my remarks under the caption "Prohibition Inside Out." It is brief, covering but four pages in the National Municipal Review.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, it is a matter of official record that whereas the number of employees in the Washington Bureau of the national prohibition department increased from 503 to 699 from June 30, 1921, to June 30, 1923, and whereas the number of employees in the field service increased from 1,818 to 2,659 during the corresponding period, and whereas the total pay roll increased from $4,029,130 to $5,846,582 during the same period, there was an amazing increase between those dates in the number of criminal prosecutions commenced under the national prohibition act in the various district courts, also an amazing increase in the number of civil prosecutions in the various district courts. In brief, the number of criminal prosecutions increased from 29,114 to 49,021; that is, approximately, 20,000. The number of civil cases increased from 1,898 to 4,109; that is, more than 2,200. I submit herewith figures taken from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, giving the number of employees and the total pay roll for the years 1921 and 1922, and figures for 1923 given my office over the phone by the prohibition commissioner's office, they being omitted from the official report for that year:

Number of employees in Washington bureau June 30, 1921	503
Number of employees in field service June 30, 1921	1,818
Total	2,321
Number of employees in Washington bureau June 30, 1922	596
Number of employees in field service June 30, 1922	2,881
Total	3,477
Number of employees in Washington bureau June 30, 1923	699
Number of employees in field service June 30, 1923	2,659
Total	3,358

The total pay roll for the year 1921 was $4,029,130.

The total pay roll for the year 1922 was $6,045,073.

The total pay roll for the year 1923 was $5,846,582.

From the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1923 we learn that on June 30, 1922, there were 29,562 cases pending in the division of litigation. During the year 178,482 cases were received. Of this number 71,903 represent new violations. One hundred and six thousand five hundred and seventy-nine represent cases transferred to the audit division following consolidation of bureau files. Final action was taken on 67,277 cases, leaving 140,767 cases pending at the close of the fiscal year 1923, as opposed to 29,562 pending at the close of the fiscal year 1922. These figures show how our national prohibition department is getting nowhere fast.

For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1923, there was collected under the tax and tax penalty provisions of the national prohibition act the sum of $728,924.23, as opposed to $1,979,586.94 collected for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922. (Decrease charged to court decision holding that tax penalties under section 35 are not properly assessable and distrainable in the absence of a hearing or trial.) For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1923, the records show 254 indictments for conspiracy were found, netting 107 convictions and fines in the sum of $223,967.50.

FROM THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S REPORT FOR 1921.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, there were 29,114 criminal prosecutions commenced under the national prohibition act in the various district courts. Of this number 21,297 cases were terminated during that period. There were 17,962 convictions. There were 765 acquittals. There were 391 cases dismissed on motion or demurrer. There were 2,179 cases discontinued. The aggregate amount of fines and penalties imposed was $3,360,298. There were 10,365 criminal prosecutions pending at the close of the year.

During the same fiscal year there were 1,898 civil prosecutions commenced under the national prohibition act in the various district courts. Six hundred and twenty-two cases were terminated during that period. The aggregate amount of judgments obtained by the United States was $64,735.

A great many cases that logically involve similar violations have been brought under the internal revenue laws and the customs statutes, the defendants being charged usually with violations of the revenue or customs laws and the national prohibition act in the same indictment or information. The figures set out above cover national prohibition cases only.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. EDWARDS. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I would simply like to make this addition to the statistics given by the Senator from New Jersey: The head of our Baltimore City Health Department has just reported that last year the deaths from alcoholism in the city of Baltimore were 150 per cent of what they were the year before.

Mr. EDWARDS. I thank the Senator from Maryland.

FROM THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S REPORT FOR 1922.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, there were 34,984 criminal prosecutions commenced under the national prohibition act in the various district courts. Of this number 28,743 cases were terminated during that period. There were 22,749 convictions. There were 1,195 acquittals. There were 1,250 cases quashed on motion or demurrer. There were 3,549 cases dismissed. The aggregate amount in fines and penalties imposed was $4,041,456. There were 10,472 cases pending at the close of the year.

During the same fiscal year there were 2,157 civil prosecutions commenced under the national prohibition act in the various district courts. One thousand five hundred and thirty-seven cases were terminated during that period. The aggregate amount of judgments obtained by the United States was $120,255. There were 2,694 civil prosecutions pending at the close of the year.

The above figures cover only cases arising under the national prohibition act. In addition a great many cases have arisen under the internal revenue laws and the customs statutes involving similar violations.

FROM THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S REPORT FOR 1923.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1923, there were 49,021 criminal prosecutions commenced under the national prohibition act in the different district courts. Of this number 42,730 cases were terminated. There were 34,067 convictions. There were 1,770 acquittals. There were 30,654 pleas of guilty; 4,857 cases were nolle prossed or discontinued; 2,036 cases were quashed or dismissed by motion or demurrer. Fines imposed during the year amounted to $5,832,389. At the close of the year 23,052 cases were pending.

During the same fiscal year there were 4,109 civil cases arising under the national prohibition act in the various district courts. Of this number 2,670 cases were disposed of. Judgments aggregating $170,298 were secured. There were 4,064 cases pending at the close of this fiscal year.

These figures are based only on matters arising under the national prohibition act and supplemental legislation. The existing internal revenue and customs laws contain provisions which are applicable to intoxicating liquors, but actions under such laws are not included in above figures. Since the act supplemental to the national prohibition act has been passed, and the decision of the Supreme Court in the Stafoff et al. cases, the customs laws and the internal revenue laws have been used frequently.

Mr. President, my resolution refers to the repeated charges that the national prohibition department holds in contemptuous disregard the fourth amendment and the fifth amendment. It might be well to direct attention again to them. The fourth amendment reads:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or the things to be seized.

The fifth amendment reads:

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Mr. Justice Clarke, of the United States Supreme Court, who delivered the opinion of the court in the case of Gouled v. United States (vol. 255, U. S. Reports), which involved the fourth and fifth amendments, said:

It would not be possible to add to the emphasis with which the framers of our Constitution and this court have declared the importance to political liberty and to the welfare of our country of the due observance of the rights guaranteed under the Constitution by these two amendments. The effect of the decisions cited is: That such rights are declared to be indispensable to the "full enjoyment of personal security, personal liberty, and private property"; that they are to be regarded as the very essence of constitutional liberty; and that the guaranty of them is as important and as imperative as are the guaranties of the other fundamental rights of the individual citizen—the right to trial by jury, to the writ of habeas corpus, and to due process of law. It has been repeatedly decided that these amendments should receive a liberal construction, so as to prevent stealthy encroachment upon or "gradual depreciation" of the rights secured by them by imperceptible practice of courts or by well-intentioned but mistakenly overzealous executive officers.

Further along in the same opinion Mr. Justice Clarke said with particular reference to the fourth amendment:

The wording of the fourth amendment implies that search warrants were in familiar use when the Constitution was adopted, and, plainly, that when issued "upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized," searches and seizures made under them are to be regarded as not unreasonable, and therefore not prohibited by the amendment. Searches and seizures are as constitutional under the amendment when made under valid search warrants as they are unconstitutional, because unreasonable, when made without them.

Still further along in the same opinion, Mr. Justice Clarke lays down this proposition:

A rule of practice must not be allowed for any technical reason to prevail over a constitutional right.

In light of these observations on the fourth and fifth amendments by our highest judicial tribunal the country ought to know officially whether they are being flouted by the national prohibition department, as has been charged. If the charges are false, the sooner it is officially known the better for the national prohibition department. If the charges are true, the sooner it is officially known the better for the country.

There is no special sanctity about the eighteenth amendment. It is an integral part of our Constitution, and as such is the fundamental law of the land. But that is true of the other eighteen amendments also. It is undemocratic, unpatriotic, and un-American to single out any one amendment for special observance. To enforce one amendment by violating another is to commit a crime against the Constitution. The official who enforces the eighteenth amendment at the expense of the fourth, which regulates the power of search and seizure; or the fifth, which provides for due process of law, is himself a lawbreaker, equally culpable with the lawbreaker he seeks, and merits the same punishment. There can be no favored amendment. Each and every one of the 19 amendments is the fundamental law of the land. All are equally a part of the Constitution. And I want to warn those champions of the eighteenth amendment who excuse encroachments on the fourth or the fifth on the ground "the end justifies the means," that they are riding to a fall.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss our prohibition problem at this time. I shall do that later. My present purpose is to bring about an investigation of the national prohibition department along the lines indicated in the resolution which I introduced Monday, the 25th instant. And to that end I have deliberately incorporated in my remarks the estimate of that department by nationally known friends of prohibition law enforcement, excerpts from the official reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1922 and 1923, and excerpts from the official reports of the Attorney General for 1921, 1922, and 1923. I have no pride of opinion with reference to the phraseology of my resolution and shall welcome any suggestion that will strengthen it and make it easier for the committee to make a thorough investigation. There is nothing personal or nothing partisan back of my resolution. The deplorable tragedy which prompted me to introduce it places the proposed investigation on a plane far removed either from personalities or partisanship. I am sure, Senators, regardless of our views on prohibition, we are agreed that steps must be taken to prevent the recurrence of such pitiful fiascoes as the one that resulted in the tragic shooting of one of our own number. It is unthinkable to me that the Senate will refuse to face the issue and decline to pass my resolution either as I have introduced it or in an amended form which will add more teeth to it.

APPENDIX.

[From National Municipal Review, January, 1924.]

PROHIBITION INSIDE OUT.

(By William Dudley Foulke.)

(Published by courtesy of Good Government, the organ of the National Civil Service Reform League, New York City.)

Commissioner Haynes, of the prohibition enforcement bureau, who used so willingly the clause in the Volstead Act making political plunder of the field service of his unit; who turned out with such alacrity the Democratic scoundrels he found in office and appointed, on the recommendations of Republican Congressmen and politicians, an equal number of Republican scoundrels in their places—men who have made his service a byword of corruption and inefficiency—this man now publishes what he would have us believe is a fair account of the conduct of the prohibition enforcement service. For a long time his policy had been one of concealment and of insisting that all was going well. I heard Mr. Haynes in August, 1922, in a speech at a Quaker reunion in my own town of Richmond, declare that his employees were "as high type a force as was found in the Government service," and condemn as "wet" propaganda all disparagement of their work.

On November 15, 1922, in testifying before the House Committee on Appropriations, he said: "We feel much gratified at the present functioning of our machinery." Even as late as last June Mr. Haynes declared in his report that his force was acting at a maximum efficiency under a limited appropriation. Instead of warning the friends of law and order to be on their guard, the effect of this was to lull them into false security. The unwarranted claims of satisfactory enforcement aided the violators of the law to get beyond control. The passing back and forth of the rum-running fleets which once moved under cover tells the story.

On October 4, 1922, the commissioner issued an official statement that the office of the prohibition officer in New York State was in excellent condition, though that office was then being investigated by a Federal grand jury, which reported on October 27 that it had been conducted in a disgraceful manner, and 6 of the enforcement officers and 27 of their dependents were indicted for conspiracy for violating the Volstead Act. The grand jury say in their report:

"Apparently the agents selected for active work of suppressing illegal traffic in whisky have been chosen principally for political reasons, when it was necessary to select men for this work who are worthy of confidence and of such stable character that they would not yield to the temptations to which it was well understood they would be subjected.

"These appointees, being exempt from the civil service laws, were appointed and removed without the restrictions which those laws impose, and consequently the office seems to have been made the dumping ground for influential politicians who secured appointments for their henchmen without proper regard for the qualifications of those chosen."

A little later District Attorney Hayward, quoted in the New York Tribune of December 30, 1922, said that the first knowledge in his office of a great conspiracy came a few weeks previously from a volunteer witness, though the office of the New York prohibition director had most of the facts as early as June and did not see fit to turn them over for prosecution. A chronology of the notorious violation of the laws disclosed by the newspapers presents an appalling array of crimes.

The commissioner has at last awakened from so much of his pipe dream as led him to tell us, and perhaps to believe himself, that all was going well. Concealment was no longer possible, and it became necessary to confess that violations of the law were widespread and dangerous. But still he insists that this is the fault of others—of lax enforcement by State and local officials and of general wickedness. That his own force of corrupt spoilsmen was at the bottom of the lawlessness—this he is still unwilling to confess.

In his twenty-first installment of "Prohibition Inside Out," published in the Times, he thus refers to the derelictions in his own service:

"Within the enforcement organizations we count the cost of the names of our men, dishonest, weak men, and few in number. * * * In mercy to the weak I refrain from turning the page which would reveal the names of those who are fallen by the wayside. * * * As the result of temptation in scores of forms and unceasingly offered, 43 officers of the prohibition unit have been adjudged guilty by the courts since the beginning of the administration. Even so, the force was 99 per cent honest."

A more outrageously disingenuous and misleading statement it would be hard to conceive. Because only 1 per cent had been actually convicted, therefore 99 per cent were honest. Does Mr. Haynes know the percentage of convictions in other crimes? The report of the committee of the bar association at Minneapolis tells us that last year in New York 260 murders were committed and 3 convictions were obtained. This was 1.15 per cent of the murders actually committed, yet here was a crime where the moral force of the community would be in favor of conviction. In respect to the liquor law public opinion is often adverse, and the proportion of violations which escape punishment must be very much larger. It is safe to say that the crimes committed by prohibition agents exceed by many times the number of these agents, a single man often committing scores of them. In his very next article Mr. Haynes says the number of corrupt State officers is large and "those who have been caught are doubtless but a fraction of those who are guilty"; yet he would have us believe that he has caught and punished all the guilty in his own service, and that 99 per cent of his own subordinates are enforcing the law. We know from what we see daily around us that immense quantities of liquor are illegally sold every day with the connivance of prohibition officials. And yet Mr. Haynes says, "Of real corruption the per cent stands at about one-half of 1 per cent." Mr. Haynes, if you believe this, you are deceiving yourself, and the rest of us can no longer credit what you say. You tell us of the 43 convictions, but you say nothing of the "almost numberless cases" mentioned by President Harding in which "immediate dismissal" was necessary. Why are you silent on the Rhode Island service which had to be reorganized from top to bottom? Why do you tell us nothing of the service in New York, where one director after another, with his chief subordinates, left the service with the marks of infamy upon his brow? Why nothing of Pennsylvania, where subordinates were actually dismissed by those higher up because they tried to enforce the law? Why nothing of Montana, Wisconsin, and elsewhere, where your chief officers were faithless to their trust? I appeal from your misleading statistics to the common consciousness of the country that a great proportion of your service is rotten to the core.

Of course, you have some good men in it, men who have resisted enormous temptations, among them your roll of martyrs, as you call them, 30 cases you say, who have been slain in the prohibition service. The memory of these men deserves all honor at the hands of their countrymen, though it is a little hard to understand how such a case as that of John T. Foley, killed by the accidental discharge of his own gun, can be regarded as an instance of voluntary martyrdom.

These things continue and grow down to the present time. On July 1, 1923, Commissioner Haynes dismissed, in New York, 18 prohibition agents because they were "nonproducers." But the new appointments to fill their places were filled by the same political methods which created this nonproduction. On the same day dispatches from Chicago brought word that Roscoe C. Anderson, prohibition director, and John E. Easley, his chief agent, and nine others had been indicted for distributing among stockholders $200,000 worth of liquor stocks, and the Chicago district attorney then announced that charges of perjury against half a dozen agents would be brought before the next Federal grand jury.

Leon Ackerman and George Arnold Fugitt, agents attached to the District of Columbia force, were held under a bribery charge. Ackerman recently declared he had been the victim of a "frame-up" by other prohibition agents. We need not decide the equities between these worthy gentlemen. One way or the other, the guilt lay with members of this disreputable body.

In Mr. Haynes's "Prohibition Inside Out," we have many edifying cases of temptation resisted, of bootleggers skillfully entrapped, of attempted bribery foiled by the efforts of the faithful. As the parties are not named the stories can not be verified or disproved, and we do not hear of the cases where the bootleggers succeeded and the bribery prevailed. He talks, for instance, of the pretense of influences in district attorneys' offices and elsewhere protecting violations of the law, not of the real influences which for a long time actually prevailed. His articles reminded me of a story by Charles O'Conor, the eminent lawyer, once engaged in the prosecution of Tweed and his fellow conspirators. A member of the New York ring once said to him, "They are very disagreeable, these damned lies that the newspapers publish." "Yes; they must be very disagreeable," said Mr. O'Conor, "these damned lies that the newspapers publish, but I would not think that would be what you would find most disagreeable. I should think it would be the damned truths the newspapers publish which you would find objectionable, sir." So it is not the pretended influences of which Mr. Haynes had the best right to complain but the real influences which have prevailed.

But in spite of his desire to make them as small as possible, Mr. Haynes's account itself shows the enormous number of law violations. Take, for instance, the importations from the Bahamas. He says that in 1918 there was only wine of the value of £8,675 sterling and spirits of £6,370, but last year the wine was over £27,000 and the spirits over £100,000. The traffic from St. Pierre, he says, has been enormous, the natives becoming rich out of these profits. He tells of the traps and vaults for storing liquor, covered with soil, whence it is conveyed at night by trucks for shipment in cars loaded with vegetables and destined to be lost in transit. He tells us of farmers who have not raised a hundred dollars' worth of produce in years who now have fine touring cars; he tells of wild parties of rum runners, in which women participate. He tells us of a possible minimum of one million and a half gallons of importations for 1922; of the 29 vessels which were seized and 40 motor boats. He describes the wholesale smuggling at Detroit; the wholesale importations from Montreal across the New York border; he declares that Canada received many millions in taxes from these importations. He describes the highjackers, who rob and murder the bootleggers—the piracy which he says is rampant from the Caribbeans to Newfoundland, as well as in the Great Lakes and Puget Sound and Mexico. He talks much of protection of bootleggers by officials, but he gives his illustrations from the officials of different States and cities and not from his own subordinates. He seeks to divert us from a contemplation of present infamy by golden promises of future performance. Conditions may be bad to-day, but he endeavors to inspire faith by predicting the most satisfactory enforcement of prohibition in times to come. But was it not St. Paul himself who once defined faith as the "substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen"? Was it not Alexander Pope who said, "Man never is but always to be blest"?

Unfortunately, we have no better means to gauge the future than by the past. The prohibition bureau has already been in operation over three years and a half. Have violations of the law increased or diminished during that time? Mr. Haynes tells us in his articles that the general decrease in arrests, prosecutions, and convictions for crime in general, and especially for drunkenness, is evidence that the Volstead Act has benefited the world. The decrease in prosecutions, he says, shows a great gain.

What, then, shall be said of the report of the Attorney General to the President in regard to the enforcement of the Volstead Act itself, which tells us that during the 41 months' period since that act was passed each year has brought an increase in prosecutions and convictions; that there have been at least 10,000 more convictions this year than last and 15,000 more than the year before? These figures, he says, not only show the rapid increase of prohibition cases but also indicate a stricter enforcement of the law. A more recent report of the Attorney General shows that the increase in convictions was even greater than that stated above.

Now, if, according to Mr. Haynes, diminished arrests and convictions show improvement as to other laws, does not an increase in convictions for violations of the Volstead Act show that conditions in regard to its enforcement are growing worse? The Attorney General tells us that the average of the last fiscal year is more than three times that of the first fiscal year. If these things mean merely increased vigilance in prosecutions, then what becomes of Mr. Haynes's argument that fewer arrests, prosecutions, and convictions mean fewer crimes? Do they mean merely diminished vigilance? His argument can not work both ways. The inevitable inference is that violations of the enforcement act are increasing day by day and month by month, and that the failure of the bureau to enforce the law under the spoils system is becoming each year more apparent.

The only possible chance for any amelioration of present conditions in the prohibition enforcement bureau is to provide that every place under the commissioner, from the top to the bottom, shall be included in the classified service, and that examinations shall be held not only for new appointments but in regard to the places which are held so largely by men who are now violating the law; that the men now holding these places be required to compete with other applicants, and that a thorough investigation be made by the Civil Service Commission as to the character and integrity, as well as the other qualifications, of all who apply.

RENTAL CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 158, now on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 158.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. Reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire of the Senator whether consideration of the resolution is liable to take any considerable time?

Mr. BALL. I think it will take but little time.

Mr. WILLIS. Let it be read. If it does take time I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution for information.

The reading clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That for the purpose of providing the Senate with information to serve as a basis for such legislation, if any, as may in its judgment be found necessary in respect of housing and rental conditions in the District of Columbia, the Committee on the District of Columbia, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is directed to investigate and cause to be made in the District of Columbia of—

(a) The number of vacant rooms, apartments, and dwelling houses that are available for rent as rental property or apartments, as defined in Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended and extended; and the rent, including any bonus or other consideration, asked therefor.

(b) The number of uncompleted rooms, apartments, and dwelling houses, upon which construction has begun, that will become available for rent as rental properties and apartments, as so defined; and the rent, including any bonus or other consideration, to be asked therefor.

(c) The number of vacant dwelling houses and apartments that are available for sale, and the prices asked therefor.

(d) The number of uncompleted dwelling houses and apartments upon which construction work has been begun that will become available for sale, and the price to be asked therefor.

All such rooms, apartments, and dwelling houses shall be classified as to size and service, if any, rendered in connection therewith, to such extent as the committee or subcommittee finds it practicable. The committee or subcommittee shall make a final report of its investigation, with recommendations, to the Senate not later than March 15, 1924. For the purposes of this resolution the committee or subcommittee is authorized to avail itself of the services of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and of the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia, and to make expenditures to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee. The total of such expenditures shall not exceed $2,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution, and if the Senator from Delaware is going to make an explanation as to the importance and necessity for the passage of the resolution, I shall pretermit any questions regarding it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I present a parliamentary inquiry before the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the measure? What is the status of the resolution which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] was discussing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has no status. It is lying on the table.

Mr. BORAH. Is it on the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the table calendar.

Mr. BORAH. It has not yet gone to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is lying on the table and has not been referred.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I understand I still have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry, if I may make it following that of the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. EDGE. Are we to understand that the resolution introduced by my colleague [Mr. EDWARDS] must necessarily go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate? Is it not one of those resolutions that would be covered by the general authority granted to the Committee on the Judiciary without having a special reference, and could be called up from the table at any time its sponsor saw fit to do so?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no provision in the resolution that the expenses of the investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and therefore it is not referable to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware has the floor, and the question is, Will the Senate consent to his request for the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WILLIS. I thought I had the floor and that I yielded to the Senator, but it appears that the Senator from Delaware has the floor, and I wonder if he will not yield to me.

Mr. BALL. I am willing to yield to the Senator from Ohio for a question.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to know whether the Senator can assure us that there is agreement on the resolution? I wanted to take up a few moments of the time of the Senate in reply to the matter discussed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. BALL. I do not think there is any objection to the resolution. It makes provision for a survey of the city to learn whether there are sufficient houses of moderate rental to make it unnecessary for any further extension of the rent commission.

Mr. WILLIS. I think under those circumstances I ought to yield to the Senator, since I do not have the floor, anyway.

Mr. BALL. Under the circumstances I appreciate the consideration of the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to inquire whether unanimous consent has been granted?

Mr. BORAH. No; it has not yet been granted.

Mr. BALL. I have asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the question be put. I do not know of any objection to the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I intend to propose if the resolution is to be considered. Pending the request of the Senator from Delaware, I ask that the amendment be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

(e) Whether any organization, association, or combination, or any committee of persons representing real-estate owners or dealers, prescribe or attempt to control the rents or charges for housing accommodations in the District of Columbia, and, if so, the methods pursued in prescribing or attempting to control such rents or charges.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I have no objection to the proposed amendment. I intended to cover its subject matter, so far as I could.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to say that I think the amount proposed to be appropriated for the investigation is entirely out of proportion to the object sought to be attained, particularly in view of the fact that the District Commissioners and the Rent Commission are to be used for this purpose. If the Senator from Delaware will agree to reduce the proposed amount to $1,000, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. MOSES. Wait a moment, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] was stating that he might object unless the resolution be amended. What is the amount now proposed to be appropriated by the resolution?

Mr. COUZENS. It is $2,500.

Mr. BALL. The resolution provides that not more than $2,500 shall be expended.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely wish to state to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] that it occurs to me that the amount carried by the resolution to make the investigation is not excessive in any sense.

Mr. COUZENS. I think it is excessive.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the investigation is worth while and can be made for $2,500, comprehending all the inquiries which the resolution contemplates, and particularly the inquiry contemplated by the amendment, I should think——

Mr. BALL. I should like to make merely one brief statement. If the investigation is to be worth anything to the committee, it must be an independent investigation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me finish my sentence. I was saying that if the investigations contemplated by the resolution, and by the amendment which I intended to propose, could be made at an expense of not exceeding $2,500, I should think it was the cheapest investigation ever made under the direction of the Senate of the United States. I make that suggestion to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. With all due respect to the Senator from Arkansas, let me say that in the Rent Commission and the District Commissioners we have the organization and the staff to do this work. Why should we pass a resolution which shall require a new organization and a new staff to ascertain the facts when we already have organizations in this District to do it? Unless the Senator from Delaware will agree to the amendment which I have suggested, I shall have to object to the consideration of the resolution until I shall have time further to investigate the matter.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, if the Rent Commission is to make the investigation, we all know what the report will be. We can not get a fair and thorough investigation through the District Commissioners, for it would then have to be done probably through the police force or in some other way. If we are going to have an investigation at all, let it be an independent investigation, which will give to the Senate a fair and just idea of conditions. If conditions demand the extension of the Rent

Commission act, if that be necessary, let us have proof that such a demand is a just and fair one. If we are going to let the Rent Commission make the investigation, or if we are going to let the real-estate men make it, or if we are going to let the renters make it, we should get just the same report from holding hearings.

I can say to the Senator from Michigan that the investigation proposed by the resolution will not cost as much as would an ordinary hearing on this particular subject before such a hearing should have been completed. There is not a hearing held which continues over any length of time which does not cost at least $2,000. If we desire a hearing which will amount to anything and will give to the Senate any information that will be of benefit, let the amount of $2,500, as proposed in the resolution, be retained, for we could hardly get a report which would be intelligible and adequate for $1,000.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware why a report by the Rent Commission could not be relied upon? He has stated that no report could be obtained from the Rent Commission which could be relied upon.

Mr. BALL. My reply to that, Mr. President, is that the Rent Commission sees but one side of this proposition. Two-thirds of their petitions are from renters, and most of the cases which are decided by them are brought by tenants. The real estate men might claim that they would have the same right to make the investigation, if we go into the matter, as would the renters. Why not have an independent investigation which will give us the real conditions? I have not any more to say in reference to the matter, but if the Senate desires investigation, I should like to have it made in the proper manner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hopes Senators will remember that a request for unanimous consent is not debatable.

Mr. HEFLIN. I demand the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the request of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BALL. Before the resolution shall be passed I desire to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I also have offered the amendment to the resolution which I have sent to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. BALL. Will the Senator from Arkansas permit me first to have an amendment acted on, and his may be subsequently considered?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware offers an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 16, after the word "March" it is proposed to strike out "15" and insert "31," so that it will read:

> The committee or subcommittee shall make a final report of its investigation, with recommendations, to the Senate not later than March 31, 1924.

Mr. BALL. The amendment merely proposes to give two weeks more for making the investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I now offer the amendment which I sent to the desk a few moments ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

> (c) Whether any organization, association, or combination, or any committee of persons representing real estate owners or dealers prescribe, or attempt to control the rents or charges for housing accommodations in the District of Columbia, and, if so, the methods pursued in prescribing or in attempting to control such rents or charges.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have been informed that there are now in the city of Washington a large number of vacant apartments and vacant houses for which occupants could be procured, and in many cases for which applications have been made, but, on account of the fact that the high prices or charges asked for the rooms, houses, and apartments are arbitrarily fixed by a committee representing an association of real estate dealers or owners, these houses and apartments remain vacant from month to month, and many of them have been vacant for more than a year.

On Sixteenth Street below U Street there is a new apartment house which offers for rent an apartment of five rooms, unfurnished, at a rental of $225 a month. An offer of $150 was made for those rooms but the person making the offer was given to understand that the rates were fixed by an agreement or understanding, or at the instance of a committee representing an association of owners of housing buildings and that the only way any reduction could be made would be through a system of subletting, or a pretense of subletting.

I do not know whether the Rent Commission has information respecting this pool or combination which is said to exist among the owners of housing facilities or among those who control housing facilities in the District of Columbia, but I do know that driving through the city one may observe hundreds of signs of vacant rooms and vacant houses and vacant apartments, and I also know that in many cases the rates charged or sought to be charged are extortionate and unreasonable so that people of limited means are totally unable to avail themselves of the houses and rooms. I have cited one illustration of which I have personal knowledge respecting a small apartment in a comparatively new apartment house on Sixteenth Street below U, for which a rental of $225 a month was asked for a bare, totally unfurnished, comparatively small apartment of five rooms. It is not astonishing that men and women who are compelled to work for $125 a month or $200 a month, or $300 a month, or even $500 a month find themselves unable to rent and occupy apartments of that character.

I think it is important and necessary, if this subject is to be dealt with by a commission of the Government, and if Congress is to interest itself in an attempt to regulate rentals of housing facilities and charges in the District of Columbia, to find out whether a combination among owners and the operators of apartment houses and buildings prescribes and controls the rates and charges. If so, the first thing to be done is to terminate that combination; and if existing statutes are not adequate, the Congress ought to pass a statute. We all know that during the last year or two many apartment houses have been constructed in the city of Washington. We know that there are now hundreds of vacant apartments, and the sole reason for it is that the rentals, being based upon the peak cost of construction, are so high that persons of ordinary means are unable to use them.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that if the condition at which he hints prevails—and I have much reason to believe that it does—all the other information is practically worthless, for it does not matter how many houses are available or how many of them are for rent or what it cost to build them if the rentals of the apartments and houses are not determined by the law of supply and demand.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, Mr. President, I have not the slightest doubt that housing facilities in the District of Columbia are controlled by an organization among the operators and perhaps among the owners, and I have not the slightest doubt that the Rent Commission now knows that fact, but it certainly is desirable to ascertain the true facts respecting the subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think, then, that it would be well if we should call first on the Rent Commission to ask them about that fact? Because, if they do know it, that would settle the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. The committee can get the information, under my amendment, from any source that it chooses.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; of course that is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I take it for granted that the first thing the committee would do would be to obtain from the Rent Commission all the information it has upon every subdivision of the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, unless this committee did examine the Rent Commission and report what it had to say about the matter the report would be virtually valueless. It will be done, I have no doubt.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to leave the investigators as free a hand as possible to get all the information that is pertinent to the subject matter of the resolution; but I do think that the inquiry called for in the amendment is of equal if not greater importance to the other inquiries contemplated by the resolution.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. I have concluded all the remarks I care to make.

Mr. BALL. I wish to say to the Senator while he is on his feet that the Rent Commission have been very seriously handicapped in getting such information. They requested that they might have an inspector to send out and get just such information. It was not granted, and the whole body of the commission now have to go out on inspection tours themselves. To make the Rent Commission effective and to get this information, of course they would have to have agents or an engineer—it ought to be an engineer—to inspect the construction of buildings and know their cost.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there will be no difficulty in ascertaining that a price is arbitrarily fixed by a committee representing some association of real-estate owners or apartment-house operators on every apartment that is known to be for rent in the city of Washington. The location, the character of the tenants, the size of the apartment, all the facts and circumstances pertinent to the question, are taken into consideration, and then the owner or the lessee is informed as to what rates he can fix, and if he fixes a different rate he encounters the combined resentment of the other members of the association, and he does not often do it.

The only way in which lower rates are made is through the process of subletting. A "fake" lease is sometimes said to be executed, and the lessee then is permitted to sublet it in any way that he can; but the owner and operator of the building as a rule must exact the price which the combination or trust fixes for him. It is an intolerable condition.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do.

Mr. SMITH. I am not posted on the law as it pertains to these things, or the scope of the power of the Rent Commission. Do they have any jurisdiction over hotels as well as apartment houses?

Mr. BALL. They do not. They have no jurisdiction over hotels or business properties.

Mr. SMITH. That was intimated to me. I was hoping that there might be some legislation here that would reach the hotels as well, because the indications are that there must be some understanding amongst them as well as amongst the apartment houses.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Arkansas has been referring to a question which has been in the minds of a great many for some time. I should like to inquire if the Senator has heard of any intimation that the control to which he refers extends also to the sales of property, the prices of real estate for sale, and the cost of construction?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I have heard that the whole subject matter is controlled. I have no evidence further than a mere statement from persons who have attempted to buy property that they found that condition to exist, and for the reason that I regarded the evidence available for my consideration on that point somewhat inadequate I did not mention it; but I believe that it is worthy of inquiry.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I was just going to make that suggestion, that this investigation should extend not only to rental prices but to the prices of real estate and to the prices of construction. I have been strongly impressed that there is just as much a combination in regard to one of these phases of the housing problem in the District of Columbia as there is in regard to the other; and it seems to me that they are all so interwoven that the investigation should extend to the entire subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to modifying the amendment, if it may be returned to me for that purpose, so as to comply with the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am for the resolution that is now pending. The people of the District of Columbia certainly need some relief. Many concerns operating in the District of Columbia and outside of it that seek to get protection from those in authority seem now to have no trouble in getting that protection; and it is very necessary that this investigation be made to relieve the people of this District from the sharks who are holding them up and eating up their substance by the way of high rents. The prices charged in the instance suggested by the Senator from Arkansas show that these people working for the Government here, trying to get a small apartment for their families, paying $225 a month, that is more than the wages they get; and something ought to be done to relieve them.

I rise this morning, however, to discuss another matter of grave importance to the American people.

Chairman Adams a little while back suggested——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield for a moment that I may say just a word on this rental matter?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield for a speech, or I would lose the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Then I will ask the Senator just one question: Has it occurred to the Senator that a very important question involved in the price charged for rents is the iniquitous tariff law that was passed a little while ago? Was any attention given by the Republican Party to the need of cheap houses and cheap construction? Is it not the opinion of the Senator that there was an oversight on the part of our friends across the Chamber in framing the bill in order that these houses might be built at some decent price?

I should like to say more, but I am not permitted under the rule; but a very important question is involved in this resolution of the Senator from Delaware and the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas. I should like to ask that question of the Senator, however.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest to my friend from New York that the Republicans gave no consideration to the fellow who wants to own a home. They operated on him in the tariff law in every way they could. They taxed every rod and bar and bolt and nail that goes into his house, and they even taxed the window-panes that let in the light of heaven. Nothing escaped.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the Senators who are here ought to be fair, at least. Every Senator on this floor who was a Member of the Senate at the time knows that the Senators on the committee brought to the attention of the Senate the awful expense to which the Government was put in erecting buildings, and that the charges made by the contractors were too high.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is all right. I am willing for that suggestion to be made regarding the contractors; but the Senator from New York makes the pertinent inquiry as to whether the Republicans gave consideration to the fact that the tariff they were laying on building material was going to increase the cost of building for all those who desire to build and own a home. That is the point at issue in the question raised by the Senator from New York.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. GOODING. I think I can answer the question of the Senator from New York. I will say that the Senators on this side of the Chamber did give consideration to those matters. Lumber is on the free list; shingles are on the free list; cement is on the free list as far as Washington is concerned; brick is on the free list as far as Washington is concerned; and there is practically nothing that goes into a house, with the exception of the nails and the windows, but that is on the free list.

Mr. HEFLIN. Brick all over the country are on the tax list, and millstones that grind the people's bread are on the tax list, and hammers and nails are on the tax list.

Mr. COPELAND. And doors and sash.

Mr. HEFLIN. And doors and sash and cement and salt and sugar——

Mr. GOODING. They are manufactured articles, not raw material.

Mr. HEFLIN. And everything else you can mention, from the cradle to the grave, is on the tax list of the Republican tariff law.

Mr. GOODING. I want to say to the Senator, if he will permit me, as long as the question has been asked——

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield to the Senator to make a tariff speech. I should be delighted to yield. I like to hear him discuss that subject.

Mr. GOODING. I am going to discuss it, too; I will assure the Senator of that.

Mr. HEFLIN. When the Senator discusses the tariff he gives me a good opportunity to expose the fallacies of his arguments, and I am always glad to hear him discuss that subject.

Mr. President, I rose to discuss another matter, a matter of grave concern to the American people.

Mr. Adams, the chairman of the Republican National Committee, a few days ago complained that but little headway had been made in the investigation of the Teapot Dome scandal and these other Republican oil scandals.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] came in and showed how he had tried to bring about the development of this case, and what he had done. I want to submit to the Senate and to the country some of the reasons why the Senator from Montana and the other Democrats have been handicapped in this investigation.

The Washington Herald of yesterday said:

The Hearst newspapers, through Universal Service, have disclosed that Senator IRVINE L. LENROOT, Republican, chairman of the Senate committee investigating the oil-lease scandal, and Senator REED SMOOT, Republican, former chairman and member of the committee, held a secret conference with former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall last Christmas, about which the committee has never been told. The secret conference was held in Mr. Fall's apartment in Wardman Park Hotel at night.

Mr. President, that is a strange procedure—the chairman of this committee and its former chairman, now a member of the committee, both Republicans, going up and having a secret conference with this former Republican official, a former member of the Cabinet, he under fire, charged with betraying his country, charged with having accepted a bribe for disposing of the greatest oil reserve in all the world; and these Senators supposed to be representing the Senate and the Government and going in earnest after those who betrayed their trust. We find them in secret conference with the party accused, and no report is made of it to the committee, to the Senate, or to the country.

Is that the way to transact the business of the people? I repeat, we are not here to play politics for the Republican Party or for the Democratic Party.

We are here to represent the American people and to give at least a clean account of ourselves when such grave matters come up here for consideration at our hands.

This newspaper story goes on to say that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] said that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggested to him that they go out and call on Mr. Fall, and the Senator from Utah suggests that the Senator from Wisconsin said to him, "Let us go out and see Mr. Fall." So these Senators are at cross purposes on that very pertinent proposition. The Senator from Wisconsin is quoted as having said, "Fall told us he got the $100,000 from McLean," and the Senator from Utah is quoted as having said, "He said nothing about McLean. He said nothing about where he got the $100,000 except that he got it from an old friend."

The newspaper boys said, "Why, Senator, Senator LENROOT said that Fall mentioned McLean's name in that connection." "Oh, no; I don't see how he could say that." "Well, he did." "Well," they said that Senator SMOOT said, "I will call him up." So the Senator from Utah right then and there phoned to the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Wisconsin tells him, they say, that that was said, and then that the Senator from Utah said, "Well, I did not hear it."

Mr. President, I submit that if they were going to see Mr. Fall, if this consideration were going to be shown to one charged with high crimes and misdemeanors against his Government, men appointed on a committee to bring out the facts, to develop the case and get at the truth, should not have gone as partisan Republicans; they ought to have taken Democrats with them if they were going to make any statement to Mr. Fall, so that the country would be represented, not part of the country, not just the Republican Party, but the country as a whole would be represented, when representatives of both parties were present at such a conference. Nobody could criticize that.

Why was such a conference held, and why was it that the committee was not told about the conference? This paper goes on to say that, when the Senator from Utah was asked, "Did you tell the committee?" he is quoted as having said, "No; why should we tell the committee?"

Just think of that answer. I ask, why should they not tell the committee? The committee certainly is interested. It certainly represents us, and we are supposed to represent the country. Why certainly they should have told the committee.

It was after this, Mr. President, that ex-Secretary Fall wrote a letter in which he said that Ed McLean furnished the $100,000. What happened later? Doheny comes out and says he let him have it. So it seems as if this statement Fall made to the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Wisconsin was not the truth, and the letter he wrote later was not the truth. Ed McLean said he let him have some checks that were never cashed. I wonder who suggested this thing? I wonder who triggered up that arrangement for Edward McLean? The Senator from Utah said he said it was an old friend that he had known a long time who let him have it. The Senator from Wisconsin is quoted as having said he said Ed McLean let him have it. So there we are. The Senator from Wisconsin says, so the newspaper states, that the Senator from Utah suggested that they go down and call on Senator Fall, and the Senator from Utah says that the Senator from Wisconsin suggested that they go down and call on Mr. Fall, at night, in his apartment in the Wardman Park Hotel.

I want to call attention to another thing I have been informed about, and Senators who are members of the committee will know whether or not it is true, that Fall was invited before the committee and was not put under oath when he made his Ed McLean statement to the committee. Why should he be exempted from taking the oath? Would any other man in the common walks of life have been shown that deference and consideration? Would any other witness have been permitted to just walk in and make a blanket statement without taking an oath to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth? Why not put this witness under oath and go into the facts and bring out the whole truth? With me there will be no secrets from the American people in this thing. I do not care whether they affect Democrats or Republicans; turn on the light, and let the truth come out. It makes no difference who is hurt, what party is involved; let the truth be known.

Mr. Adams wonders why more headway has not been made. How are you going to make much headway when the chairman of the committee himself, and a former chairman of the committee, are having secret conferences with the man involved, the man we are trying to indict, and are not telling the committee about the conversations, and no other member of the committee is permitted to be present, where the whole thing can be gone over, when both sides, supposed to represent the American people, are on the spot to see and know just what transpires? How are they going to make much headway under such conditions? I would just like to know what transpired in that conference, what all was said, and I would also like to know just why this peculiar consideration was given for this man Fall—members of the committee going out to his apartment and making a call on him.

Mr. President, the whole thing calls for an explanation. Mr. Fall came here later, when he was called before the committee; he was not so sick as not to be able to do that. He was able to go to New Orleans; he was able to travel around the country, and the doctors who investigated his case here said, "He is able to testify." Then they bring him up, and his statement that he got the money from Ed McLean seems to have fallen down. I wonder who suggested Ed McLean to him. I wonder if anybody was trying to shield Doheny, who has become the mouthpiece of the Republican Party here recently. He is urging the people to support the Republican Party. He is mighty well satisfied with the Republican administration. Can you blame him? They have turned over to him a billion dollars' worth of oil reserves. Do you wonder that he is anxious to have the Republican Party remain in power?

While this matter is up, I want to make this statement: The Democratic members of the committee making this oil investigation have had no encouragement and no aid from leading Republicans here, or from the White House, or from the Department of Justice, or from any other department of the Government. That is a pretty serious indictment.

Mr. Denby, who was a party to this deal, flaunts his statement in the face of the President, the Senate, and the country—"Yes; I did it, and I would do it again."

Mr. Fall confesses to having gotten money in connection with the transaction, and this ex-official of the Republican Cabinet is waited upon, quietly called upon, by the present chairman and the former chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, both Republicans.

Mr. President, I think these are matters of inquiry which the committee might take up, turning on the light and getting at the whole truth. I want to repeat we are not getting the aid and the encouragement that we should from the White House.

I want to ask, before I sit down, who is looking after stopping the pumping of oil out of these great oil reservoirs? What steps are being taken to prevent the taking out of 3,000 barrels of oil a day by Sinclair and 4,000 barrels a day by Doheny? I am going to keep on talking about this thing until something is done. We have a right to demand that this stealing of the Nation's oil be stopped, and stopped at once. This oil does not belong to Doheny; it does not belong to Sinclair. The whole transaction was fraudulent and corrupt through and through, and the Government is entitled to have this thing immediately stopped. Why will not the Government stop it? The President has the Department of Justice at his command. He has these two attorneys we have employed, paying them out of money furnished by the taxpayers of the country. Why is it that he will not have them get out an injunction against these people now and send United States marshals or the marines, who were sent to clear off the premises for Sinclair when he went out there to bore his wells? Why is it that we can not take these steps, and take them immediately, to get this property and some of this oil back to the Government?

These questions, Mr. President, are going to be asked here from day to day until something is done in the name of the people to protect these oil reserves and to take over this property of the people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Arkansas moves to amend on page 2, after line 10, by inserting the following:

(e) Whether any organization, association, or combination, or any committee of persons representing real estate owners or dealers, prescribe or attempt to control prices of real estate and of building construction and the rents or charges for housing accommodations in the District of Columbia; and if so, the methods pursued in prescribing or attempting to control such prices and rents or charges.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to make some observations on the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have listened to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and in the speech he has just made he is about as accurate as he usually is.

With reference to the visit of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and myself to Mr. Fall, I am very glad to state the facts to the Senate and to the country. As far as I am concerned there has never been any concealment of those facts.

The fact is that immediately upon the testimony coming out before the committee, on November 30 I think, concerning the purchase of a ranch by Mr. Fall for $91,500, and upon the adjournment of that session I went to the then chairman of the committee [Mr. SMOOT] and asked him to wire Mr. Fall to come before the committee and testify fully as to that transaction. The Senator from Utah did so wire. Mr. Fall replied, in a telegram which is in the record, that his son-in-law could fully explain the transaction. That telegram was shown to me and I told the chairman that in my opinion Mr. Fall should come on personally and disclose the entire matter. The chairman [Mr. SMOOT] then wired Mr. Fall to that effect and a reply was received that he would come, starting, I believe, upon a certain day.

The next information I had concerning Mr. Fall was that he was in the city of New York, and ill, but would come to Washington as soon as he was able. About that time I became chairman of the committee, and I received a letter from Mr. Fall, which is in the record, stating that on account of his health he was going to Atlantic City, but would come to Washington to testify just as soon as his health would permit; that he thought he would be able to come on a certain Monday. I conferred with members of the committee, and, on account of the committee members having other matters in hand, it was suggested that I wire Mr. Fall, as I recollect, that he appear on the following Wednesday, which I did.

The next information I had concerning Mr. Fall was when the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] told me that Mr. Fall was here in the city at the Wardman Park Hotel, and ill, and asked me if I would call upon him that afternoon with him. I said I would, and we did. It was not at night. It was in the afternoon. We found him at the Wardman Park Hotel. A nurse was there. Clearly he was ill, and, after passing such remarks as ordinarily would be passed concerning his health, the matter of his coming before the committee to testify was brought up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside. I take it that it ought not to take very long to dispose of the resolution under discussion.

Mr. NORBECK. I would like to inquire how long it will take.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, we do not know how long the unfinished business may be set aside. The discussion has not been confined really to the resolution of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think there will be any further discussion on the resolution of the Senator from Delaware. I know of none. Of course, the discussion may just as well proceed upon that resolution as upon the bill the Senator from South Dakota has in charge, which is the unfinished business.

Mr. WILLIS. For the information of the Senator from South Dakota——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has asked unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIS. I am still undertaking to hold the floor. I have been trying for three-quarters of an hour to get it in my own right.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I have no desire——

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, do I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio was recognized and yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Wisconsin has not completed the question or statement that he rose to make.

Mr. LENROOT. I hope the Senator will not interrupt the statement I am making.

Mr. NORBECK. There is no objection to laying aside the unfinished business except that I would like to speak on it for about 20 minutes, either to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. LENROOT. Our visit did not consume at the outside more than half an hour. Mr. Fall stated to us that he had borrowed this money in the ordinary course of business, had borrowed it from a friend, but did not propose to disclose to the committee the name. I stated, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] indorsed my statement, that he owed it to the committee, that he owed it to himself, that he owed it to the country to come before the committee and make a full disclosure concerning the source of the money with which he purchased the ranch. We discussed that, as I said, for perhaps 20 minutes. Mr. Fall finally stated that the man from whom he borrowed the money was out of town and that he would have to get his consent. He stated that he was willing to tell us in confidence the name of the man. I stated that I did not want the name in confidence but I wanted him to come to the committee and tell the committee. Before I had completed the sentence I understood him to name Edward B. McLean.

I supposed Mr. Fall was coming before the committee. That was the extent of our conversation. The next thing I knew concerning Mr. Fall was a letter that I received as chairman of the committee making the statement substantially, except more in detail, that he had made to us on that afternoon, disclosing Edward B. McLean as the man from whom he had borrowed the money, which letter is in the RECORD. That is the only conversation that I ever had with Mr. Fall upon this subject or any other subject since the investigation began last October.

I stated the substance of this conversation, but not in detail, or perhaps not so much in detail, to two Democratic members of the committee, one shortly after Edward B. McLean testified, and to another Democratic member of the committee a week or 10 days ago before there was any publication of any kind concerning the conference. So far as I am concerned, the only purpose I had in that conference was to get the truth before the committee, before the public, and before the Senate as to the source of this money. Of course, Mr. Fall misstated to us, as he did to the committee and as he did to the country, the source of the money. But inasmuch as the statement that he finally made to the committee was in accordance with the statement that he made to us two or three days before, I never attached any importance to that conversation.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] also, if I understood him correctly, threw out innuendoes that Republican members of the committee have sought to thwart the investigation; have sought to shield Mr. McLean and Mr. Fall or others. There is a great deal in the newspapers along that line at the present time. I have already stated that I never had any conversation with Mr. Fall, except the one I have referred to. I never met Mr. McLean in my life, so far as I know. I have had no conversation about the merits of the case with anyone representing Mr. McLean. The only conversation I have had with anyone purporting to represent Mr. McLean has been with reference to committee meetings and the calling of Mr. McLean and the suggestion that the condition of his health would prevent his coming here under subpœna.

I have never met Mr. Sinclair except in the committee room. I have never had a word of conversation with him except to interrogate him as a witness. I have never met Mr. Doheny outside of the committee room except to shake hands with him years ago in the Senate restaurant upon being introduced to him.

Mr. President, I would be very glad to be relieved of the duties of the chairmanship of this committee, and I am frank to say that if it goes on indefinitely I shall have to ask to be relieved, but I have endeavored conscientiously to perform my duties as a member and chairman of the committee and to get at the facts and the truth. I understand very well that in presiding over that committee its present chairman does not always please either Democrats or Republicans. I have had a conception of the duties of the committee to try the case as nearly as it could be in the same way that a lawsuit would be tried, to get at the facts, of course, not observing the strict rules of evidence. I felt it was not the duty of the committee to go outside and bring in utterly irrelevant matters and testimony that had no relation to the matters about which the committee was inquiring. For that reason I have refrained from cross-examining Democrats who were before the committee upon matters that might be important, but that were not in any way relevant to the inquiry that we had before us.

It is very unfortunate in a matter of such moment and of such great importance to the country that the inquiry can not be conducted outside of the committee, as well as in it, without reference to politics and with a view solely to getting at the facts. As I said upon this floor upon other occasions since it began, there is politics enough in the inquiry, legitimate politics. Of course there is. But no advantage should be taken of a political situation either to obscure the truth upon the one hand or to prevent its coming out, nor to exaggerate and misstate facts as they actually exist.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama yesterday and again to-day complained because the oil is not already stopped from being produced in the naval reserves. It is possible that my friend, the Senator from Alabama, if he were counsel in this case, could sit down and determine the question of jurisdiction, could prepare the pleadings, necessarily very voluminous, could study the law, could acquaint himself with the procedure, so that injunctions might have been secured already preventing any further production of oil. But two of the ablest counsel of the country, each of them having three of their associates in their own organizations, have been constantly at work, night and day, since their appointment, in preparing the pleadings that are necessary to get into court.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator would have to admit, would he not, that if the Attorney General had promptly acted in the matter he could have had equity proceedings started long before this time?

Mr. LENROOT. I think that if the Attorney General had taken jurisdiction of the matter, that is probably true. Of course, every Senator is familiar with the situation and knows why the Attorney General did not take jurisdiction so far as conducting the proceedings are concerned.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Can the Senator give us any idea as to when the papers will be filed and injunctions obtained in the matter?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not, except that I talked with one of the counsel last evening upon the subject, and while I do not know that I am authorized to make any statement except that they are making very satisfactory progress, I will simply give it as my opinion that the actions will be instituted very, very soon.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator give the same assurance about criminal actions against these men?

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to that, I do not know, except that it would seem to me, in view of the loss of oil in the naval reserves—and there is only one from which oil is being lost, the Teapot Dome—that the first thing to do, unless the men are going to get out of the country, is to get an injunction so as to preserve the oil, and until those pleadings are completed I would expect that the attorneys would devote themselves solely to that side of the case.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. WILLIS. Just to preserve the order, I understand that I have the floor yet, and I would like to have my right recognized. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Wisconsin state whether or not in his opinion the appointment of special counsel by the President relieved the Attorney General and the district attorneys under him from doing their sworn duty under the laws of the United States?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say very frankly to the Senator from Tennessee that I have not considered that question. I do know, however, that the joint resolution authorized the President to appoint counsel to take charge of and control the proceedings, civil and criminal, in this matter.

Mr. WHEELER. But that does not in any wise relieve the Attorney General from doing his duty under the Constitution, does it?

Mr. McKELLAR. It could not under the Constitution and laws. They took an oath to execute the law, and whatever is done will have to be done through the district attorney probably at Washington. I can not understand how in the slightest degree they have been relieved from their sworn duties under the law by the appointment of special counsel to assist in this matter.

Mr. LENROOT. I was only undertaking to give the facts as I understand them, and I was not commenting one way or the other upon that subject.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what happened that relieved the Attorney General from prosecution of the cases? I have read that the Attorney General asked to be relieved and that the President did relieve him. I may be wrong in that, but I have that understanding.

Mr. LENROOT. I am frank to say that I have not in mind what the action of the President was with reference to criminal prosecutions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Could the President relieve him? Certainly it is very doubtful whether the President would have any authority to relieve a district attorney or the Attorney General from doing his duty under the law.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator is asking me, I will reply that I do not think the President could do so. I am only stating that I saw in the newspapers that the Attorney General asked to be relieved, and the President did relieve him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also saw that statement in the newspapers, but that was done wholly without authority. The President had no right to relieve him, and the Attorney General had no right to do anything else but to perform his duty under the law and the Constitution.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee, for information, what is his own view with respect to the attitude of the Attorney General? Is it the Senator's view that the Attorney General should proceed criminally against the parties involved or that the special counsel should do so?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin very frankly what I would have done if I had been in the place of the Attorney General. I would have instantly, as soon as the facts were disclosed, put the processes of the law into operation and brought about the indictment of at least three of the men whom I have several times named here—Secretary Fall, Mr. Doheny, and Mr. Sinclair. They ought all to have been indicted weeks ago; and nothing, as it seems to me, but a willful and deliberate neglect of duty upon the part of sworn officials of the Government is responsible for that not having been done.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me to proceed for a few moments, I merely wish to say that I am sure that so far as special counsel are concerned, there could be no dereliction of duty charged against them, for I know how busy they have been.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not wish to be placed in the attitude of condemning the special counsel as yet, but I should like to see some evidence of their being in a bigger hurry about the matter. I think the country wants action; and, as it seems to me, there is no reason why there can not be action.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the country wants action, but the country wants action which will result in certain accomplishment and achievement, and I think it is a pretty big task.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. BORAH. What we are most anxious about is that when the whole thing shall have been concluded it will not be a failure. We, here in the Senate, can try men very rapidly and pass judgment with great speediness, but when the matter gets into court counsel have to submit their complaints and their actions to the test of a judicial tribunal, and they have got to be certain not only of the law and of the procedure but of the facts and the evidence.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] will permit me, that is entirely true, but we all know that the longer crimes go unpunished the more easily are the criminals enabled to escape the punishment of such crimes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am moved to interject a remark here only because it seems to me that in the interest of absolute fairness what I am about to say ought to be said. I am no spokesman for the Attorney General; I am not authorized to speak for him. I supported the resolution introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; I talked to him about it before he introduced it; I thought it was a proper thing to do; but when the Senators are now condemning the Attorney General for not commencing a civil or criminal action—I am not going to defend him; if Senators say he should have taken action before the passage of the resolution, I think he should have done so—I wish to say that after the resolution became a law, it was the Congress of the United States who relieved the Attorney General and not the President alone, although the President signed the joint resolution. We passed it and, in my judgment, after the resolution was passed, it was the special counsel and not the Attorney General who ought to have taken action. We passed that resolution—I believe properly; I am not apologizing for it; I think we did the right thing—but when we did so, and under it special counsel were selected, it seems to me that it is not fair to charge the Attorney General with not proceeding after that action had been taken.

It is a very easy thing, Mr. President, to overdo this matter; it is a very easy thing to criticize. Original criticism, in my judgment, was entirely justified, and I think the passing of the resolution was a criticism of the Department of Justice; but, having done that, it does seem to me that we ought not then to complain because the Attorney General did not act. We passed a law—that joint resolution was a law, the same as a statute—authorizing the President to appoint special counsel to prosecute these offenders. I have no doubt that they are doing the best they can; I am not one of those who are criticizing them, and I shall not criticize them until I reach the conclusion that they are not doing their duty.

The special counsel had to come in fresh and study this question. If the matter had been laid before me, if I had been employed, even though I were somewhat familiar with the investigation as it had gone on, I should not have desired to file a petition for an injunction or a criminal complaint on the next day; I could not have done it. I should have desired first to be on safe ground; I should have desired to make the proper investigations. The criminals are not getting away. I had rather the special counsel should do their work, and do it right, and be sure of their ground as they travel along, before they take a step; for otherwise they will only have overthrown the work which would have been properly done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me in order that I may ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. About four weeks, perhaps five weeks, have elapsed between the time this information must have reached the Attorney General's ears and the ears of the district attorney of the District of Columbia, yet, so far as we now know, not a step has been taken, either by the Attorney General or by the local district attorney, in the matter of the prosecution of Fall or any of the others.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not defending that.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what I was going to ask the Senator. Does he defend that?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not indefensible?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not defend it, and I think Congress criticized it when they passed the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator will also agree with me that somebody at the earliest possible moment when it can properly be done ought to prosecute these men——

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And take steps to cancel the leases.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we all agree to that, but, Mr. President, we ought to be careful. Since we ourselves have legislated on the subject and counsel have been appointed and confirmed by the Senate, I think we are entirely wrong when we undertake to criticize them. Coming as they had to come fresh and new into this great matter which the committee has spent weeks in investigating, having to look over volumes and volumes of letters and correspondence and testimony and having to look up the law and the facts, it seems to me that it would be unreasonable to expect immediate action.

Mr. President, I have not yet seen any cause for complaint on account of delay by the special attorneys whom we have employed, and I dislike to hear Senators making a criticism of them because the next day after they were appointed they did not stop oil from flowing or send a lot of fellows to the penitentiary. They have not consumed an unreasonable time as yet, and so far as I know are doing the best they can, and I anticipate that it will not be many days until we will begin to see the results of their labor.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I should merely like to say that there are over 2,300 pages of testimony already printed, which of course they must read.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and of course that is not the only thing they must do either; they have to do many other things.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps it would have been just as well if I had taken no notice of the statement made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], but I want the Senate to understand that I have never had anything in my heart nor have I had any other thought from the day that the investigation of the naval oil leases was undertaken than to arrive at the absolute facts in the case. The visit by myself and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to Mr. Albert Fall during his sickness in Washington at the time when he was stopping at the Wardman Park Inn had but one purpose. I think I stated that purpose——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the Senator is making a very important statement. May we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order, and the Senators will take their seats.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I stated that purpose, Mr. President, as briefly as possible, and many of the newspapers this morning carry it just as I stated it. I do not want the Senate to think that the statement which was published yesterday in the Hearst newspapers recorded what I stated. I leave it to the Senate whether what those newspapers published sounded like an utterance of mine.

I felt before visiting Mr. Fall that every question that had been brought before the committee had at least received an explanation. Whether or not the explanation was satisfactory or whether or not the explanation was true was to be decided by each individual member of the committee and ultimately by the Senate itself and by the American people who would pass judgment upon it. There was one question, however, to which no answer whatever had been made, and that was the question, "Where did Mr. Fall get the $91,500 which he paid for the Harris ranch?" Not a scintilla of evidence had been offered to the committee showing where he received that money.

Albert Fall was a sick man. He was at the Wardman Park Inn. He had asked the committee once that he be given time to recover before coming before the committee. We went to the room of Secretary Fall, and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has accurately stated to the Senate this afternoon what occurred. The only difference between him and myself is this: He says that Secretary Fall, just before we were leaving, stated that it was McLean who had advanced him that money. I do not say that he did not make that statement. All I can say, Senators, is that I did not hear the name of McLean mentioned.

As to the insinuation of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] that the Senator from Wisconsin and myself went up there and with Secretary Fall concocted this scheme, Mr. President, I wish to say that I never saw Edward McLean but once in my life. That was at a dinner given by Mr. McAdoo in honor of the British commission sent over here for the purpose of asking America to enter the war and advance money or the war was lost. Edward McLean was at that dinner. I would not know the man if I met him to-day; and that, as I said, is the only time I ever saw him.

I felt that it was not only the duty of Secretary Fall to himself to make this disclosure, but that it was a duty that he owed to the committee and to the country at large, and I so stated to him. I also want to say, Mr. President, that I have not a thing in my heart that I want to conceal from the Senate or all the world. In fact, I can say that if it were possible that my whole heart be opened, and the whole world could read my thoughts, I should be perfectly willing to have it done. I have never done a thing in all my life that I am not willing for every soul that lives to know.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. Why did not the Senator from Utah ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who was leading this investigation, to go with him and the Senator from Wisconsin when they called on Secretary Fall?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know that it ever occurred to me to ask the Senator from Montana to go. I do not know whether the Senator from Montana wanted to go or not.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator did not consult him about it, did he?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not; before or after.

Mr. HEFLIN. Just you two Republicans went to call on him?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well; my thought and the Senator's do not run in the same channel.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am satisfied of that.

Mr. SMOOT. All I want to do is to get at the facts, not to stand up here and repeat and repeat insinuations every day.

I say that there never has been a single thing put in the way of the Senator from Montana or any other Senator of the committee, by myself or any other member of the committee, to prevent the securing of testimony from any source upon any point. Every wish expressed by the Senator from Montana to me was instantly granted as long as I was chairman of that committee, and I have not any doubt but that it has been the same way with the Senator from Wisconsin, who is now chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, I do not think there is any necessity for me to take up any more of the Senate's time. All I hope is that when we get through with this investigation everything connected with it may be made public and may be known by all. That is the only desire I have in this whole matter.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the various Senators having concluded their questions——

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, Mr. President, I want to say a word on this subject.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to proceed now with the subject which I have been seeking to discuss for about an hour and a half. I have occupied the floor for about an hour and a half, but the thread of my discourse has been interrupted somewhat.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will not ask the Senator to yield now. We have been detaining him, and I will wait until he gets through before I commence some observations on this subject.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the Senator. I should like to proceed now with the matter that I had in mind to discuss.

Mr. President, I did not desire that the statements made early this afternoon by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] should go into the RECORD unchallenged. I do not desire to be diverted from that topic, though I shall have, perhaps, some observations to make on some of the things that have been discussed here by the Members of the Senate while I have been yielding.

Just now, however, I want to invite attention to some of the statements made by the Senator from New Jersey, not with the idea of entering upon a detailed reply, because I understand that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] expects at an early date to press the matter which he has in mind and which the Senator from New Jersey has in mind, namely, inquiring into the circumstances surrounding the accident which befell the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

As a preface to what I shall briefly say, I ask that there be read at the desk just now a brief editorial from the Washington Evening Star under date of February 27, 1924.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The principal legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of Wednesday, February 27, 1924.]

INQUIRY INTO THE GREENE SHOOTING.

Two resolutions are pending before the Senate relating to the shooting of Senator GREENE in a bootleg pursuit in this city. One, introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], who is an avowed and enthusiastic wet, is in its preamble and specific text a general criticism of the whole prohibition enforcement service, and, in effect, an argument against prohibition in practice. The other, introduced by Senator GREENE'S colleague Mr. DILL——

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I want to correct the article just there, because obviously a mistake has been made. It is not the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] who is the author of the resolution, but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE], the colleague of Senator GREENE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the article.

The principal legislative clerk read as follows:

has direct bearing simply upon the deplorable affair in point, and directs an investigation of this case and of such practices of the enforcement forces that may endanger innocent lives.

It is to be hoped that the Senate will, of these two resolutions, adopt that of Senator DALE, which is aimed at the clearing of the facts in this particular case, and has no purpose to belittle or check the proper enforcement of the prohibition act.

The lamentable tragedy which has so nearly cost Senator GREENE'S life has no bearing upon the merits of prohibition. It is one of the incidents of enforcement—an accident—due, it may be, to overzealousness on the part of an enforcement agent. Yet it has been seized upon by the foes of prohibition as an argument for a slackening of enforcement procedure; indeed, for the modification of the enforcement act and even for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The fact that a citizen was shot by a stray bullet in the pursuit of a fleeing lawbreaker has nothing to do with the merits of the law which has been broken. If a burglar is pursued as he leaves the house which he has entered with felonious purpose, is fired upon by the householder or by the policemen, and an innocent bystander is wounded, perhaps killed, there is no warrant whatever for a demand for a repeal of the law against burglary. Should a man eminent in public life be such a victim, as in this case, no one would ever propose that the pursuit of burglars should be prohibited as too dangerous for the public safety. No one would demand an investigation of the whole practice of burglar pursuit.

Unquestionably the enforcement of the prohibition act is difficult. It has been attended with many scandals, with some betrayals of their trust by enforcement officers. The law has been flagrantly violated by people in high places as in lower stations of life. A deliberate attempt has been made to bring it into ridicule and to break down the processes of enforcement. The seizure of this unhappy affair is now sought by avowed enemies of prohibition to bring about an investigation which can serve no end save to permit the marshaling of all the faults and failures of the law without a showing of its overwhelming successes and beneficial effects.

No supporter of prohibition can or will object to an inquiry into the shooting of Senator GREENE and the dangers attendant upon vigorous law enforcement with a view to finding a safer and even more effective means of carrying the law fully into effect.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to my friend, though he asked not to be interrupted. It will not interrupt me at all, and I therefore gladly yield to him.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am not a lawyer, but I understand that the Senator from Ohio is; and I never heard that any householder or any resident of a house or any man could lawfully shoot a burglar after he left the house.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, that is a sage observation that I am perfectly willing to have stand upon its own merits. I can not see, however, that it has anything in the world to do with the case that we are discussing.

It was to be expected, of course, that Senators who are opposed to the eighteenth amendment, and particularly those that have stated in their own States that they proposed to do all that they legally and properly could to prevent the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, should seize upon this unfortunate incident as the basis for a general attack upon the eighteenth amendment and the enforcement law.

Of course, I take it that there can be no difference of opinion as to the wisdom and desirability of an investigation into the circumstances attendant upon the lamentable and lamented accident which befell our fellow Member. Such an inquiry is provided for in the substitute resolution introduced by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE], which will be discussed by him and offered at the proper time when these resolutions are taken up for final disposition. That amendment, in the nature of a substitute, ought to be adopted.

We have heard some things said about facing the facts. Very well; let us face the facts. The fact is—and I impute no improper intention to any Member of the Senate—that the effect of the inquiry proposed in the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey is exactly the thing which every person in this country who is opposed to the eighteenth amendment and to its observance and enforcement would desire. What would better operate to paralyze the forces of law enforcement than such an inquiry as is here proposed? That is the effect. I do not say at all that it is the purpose, but it would be the effect of such an inquiry undoubtedly. Therefore it seems to me that the Senate ought to deal with the matter that is directly before it, and that is an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the accident which befell the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

It is, of course, interesting to note that gentlemen who seize upon this incident to arouse feeling in the country and to make assault upon the eighteenth amendment, which was adopted by the largest vote ever given any constitutional amendment; it is interesting to note that men who become agitated because of this accident had nothing at all to say about the hundreds of men whose lives have been lost by the nefarious traffic of the bootlegger. Nothing at all is said about the six or seven hundred men, according to latest reports, who in the city of Philadelphia have lost their lives through the work of the bootlegger. Nothing is said about that. Nothing is said about the 35 members of the enforcement division who have lost their lives seeking to enforce the law. Nothing at all is said about that; but this occasion is now seized upon as an opportunity to make a general assault upon the law. This is aptly suggested in the editorial.

Nobody defends or will defend any improper action on the part of a law-enforcement official. If the inquiry shall show that a law-enforcement official fired this shot, of course he should be punished; there is no doubt about that and no difference of opinion amongst us on that. But, as is suggested in the editorial, if it shall develop that in the enforcement of the law against burglary somebody is shot, do we therefore assail the law against burglary and say that it never ought to have been put on the statute books? Suppose apparatus of the fire department, in going down the street, accidentally runs over somebody. Do we therefore say we must repeal all the laws providing for fire protection?

Mere momentary consideration of the suggestion made by the Senator from New Jersey will show how utterly without foundation is the argument he makes.

A death list of 35 Federal prohibition agents and over 100 State and municipal enforcement officers testify to the deadly menace of the armed bootlegger, whose bullet may have felled the Senator. The murders by high-jackers and the killings in fights between bootleggers add to the death toll. Nothing is said about that. The liquor element is murderous. These men who are carrying bootleg whisky into the country and transporting it, so far as any is being transported, are desperate thugs, armed to the teeth. Shall it be said that the officers of the law, charged with the maintenance of the law, are under no circumstances to be in position to defend themselves?

The bootleg car that was the primary cause of this shooting was equipped with a smoke-screen apparatus and emerged from the alley at a terrific speed. Nothing is said about that at all. The crime that the bootlegger commits is not discussed, but if, perchance, an enforcement officer makes an improper use of his authority, as apparently is the case in this instance, the law which he is seeking to enforce is assailed—and I do not know about that, because there has been no investigation, and I am one of those very old-fashioned persons who believe that it is hardly wise to condemn people in advance of some sort of investigation and inquiry and trial—if it shall develop that this man is guilty, of course, he should be punished. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have noted in the press reports several times that the United States attorney for the District of Columbia is investigating this matter just as carefully as possible, and I want to submit that I think he is even better able to do that than the Senate itself, and has better agencies for investigating than has the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He is more likely to get at the facts, even more likely than the Senate would be to get at them through an investigation.

Mr. WILLIS. I think the Senator is absolutely correct in that, though personally I think an inquiry such as is proposed would be perfectly proper.

Attempts to run down bootleggers by recklessly headlong pursuits through the streets result in running down the law thus sought to be enforced.

The evil seems to be in the chase. Unpursued, the bootleggers would neither shoot nor flee in swift motors. The natural conclusion is that officers should never chase a criminal too rapidly or he will become offended and do something violent.

I am calling attention to this because the sympathy of some people seems to be strong in behalf of the folks who are violating the law, and yet they have no sympathy at all with those who are undertaking to enforce the law.

So, Mr. President, I trust that when this matter comes up the substitute offered by the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] will be adopted, and this particular matter may be looked into.

In order that there may be in the RECORD a statement of the facts touching the work that is being done in the law enforcement department, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at this point a brief statement of the work that has been done in the past by the law-enforcement unit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the fiscal year 1923, there were 49,021 cases for the violation of the prohibition law to the Federal courts, and 34,067 convictions. This was against 34,984 cases in 1922, with 22,749 convictions; 29,114 cases in 1921, with 17,962 convictions; and 7,291 cases in 1920, with 4,315 convictions.

Total fines imposed in 1923 aggregated $5,832,389, as against $4,041,456.03 in 1922; $3,360,298 in 1921; and $507,482.70 in 1920. Incomplete figures for the first half of the fiscal year of 1924 show fines imposed aggregated $1,806,768.50. In many States Federal agents give their evidence in State courts. Fines collected amount to approximately as much as those collected in Federal courts.

Jail sentences imposed in 1923 aggregated 2,241 years, 8 months, and 8 days, as compared with 1,552 years, 2 months, and 19 days in 1922. Incomplete figures for the first half of the fiscal year of 1924 show jail sentences imposed aggregating 958 years, 3 months, and 19 days.

Amounts deposited in the United States Treasury as fines and forfeitures and Federal convictions obtained as a result of the enforcement of the national prohibition act for the fiscal year of 1923, $5,095,300.23 as compared with $4,804,271.95 for 1922. Liquor-tax penalties or assessments made, but not yet collected, amount to approximately $40,000,000.

There are approximately 123,800 permit holders in the United States providing for the distribution and supervision of medicinal and industrial spirits and medicinal and sacramental wine, entailing a vast amount of inspection work in order to safeguard against abuses. Before prohibition there were 1,100 breweries in operation. On September 27, 1923, there were 500 cereal-beverage plants in operation. From August, 1921, to October 19, 1923, there were 152 criminal informations submitted to the Department of Justice. Eighty-three convictions have been secured; 21 cases dismissed and the remainder pending. One hundred and twelve injunctions have been prepared, of which 43 have been granted, 21 being permanent. In the same time 58 breweries have been placed under seizure.

Bonded whisky, in 1922, was scattered over the country in 297 distillery warehouses. The concentration act of 1922 provided for the concentration of liquors. Twenty-eight centrally located warehouses are now in operation. Since July 31, 1922, 180 outlying distillery warehouses have been discontinued and the contents removed to concentration warehouses. This concentration has effected a saving of $300,000 annually in guarding costs, in addition to greater security.

Government control of sources of supply is more successful to-day than ever before. In the calendar year 1923, nonbeverage whisky withdrawn on permits for domestic consumption aggregated 1,696,360.9 tax gallons. This total was 1,819,888.2 tax gallons in 1922; 3,243,845.2 tax gallons in 1921; 12,398,529.2 tax gallons in 1920; 27,381,365.1 tax gallons in 1919.

The average annual consumption of whisky during the 10 years prior to prohibition was 130,000,000 gallons.

There was a decrease of 1,200,000 gallons in withdrawal of medicinal alcohol in 1923, as compared with 1922, and a reduction of 18,498,397 gallons as compared with 1920.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, it would be unnecessary consumption of time for me to go into details about the evil of drink and the benefits and blessings of prohibition. I desire to assure the public that our cause has at least one friend in the United States Senate who is ready, willing, and anxious to aid in all efforts to abolish whisky from the face of the earth. The time has come to act. My method is two-fold:

First, persuasion;
Second, force.

We should be very careful in this country to educate, to encourage, to persuade, and to teach the people to neither manufacture, transport, nor consume the article. This can be done through our schools, churches, civic organizations, boy scouts, and through and by every other organization in the country. When temperance societies were first organized the use of liquor was fought principally on the ground of its moral effect. The growth was very gradual, but as soon as we fought the evil on the additional ground that it was injurious to health and business we made greater progress. No business management to-day would employ one who is subject to drink; therefore the factory, the store, the office, and every other business enterprise has become encouraged.

This evil is one of habit, to a large extent, and will sooner or later go out of fashion, and it is hoped will be unknown to future generations. I am sorry for anyone who can not, or will not, abstain either on account of appetite or profit on its sale.

We ought to use every power at our command to induce the erring brother to abstain from this contamination. We should do everything possible to inform the smaller and weaker ones who engage in this business that they are being made tools of by those who desire to exploit.

If force be necessary, let us employ effective means.

To say prohibition is a failure is not stating facts. Even as far back as 1818, Kahemeha, the half-savage King of the Hawaiian Islands, issued an edict prohibiting liquor as a beverage and made a success of it. I will not tell you his remedy at present; it was such, however, that most modern legislators have not the firmness to follow. In the South this law has wrought wonders. There is almost as much difference between cotton-mill towns to-day and 20 years ago as there is between day and night or between prosperity and poverty. A certain class of our population, good roads, automobiles, and liquor would not mix; no one's life would be safe on the highway.

The trouble of enforcing the law is not so much with the law as it is with officials, and with the public who will not aid the officers. It is the duty of every good citizen to aid in the enforcement of all laws. If the officers will not do their duty, then let us get new ones, beginning at the top and changing all down the line unhampered by personal or political influences. The hands of the officers should be free from the hands of politicians. The question is not a political one. I pity the country if it ever should be left to politicians to enforce the law. I know, in some cases, a genuine effort has not been made to enforce this law. I am thankful that there is one law higher than graft, higher than officers, more powerful than the combined influences for evil, and that law is public sentiment. The public will be posted through Congress, if necessary.

It is thought by some that we should change and amend our Constitution and our laws to suit the appetites of foreign elements. To this I answer that if our various foreign friends can not support our Constitution and laws, and if they can not adapt themselves to our ways of living and thinking, and if they can not uphold our ideals, they are at liberty to return from whence they came.

No doubt the time will come when we will have to make the enforcement law stronger. We will have to make it severer. We will have to authorize the imposition of prison sentences instead of fines in certain cases. As it is to-day, very often the violators are charged small fines, which do not amount nearly to what the license would cost, and they go back and make the money back in one day, perhaps. The fines ought to be of sufficient magnitude to deter any man from further engaging in this nefarious practice. The fines should be sufficient to force him to help pay the expenses of the Government, particularly of the courts and the constables and all the paraphernalia it takes to make up the enforcement department, and also to deter others from engaging in similar violations.

There is to-day before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary a bill introduced by me authorizing the employment of national convicts on the public highways in the different States. I would like very much to have that committee make a favorable report on the bill at an early date. I hope the bill will become a law. In South Carolina we work our State convicts on the public highways, and I can see no reason why a national convict is any more sacred than a State convict.

I believe it is claimed this has been opposed by the Department of Justice. That does not make any difference to me.

A few years ago the National Government did not have prohibition to enforce, whereas to-day the great machinery for the enforcement of the prohibition laws exists all over the United States. A large number of people violate the law; they are put in jail, detained a little while, and are set free. Where they are put in the jails they spread bad doctrine among the convicts of the States, and I can see no reason why they should be treated as a special class.

I hope the Committee on the Judiciary will report my bill, and at least let the Senate fight it out on the floor. Perhaps it will take some little education and some little agitation to get it enacted into law, but I desire to relieve the taxpayers of all expense possible, and I want the people who violate the law to help pay the burdens of enforcing it. A few years since the Government owed but $1,300,000,000. To-day we owe over $21,000,000,000.

We need good roads in this country, and the work these convicts would be required to perform would not be in the production of something that would come in competition with ordinary labor or anything of that kind. Therefore there can not be the objection that there would be a surplus of something produced; but they would make good highways, and save the States and the counties from issuing bonds and spending more money in that direction. So I firmly believe we will have to amend the law in several respects. Furthermore, instead of letting politicians have influence with the appointing power who do not want the law enforced, we should let the appointing power have a free hand, and we should hold the enforcing department responsible for its enforcement. How can you expect the prohibition department to have the law enforced when some politician can go to them and have his wet friend made prohibition agent? Under such circumstances he is appointed not for the purpose of enforcing the law but for the purpose of throttling the law, for the purpose of allowing contempt to be brought on the law and allowing law enforcement to be ridiculed.

I do not know that I would particularly favor civil-service examinations in selecting the men to enforce the law, but certainly this kind of a law ought to be relieved from all political influence.

If the people of the country who want to see good government, who want to see less bloodshed, who want to see all laws enforced, would aid the officers in detecting the violators of the law, we could soon make this law a grand success. To say that we can not enforce the law is simply to admit that we do not try to enforce it.

I feel that there should be some shaking up among the officials, but it is not necessary to spend thousands and thousands of dollars of the people's money in an investigation to try to bring up some isolated case and to try to cast reflections on the enforcement officers. The time has come for all good citizens to say they will help to detect and capture and punish the violators of this law. Public sentiment is coming to the rescue, so I hope instead of trying to discredit the law that we will appoint sound officers to enforce it, and that public sentiment will back up those officials. Education, refinement, and justice should rule every country.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I listened to the address of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], and I have this to say in reply: Beyond all expression I deplore the accident which befell Senator GREENE. That he may be restored to health and strength and the unimpaired possession of his brilliant faculties is the universal hope and prayer of the American people. That every phase of this tragic episode should be subjected to the severest scrutiny to ascertain and condemn and punish whatever recklessness or carelessness or criminality may have been involved no one will deny. That this event, however, should be made the basis of an assault on the entire machinery of one of the most useful and effective agencies of our Government is as unjust as it is absurd. The final expression and the ultimate bulwark of our civilization are to be found in the officials in whom we have vested the duty of preserving order and enforcing law. Engaged in the proper performance of this duty they are the living embodiment of the Constitution and the flag. The very sacredness and importance of their functions make any wrongful act by them peculiarly disloyal and foul. But let it be said to the honor and the glory of American enforcement officials of all types—in precinct, county, district, in the town, the city, the State, and Nation—that for bravery, gallantry, courtesy, patriotism, efficiency, devotion to the institutions they defend they are as a body unsurpassed upon this globe.

Among these officials there is no class with heavier responsibilities and more baffling tasks than those who have been charged with the especial execution of the Federal prohibition act. They deal with offenders as desperate and dangerous as murder's annals ever knew; offenders spurred on to insolence, to iniquity, and to violence by the fact that their patrons move in high social circles and call themselves respectable; by the contempt and ridicule which the wet metropolitan press, the stage, and certain other elements pour upon prohibition, anchored though it is in the Constitution and in the statutes for all the coming ages.

Attend, sir, the story of Leroy Youmans. It is the night of the 3d of April, 1923. He and other Federal prohibition officers have learned of the location of a still. Under the command of the Constitution and the law they set out to apprehend the operators. Silently they make their way through the forest. They reach the still and await under cover of the undergrowth the arrival of the outlaws. At length the moonshiners appear and prepare to place the still in operation. One of the officers, changing his position, steps upon a twig. It snaps. Instantly on their guard the moonshiners begin a search to determine the source of the noise. Youmans rises for the purpose of arresting the outlaw who is coming toward him. The outlaw turns the blinding glare of a flash light into this officer's face with one hand and fires upon him from a pistol with the other. Youmans crashes to the earth and in a few moments breathes his last. Speaking of this and similar incidents, Colonel Haynes has well said:

> Never a chance for life have some of these heroes had as they trailed their quarry to its stamping ground.
> They walked, not with sham bravado and in foolhardiness, but with every poor precaution they could adopt, and with infinite courage, into the jaws of death. Again and again, as we scan the list, we read the pitiful story of ambush and cold-blooded murder.

Let me relate now the story of J. H. Reynolds, another Federal prohibition officer. It was the night of August 26, 1921. He and his fellow agents are looking for illicit stills in the mountain district of a historic State. The outlaws for whom they search are in a lonely cabin, within a few feet of which the officers are passing without knowledge of its existence, so completely it is concealed in the underbrush. The outlaws open fire, mainly on Reynolds, because his form happens to be most easily discerned in the darkness. He crumples to the ground, his body riddled and torn with 76 shot.

Hardly less tragic is the fate of the prohibition officers, Beckett and Wood, in March, 1922. With several other agents they set out for a ranch with a warrant of search. The owner falls in with them, apparently consenting to the proposed visit. On arriving, the owner steps behind a building and fires into the group with a shotgun. Beckett and Wood are wounded mortally. Then from all sides a prearranged ambush opens a torrent of fire upon the remaining officers. The officers rush to cover and a pitched battle ensues.

Some months ago another Government agent, whose name I do not now recall, was watching at night a roadway where he had reason to believe that rum runners in automobiles were passing. Presently a car came toward him—the car for which he had been waiting. From the side of the road he called on the driver to stop. The driver, who was a bootlegger, heeded not the call, but drove straight for the officer, running him down and pinning his body under the axle. For nearly half a mile the bootlegger pressed on, attempting to increase his speed, grinding, bruising, and dragging the body of the officer along the road until apparently all life was gone. Then he stopped the car, liberated the body, and tried to escape. As if by a miracle the officer survived, but he is paralyzed and crippled for the remainder of his days.

Perhaps it is needless to multiply instances of the type of criminal with whom the prohibition officer must match his wits and his life, showing the latter to be frequently in the shadow of the grave as he enforces the Constitution and the law; but mention should also be made of the following Federal prohibition agents: Robert G. Anderson, killed April 16, 1923, while arresting bootleggers; Atha Carter, shot from ambush December 24, 1922, while looking for a still with a search warrant, and dying soon afterwards; E. Guy Cole, murdered by moonshiners on December 15, 1922; W. D. Dorsey, killed June 13, 1920, while looking for a still; Robert E. Duff and Howard H. Fisher, killed under the same circumstances on December 9, 1923, and July 7, 1922, respectively.

Similar fates have overtaken still other Federal prohibition agents. On May 17, 1922, Joseph W. Floyd was shot and killed while arresting the driver of an automobile which was loaded with contraband liquor.

On March 19, 1920, Kirby Frans was shot by a moonshiner while making a raid and died soon after.

On April 1, 1921, Jacob F. Green was killed while attempting to capture an outlaw still.

On December 5, 1920, Richard Griffin was killed by moonshiners, as was Charles E. Howell on July 17, 1921, and Jesse R. Johnson on November 21, 1921.

On August 22, 1922, Joseph P. Quinn was killed in a clash with moonshiners, while Grover C. Todd was slain by a bootlegger on September 3, 1922.

On April 30, 1921, John Watson was fatally wounded while attempting to arrest a bootlegger, and died about a month later.

On August 28, 1920, Stanton E. Weiss was killed while attacking an illicit distillery.

I have not attempted to give a complete list of the officers who have been killed in the armed warfare which bootleggers and moonshiners are waging against the Government, including the 100 county and State officials mentioned by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], nor of those who have been wounded but who survived. I have said enough to show, however, that officers whose sworn duty it is to apprehend the violators of the law must be prepared for assassination on the instant. In the absence of an authentic statement of the facts, I make no attempt to justify the officer who fired or who may have fired the shot that accidentally and unfortunately struck Senator GREENE. If the shot had been fired at a bank robber, however, the incident would never have been made the ground of an indiscriminate attack on the administration of our national banking laws. Is it possible that the liquor movement is striking at prohibition over Senator GREENE's shoulders? The record of the prohibition-enforcement unit of the Federal Government is one of remarkable integrity and efficiency.

Mr. President, since the prohibition enforcement unit began some three or four years ago it has had a force ranging at times from 3,500 to 4,000. The total number found guilty of corruption or other offenses is 43, about one-half of this number representing all who have yielded to bribery, about one-half of 1 per cent. Combine with this record the fact that the consumption of intoxicating liquors in the United States has decreased 85 or 90 per cent since nation-wide prohibition became effective, the fact that the enormous sums—more than $2,000,000,000 every year—formerly expended for these liquors are now going into savings accounts, into life insurance, and the substantials of life, and the fact that there has been a reduction in the national death rate equivalent to the saving of 873,975 lives in the first four years of prohibition, and we have a tribute to prohibition which spells its permanent triumph.

In January of this year a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee made a comprehensive investigation of the operation of the prohibition unit from its beginning to the present. That investigation showed that at the close of the last fiscal year the unit had a total force of 3,335—697 in Washington and 2,638 in the field. The organization of the unit in Washington comprises a prohibition commissioner, who superintends the entire work of the unit; an assistant prohibition commissioner, whose title indicates his duties; a counsel's office, composed of a counsel and two divisions, one division interpreting the law, preparing legal opinions, drafting regulations and Treasury decisions pertaining to the prohibition unit, the other division following up and keeping in touch with civil litigation and criminal cases connected with prohibition enforcement, the counsel's office comprising the head counsel and an assistant counsel, a special counsel, 20 attorneys, and 40 law clerks. Then comes the permit division, the industrial alcohol and chemical division, a division of general agents, the narcotic division, which has charge of the antinarcotic law, and the audit division.

The permit division issues basic permits and receives, checks, and files copies of withdrawal permits issued by State directors. The alcohol and chemical division makes a technical test to determine the amount of alcohol contained in seizures, and a test of medicinal preparations containing alcohol, to determine whether they conform to approved formulas issued to manufacturers. It was stated by Assistant Commissioner Jones in the course of this investigation that of the 697 officials at headquarters only about 15 or 18 could properly be charged to overhead. The total field force was shown to consist of 9 field supervisors, 18 divisional chiefs, 521 general prohibition agents, 48 Federal prohibition directors, 12 assistant directors, 1 special assistant director, 25 members of the head field force, 28 members of the head executive division, 1 assistant head of the executive division, 3 attorneys, 25 legal advisers, 59 group heads, 810 Federal prohibition agents, 23 chemists, 666 clerks, 193 warehouse agents, 4 heads of the narcotic field force, 12 narcotic agents in charge, 149 narcotic officers, and 31 narcotic clerks.

It was further shown that there were 49,021 prosecutions under the national prohibition act in the last fiscal year, with 34,067 convictions, 1,770 acquittals, the remainder having been dropped for lack of evidence. It developed also that the prosecutions under the narcotic act in the last fiscal year were 7,201—convictions 4,194, acquittals 285, the residue having been dropped for insufficiency of evidence. It was stated by Assistant Commissioner Jones that the increase in prosecutions since the inauguration of the unit meant more effective enforcement rather than an increase of violations. It was found that the sum of $4,366,056 was deposited in the Treasury as the result of fines and forfeitures obtained under the national prohibition act during the last fiscal year, while civil collections from offers in compromise and taxes on illicit manufacture amounted to $729,244.23, the total sum turned into the Treasury being $5,095,300.23.

The sum realized from fines, penalties, and compromises by the prohibition unit in its enforcement of the narcotic act was almost a million dollars. The amount appropriated by Congress for the use of the Federal prohibition unit for the last fiscal year in enforcing the prohibition and narcotic laws was $9,250,000. The net cost of operation, therefore, was a little over $3,000,000.

The hearings show that the subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee went carefully into every phase and detail of the work of the prohibition unit, with the result that an appropriation to continue that work for the next fiscal year exceeding that of the current year by about one and a half million dollars was recommended. The increase was made necessary by the need of a larger number of general enforcement agents due to the repeal of the New York State enforcement act, the so-called Mullen-Gage law, by the New York Legislature, and by the need of additional equipment and men more effectively to resist smuggling on the international borders and the seacoasts.

In view of the marvelous achievements of the prohibition-enforcement unit, a general investigation would be worse than useless—a waste of funds and energy and time. Instead of a resolution of investigation, the unit should have a vote of thanks. Colonel Haynes and his coworkers of the Federal prohibition forces have won a high and honorable place among the defenders and enforcers of law.

Mr. President, the first rebellion against the present form of the United States Government was a whisky rebellion. The first excise tax on whisky was resisted to such a degree that President Washington was compelled to order out the troops. Meanwhile the rebels had pulled down the American flag, fired on United States officials, on Federal buildings, driven the revenue officers into hiding, and subjected some of them to the severest brutalities. Throughout our history the liquor traffic has continued its career of disregard for law. Every enactment for its regulation and control has encountered its defiance and its contempt, whether the enactment related to sales to boys and girls, sales to drunkards, to opening and closing hours, to operation on the Sabbath, to the unscreening of windows and doors, to forbidden association with the gambling hell and the brothel, the white-slave trade, or its elimination from townships, precincts, counties, or even States. Its inherent lawlessness made it the corrupter of governments and courts. Between it and a condition of order and decency there was an impossible gulf. Recognizing that the conflict with it was a struggle between a higher and a lower plane of existence—that this Nation could not maintain the basic ideal of a Christian Republic with the liquor traffic legalized anywhere within its limits—that as long as the traffic had a legal status in any State it would become a menace to the sections that had endeavored to destroy it by local ordinance, the American people through the due and solemn processes laid down by the Constitution for its own amendment made the liquor traffic an outlaw on every foot of American soil. True to its felonious nature a remnant of the traffic continues to defy and violate both the Constitution and the law.

The operations of this remnant, so small in comparison with the quantities of intoxicants produced and sold in the day of the legalized distilleries, breweries, and saloons as to be relatively insignificant, receive such exaggerated notice in the daily press as to blind many people to the true situation. The foreign visitor whose knowledge of the United States is derived from a sojourn in a few wet cities, the smoking rooms of the Pullmans, from the dinner parties of the rich, the editorials and headlines of certain prominent dailies whose owners and writers still mistake appetite for liberty, from embassies and legations, perhaps, whose officials have no consideration or regard for the beliefs and standards of the vast majority of the American people when they utilize the extraterritorial privilege to load their lockers and their tables with an article our laws have pronounced inimical to the race; the foreign visitor, I say, is frequently the victim of a deluded understanding as to the effect of prohibition in the United States. The bootlegger's rebellion against the American Constitution and the American flag is always in progress, because the traffic in poisonous drugs, whether alcohol or opium, is a natural rebel against all that is decent, uplifting, just, and right. The chief encouragement and the principal recruiting ground for this mutiny against law and order may be found in certain metropolitan sections of our country where prohibition was never accepted in principle by the dominant elements and where these elements have not yet been willing to subordinate their opinions to the will of the American people as embodied in the Constitution and the law.

From these sections volleys of verbal and printed denunciation have been constantly discharged against prohibition and the efforts of the American people to enforce it. Propagandist endeavors are always under way to create the impression that the entire prohibition enforcement machinery has collapsed and that prohibition is a failure. The resolution of the Senator from New Jersey fits admirably into such a campaign. The social revelers, the wealthy entertainers, the circles of the privileged and predatory rich, their imitators, worshipers, and hangers-on form but another wing of the bootleg army. They can never shake the opposition of the American people to the liquor traffic, but they can by their unfair and flippant attacks on prohibition imperil the lives of enforcement officers by making the outlaws more vicious and more determined, readier to shoot, quicker to kill. The society matron who feels that she must circulate cocktails among her guests little realizes that not only may she send some soul to hell about her board but may also by the encouragement her patronage gives to an illegal traffic send a bullet into the heart of another official sworn to uphold the law and to apprehend its violators.

The deplorable accident to Senator GREENE has been seized upon by the liquor propagandists for a renewal of their efforts to discredit prohibition. Let the resolution reflecting this attempt in the Senate of the United States be rejected and the whole bootleg army once more notified that America is forever dry. Let bootleggers, moonshiners, and all the other criminals be given to understand that the American Congress and the American people will sustain and applaud our officers in the enforcement of law.

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield.

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. I hope Senators will permit a vote upon the Senate resolution now. I think it has been very thoroughly discussed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Can we have a vote on it immediately?

Mr. BALL. I think the vote can be had without further discussion.

Mr. SMITH. With the understanding that it is to create no discussion, I am perfectly willing that the request of the Senator from Delaware shall be complied with.

Mr. BALL. I think the resolution has been very thoroughly discussed——

Mr. SMITH. I think so.

Mr. BALL. So far as oil and whisky and water and all other things that may be found in apartments are concerned.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then let us have a vote.

Mr. SMITH. With the privilege of immediately proceeding if there is any evidence of the resolution provoking discussion, I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina is speaking upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Were not the amendments which were proposed adopted just before the discussion which has intervened?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at that time, but is advised that the pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SMITH. My impression was that the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas was adopted immediately after the one——

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President; the amendment never has been voted on. Several other subjects arose, and the debate has proceeded continuously and without abatement since.

The pending question is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SMITH. If that excites no discussion, I am willing to have the vote taken.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if Senators desire to speak, it seems to me they can speak just as well on this matter as on something else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no control over the subjects upon which Senators may speak.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator from Washington will recognize that it will relieve the Senator from Delaware very greatly if he can have this vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Delaware is not uneasy. He knows that his resolution will pass whenever he gets a vote on it.

Mr. BALL. I know; but the time for this survey is limited, and if the discussion continues from day to day in this way, of course, we never will get the survey. It must be reported not later than the latter part of March, and I hope Senators will let the resolution come to a vote at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, if it will hurry the survey along, I shall not interfere in any way.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us vote.

Mr. SMITH. I propose that we vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. SMITH. With the understanding that it does not take me off the floor, and that there is to be no further discussion, I am willing to have a vote taken on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And at the same time retain the floor?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; that was my idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is impossible.

Mr. SMITH. Very well; then I will proceed with what I have to say.

Mr. President, a very serious situation has arisen in one of our statistical departments, and I have taken the floor this afternoon because my statement must come in as nearly chronologically as possible with what transpired yesterday in reference thereto.

The Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, in order to try to get this very serious matter corrected—very serious not only to the State that I represent in part, but to others—has been holding, during all of the preceding week, conferences in reference to it; that is, conferences with the bureau under the department. It finally resulted in the Secretary of Commerce suggesting what might lead to a solution, and that was given to the press yesterday.

In order that it may go into the RECORD and be understood by the thousands who will be affected thereby, I desire to read an explanation of just what has occurred.

The report of the Census Bureau as to the amount of cotton on hand in the United States on August 1, 1923, has been challenged, not only by those particularly interested but by statisticians of international repute. In order that the situation may be clearly understood, the facts should be stated.

The Census Bureau is charged by the Government with gathering statistics as to the production and consumption of cotton and the supply on hand annually. The sources from which they gather this information are as follows:

First. The ginners of the country report the amount ginned. These reports from ginners are obtained by Government officials who visit each gin at least once a month during the ginning period. This gives to the Census Department the number of bales ginned for the season.

I should like those who are listening to follow me carefully, because it is very important for you to catch the significance of the startling discrepancy that has occurred and its effect not only upon what is perhaps the greatest American product in the way of a world monopoly but upon the welfare of the people who produce it and the balance of trade in America that is dependent upon this article.

As I say, the ginners first report the amount ginned. These reports from the ginners are obtained by Government officials who visit each gin, 20,000 in number, at least once a month during the ginning period. There is a reporter for every cotton county in America, supported by the Federal Government, in order to get accurately the number of bales produced. This gives to the Census Department the number of bales ginned for the season.

Second. The number of bales imported, consisting of foreign cotton and of American cotton which may be reimported. These figures, of course, are compiled by Government officials from the customhouse books. There are a few bales of foreign cotton that find their way over the border between this country and Mexico which can not be accurately accounted for, but the number is small and in the vast crop is negligible.

Third. There is what is called the city crop; that is, each bale, in passing from the producer to its ultimate consumption, is sampled from time to time to ascertain the grade and character of the cotton contained in the bale.

These samples are reassembled and repacked. They do not add anything to the total amount of cotton, but they do increase the number of bales a certain amount, perhaps a little less than 100,000.

These are the three divisions which constitute the source of supply, namely, ginning, imports, and the city crop. These are all admittedly very accurate. From this, now, is to be taken consumption, export, and cotton destroyed. The balance will represent how much cotton, if any, is to be carried over from one season into another.

The method of ascertaining the consumption, or the distribution, as it is called, is as follows: Exports—that is, cotton ginned, exported abroad—are, of course, ascertained from the customhouses. The amount consumed is determined from the consuming establishments in this country, and the amount destroyed is ascertained from the various insurance companies. These are added and then subtracted from the supply, and the amount left is called the carry-over.

Ordinarily, before consumption, export, and loss are subtracted, consuming establishments—that is, the cotton mills, warehouses, and holding companies—are asked to give by telegraph and by mail a statement of the amount of stocks on hand at the end of the year. This, also, is considered in making up the carry-over. The result of this addition and subtraction is ordinarily approximately in line with supply and distribution, as heretofore mentioned. Right here, let me state that perhaps never before in the history of the cotton industry of America—certainly of America, and perhaps of the world—has there been such an imminent famine of cotton as there is this year. The supply has been practically exhausted because of the three years of very small production; and yet this year the carry-over, as reported by the Census Department under the head "To balance distribution," is 579,000 bales out of line.

In other words, after having taken the ginners' reports, the imports, and the city crop, and deducted from that the exports, the consumption, the loss by burning, and the country damage, when they subtracted the latter from the former it left less than 2,000,000 bales of cotton as a carry-over; but when they made inquiry by letter and telegram of the consuming and holding establishments, they reported 3,095,000 bales, or 579,000 bales in excess of that subtraction.

It must be borne in mind that the figures for ginning, imports, and destruction are admittedly correct. They are gathered by Government officials, and are susceptible of being checked up, while the reports as to stock held in consuming establishments, warehouses, and so forth, are obtained by letters and telegrams sent to these places and are not susceptible of being checked up, and are more or less ex parte. They are admittedly susceptible to errors of duplication, and are more or less inaccurate; and yet the department has stated the latter figures as the amount of cotton held in stock on August 1, 1923.

If it is insisted that these figures of the consuming establishments are to be accepted, then there is absolutely no use of getting the cotton statistics—that is, the amount ginned, the amount imported, the city crop, and then the amount consumed, the amount exported, and the amount destroyed—because if the reports made by the consuming establishments, warehouses, and holding companies are to be taken as the amount of stocks on hand, then all that would be necessary would be, at the end of each year, to ask these establishments by letter and telegram to state how much cotton they had on hand, and give this out to the world as the carry-over in the next year.

Secretary Hester, of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, who is now 78 years old, has had 50 years of unimpeached experience in this business and is looked upon as being the most reliable international statistician on the subject in the world, makes the following statement to me by telegram, which I will read to the Senate.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to add to what the Senator has said about Secretary Hester that I have known this gentleman quite well, personally, for the past 26 years. He is one of the ablest, most high-grade, honorable men I have ever known. He enjoys the universal confidence and esteem of all those who know him, and I believe the Senator from South Carolina rightly describes him as the ablest international cotton expert on earth.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want my colleagues here and the trade world to understand that we are not attempting to force any kind of report in accord with our personal interests. We simply want the facts. We believe that the 600,000 bales do not exist, and we propose to exhaust every method known to prove the truth of the matter. Secretary Hoover has suggested that he appoint a committee of expert and disinterested statisticians to go thoroughly into the matter and report their findings of fact, and also to suggest such legislation as to gathering statistics in the future as will make such discrepancies impossible. This was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. If it does not interrupt the course of thought of the Senator, I wish he would again make manifest that situation about the city crop. This city crop is extracted from bales which have been ginned?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the city crop is only apparently and not in reality more cotton?

Mr. SMITH. That is, as to bales. We are counting bales and not the number of pounds.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is reported twice.

Mr. ASHURST. That is what I want to know.

Mr. SMITH. No; it is not reported twice. For instance, if there are a thousand bales in the gin and enough is taken out of that to make 100 bales, there would be 1,100 bales, of lighter weight, but 1,100 bales. So that in counting bales there would be that many more bales.

Mr. McKELLAR. More bales, but not more cotton.

Mr. SMITH. That is true—more bales, but not more cotton. We are practically willing to have the number of bales—those brought into existence—counted. We have taken the ginner's report and checked it over for a period of perhaps 10 or 15 years, and it has been considered by Mr. Hester and others as being accurate.

What we are determined to find out is this: Do the 600,000 bales exist? Along that line I would like to have read from the desk this telegram from Mr. Hester. I invite those who are interested in this subject to pay attention to this. The subject should interest every American citizen for this reason: That if the 600,000 bales of cotton do not exist and the committee Mr. Hoover has suggested he will appoint to investigate decide and prove that they do not, and we ratify that, it will affect the world supply and reflect itself in the added income to America.

Now I would like to have the telegram read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read.

The principal legislative clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, February 26, 1924.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
United States Senator from South Carolina,
Washington, D. C.:

Referring to your wire, while invitation of Senators to go to Washington for consultation regarding cotton situation is appreciated, I am advised by high medical authority that it will not be advisable for one of my advanced age to risk taking the trip at this season of the year. Am distressed at inability to comply with your request, and suggest if you can possibly do so that you come to New Orleans with Director Steuart and Mr. Zimmerman. Conference may be had here with utmost privacy, with no possibility of leak in advance of promulgation of final decision. In reference to yourself personally, if you can spare the time our people will be glad to meet the father of the United States cotton futures act, which is universally considered as one or the most constructive laws on the statute books in favor of producers, consumers, and trade.

In reference to subject matter of conference the sole question is how to meet the enormous discrepancy displayed in the face of the census figures of supply and distribution. In reference to the 1921–22 figures of distribution, they practically balance with supply as deducted from ginnings of that year, the difference of 131,924 being largely accounted for by additions of bales from samples, loss, and waste in handling, and city crops, together with a few minor errors which are negligible in quantity.

It is therefore evident that practically all of the six hundred and odd thousand bales discrepancy relates to the 1922–23 movement.

It does not matter how the figures are shifted, the fact stares us in the face that, after allowing, say 100,000 bales for city crops, there remains a half million bales in the distribution that is not accounted for in the total of ginnings.

The question therefore is: Was the report of aggregate ginnings for last year 500,000 bales too small; and if not, is the total of stocks carried over on July 31, 1923, 500,000 bales too large? These are the only questions to be met. There is no getting away from them. Either the ginnings must be increased or the stocks decreased. You are facing a condition that must be met. Now, as to probabilities. Remember my figures are not in question. They have nothing to do with the matter. It is solely an adjustment of Census Bureau data. You are forced to add to or deduct, as the case may be. If you do not do either, your statement will stand discredited before the world as containing more than a half million bales which you do not or can not account for. Given these facts it is for you to decide whether you will correct ginnings or stocks. One or the other must be adjusted.

As to ginnings, it is highly improbable that they were a half million bales short. There would seem to be no inducement for ginners to falsify their own records. Moreover, they were checked by a well-known private organization, which would certainly have discovered more or less of such a discrepancy.

In reference to stocks carried over on July 31, 1923, there is a strong likelihood that certain duplications were made of at least 400,000 bales. Some mills consider cotton bought but not delivered as part of their stocks. To all intents and purposes they feel sure of such cotton, and they are not interested in reporting small stocks. Moreover, they may not feel that it is wrong to consider cotton secured from responsible sources as equivalent to so much practically in hand. Kindly consider I make no charge but merely state possibilities that are not universal.

In reference to stocks in public storage: Warehousemen can not say with certainty who own the stocks they carry. Cotton in warehouse may be sold and warehouse receipts exchanged weeks before it is shipped out and change of ownership made known. In July last many thousand bales were bought on the great differences in values between old and new crop cotton which were held in suspense between sellers and mills, though actually considered as secured and part of their stocks by the mills. This undoubtedly formed part of the stocks reported to the Census Bureau, though there is no way of pinning them down to the individual reporting who considered he was making an honest report. There is, I believe, a penalty for not reporting correctly to the bureau, and this provision would prevent acknowledgments of errors of any magnitude. How then is the Census Bureau able to check such statement? How ascertain that they were at fault?

Finally, how is the census discrepancy of over 500,000 bales to be adjusted? It must be met. You can not let it remain unaccounted for as at present.

It is claimed that publication of figures based upon the census has wrecked the market, causing a depreciation of upward of $150,000,000 clear loss to the holders of cotton in this country. That their promulgation has supplied ammunition to propaganda industriously circulated for the insidious purpose of depressing values. I understand that the Census Bureau is forced to accept statements as furnished them unless they have substantial proofs of their falsity, unless they have substantial backing for promulgating information in reasonable shape. Such backing could be furnished by the Senators. To them the matter should present itself in the following shape. There has been an apparent distribution which added to reported stocks of more than a half million bales that are not justified by the known sources of supply. How could that be possible? The half million bales does not exist, hence the cotton reported as remaining in the country July 31, 1923, has been overstated to that extent. Personally I do not believe it exists and shall continue to think so unless its source can be proved beyond question of doubt. Please understand that my own published data do not enter into the matter. This is entirely a question of the Census Bureau proving up its own statements as shown on their face. If they can and will do so, I will gladly adjust myself to accord. Meanwhile justice to the southern people requires that they be relieved of an uncertainty which already has wrought them grievous harm. The southern people look to their Senators to aid them in this dilemma fairly and promptly.

Regretting I can not be with you, and trusting you may see your way, if deemed proper, to come to New Orleans for further conference.

HENRY G. HESTER, Secretary.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. As I understand the Senator, the amount of error, if any, will be deducted from the quantity of cotton on hand in the United States?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. DIAL. Then, as a matter of sequence, of course, the same amount would be deducted from the world supply?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; that is, Mr. President, there is an alleged error in the world supply which exceeds the apparent error in the American supply of cotton.

Now, just a sentence in conclusion, and I shall be through. There is no use of my recounting what the agricultural interests of this country have been through since May 18, 1920. Providence seemed to step in and intervene in behalf of the cotton grower, in that he is in a condition exactly the reverse of that of the wheat grower. The wheat growers are suffering from a surplus, while the spinners of cotton—not the producers—are suffering from a shortage. Yet they have so manipulated this market that in the face of the greatest famine in this world's necessity the price has broken practically $50 a bale in the last 90 days.

I propose to ask my colleagues of the Southern States to join me in a memorial to the cotton producers of the South, as we have not yet put any cotton seed in the ground, that they cut cotton out to the very limit this year. If the mills of the Old World and the New protect themselves against a cotton famine by running half time, it is our duty to protect ourselves, by not producing, against the ruinous situation we are in when stocks are piled up by virtue of nonconsumption.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield further to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Would it not also be a good idea to ask people to hold cotton, to keep it off the market, until normal conditions are restored?

Mr. SMITH. I think that is a very good suggestion; and as we are coming so liberally to the aid of the wheat growers—and I was in the thick of that fight, as the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will testify, and was for them—I shall ask, if the necessity arises—and it looks as if it will—that the cotton raisers be given financial aid so they will be able to hold this article of world monopoly off the market until such time as those who produce it and furnish it to the world shall get at least a reasonable profit on its production.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, now I am willing that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] shall have a vote on his resolution if the Chair will submit it to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Arkansas proposes, on page 2, after line 10, to insert the following:

(c) Whether any organization, association, or combination, or any committee of persons representing real estate owners or dealers prescribe or attempt to control prices of real estate and of building construction and the rents or charges for housing accommodations in the District of Columbia; and if so, the methods pursued in prescribing or attempting to control such prices and rents or charges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who is temporarily absent from the Chamber, has been attempting all day to get the floor to call up his resolution for the investigation of the Department of Justice. He has been unable to do so, and the hour is now so late that a tentative arrangement has been effected, subject, of course, to the approval of the Senate, that the resolution may be taken up to-morrow immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, and if it shall not have been finally disposed of at the hour of 2 o'clock that the unfinished business be then temporarily laid aside in order to complete the consideration of the resolution.

I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the morning business on to-morrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 157) offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and if the same shall not have been disposed of at the hour of 2 o'clock, that the unfinished business then be temporarily laid aside in order to enable the Senate to conclude consideration of the Wheeler resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator if that means the routine morning business, or any business which might come up in the morning hour?

Mr. ROBINSON. It means the routine morning business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We usually express it in that way.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the morning business, of course. The technical language that I have used I think is correct, but I have no objection to stating "routine morning business" to clear the language of the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I was momentarily called from the Chamber. Will the Senator state his request again?

Mr. ROBINSON. The request is that agreed upon by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and myself, subject, of course, to the approval and confirmation of the Senate, namely, that at the conclusion of the routine morning business on to-morrow the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 157, submitted by Mr. WHEELER, and that if the same is not disposed of prior to the hour of 2 o'clock, when that hour is reached the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside so as to enable the Senate to conclude the consideration of the Wheeler resolution.

Mr. WILLIS. That proposal meets with my entire approval. There is no disposition on the part of anyone to postpone consideration of the matter. I should have been glad if it could have been considered to-day.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the unanimous consent will be given. I think it is very proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

EXPERIMENT IN RURAL-MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2111), authorizing the Postmaster General to conduct an experiment in the rural-mail service, and for other purposes. There will be no objection to the bill on the part of anyone, I am sure, and it will not take very long to dispose of it. I have not taken very much of the time of the Senate, and I have been waiting for almost 30 days to get the bill considered by the Senate. It is recommended by the Postmaster General, it is recommended unanimously by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The bill simply provides that on rural routes in the United States the Postmaster General shall be allowed to make experiments and collect and carry at specially low rates on those routes the small parcels going from the farmers to the town, going merely to the town where the rural route begins and not beyond. Many farmers have small parcels which they can not afford to send to town by ordinary means, which they can not afford to take to town 15 or 20 miles away and spend the time themselves and the gasoline for their machines, and for that reason they lose a great deal of what they raise in the way of vegetables, and also butter and eggs. They often throw away things of that sort when the people in town are paying high prices for the same products. This experiment would enable the rural carrier to take such small packages at lower rates, and would give the Postmaster General entire control over the experiments on 50 routes designated by him.

Mr. KING. We defeated a similar proposition once before.

Mr. HARRIS. This has been unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and is recommended by the Postmaster General. It provides merely for a trial of the plan for a year on 50 rural routes.

Mr. CURTIS rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia, as the Chair understands it, asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. Does the Senator from Kansas object?

Mr. CURTIS. I did not rise for the purpose of objecting. I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that we proceed with the calendar for an hour and dispose of unobjected bills. We can get along nicely with the calendar in that time, and I hope the Senator from Georgia will not ask for special consideration for his bill, but let us see if we can not reach it on the calendar. We have not had a call of the calendar for a long while.

Mr. HARRIS. I have already explained the bill, and I do not think there will be any objection to it. I hope the Senator will not require me to delay it further.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I think there is no objection to the bill referred to by the Senator from Georgia. We studied it carefully in the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and there was a unanimous report by that committee. It proposes an experiment in the right direction.

Mr. HARRIS. The Post Office Department has approved it, as I said.

Mr. KING. I object. Let us have the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the regular order.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. CURTIS. I submit my unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of the calendar for one hour, and consider only unobjected bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. For one hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. JONES of Washington addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, since unanimous consent has been obtained to consider the Wheeler resolution on to-morrow and I desire to talk at the time the resolution comes up for consideration, I shall not take any more time this afternoon. So far as I am concerned Senators may proceed to the consideration of local bills.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I had intended to submit some remarks on the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], but I think it is very desirable to proceed with the call of the calendar. I shall reserve what I have to say until that resolution is actually before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it was my intention to submit some observations on the proposed constitutional amendment introduced by me, Senate Joint Resolution No. 18, but in view of the obvious desire of many Senators to have a call of the calendar, I shall withhold my remarks until the hour shall have expired, and then I shall ask Senators to indulge me while I submit some remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. The Secretary will report the first business on the calendar.

The resolution (S. Res. 118) providing that any person or agency investigated by any Senate committee shall have the right to be present in person and by attorneys and to present evidence in their own behalf was announced as first in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1330) for the relief of the estate of Ely N. Sonnenstrahl, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. KING. Let the report be read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the report (No. 65).

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand it is a very long report. Therefore I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1918) relative to officers in charge of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WIDENING OF GEORGIA AVENUE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The bill (S. 1339) to authorize the widening of Georgia Avenue between Fairmont Street and Gresham Place NW. was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for widening of Georgia Avenue between Fairmont Street and Gresham Place NW., with a width of not less than 90 feet, in accordance with maps on file in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages for, and in respect of, the land to be condemned for said widening, plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings hereunder, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits against the property which the jury shall find to be benefited.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceeding taken pursuant hereto, and for the payment of the amounts awarded as damages to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits, and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the author of the bill if we have not a general condemnation law in the District and why a special statute should be necessary for the widening of this street? Have we not a general law?

Mr. BALL. Under the present law condemnation proceedings may be had, but only a part of the expense is borne by the property owners. In this case all the expense is to be borne by the property owners, because this was formerly a pike 90 feet in width and the property owners gradually encroached upon it, and it is fenced in and we can not get possession of it for that reason. The bill authorizes condemnation for the full width of the street, for which it assesses the expense entirely against the property owners.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLOSING A PORTION OF MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE NW.

The bill (S. 1784) to provide for the closing of a portion of Massachusetts Avenue NW., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to close, vacate, and abandon, for highway purposes, a strip of land lying within the lines of Massachusetts Avenue immediately abutting lots 1 to 8, in block 5, Fairview Heights subdivision, containing 12,309 square feet of ground, so as to create a uniform width of 160 feet for that part of Massachusetts Avenue lying between the present northerly line of the said avenue and the northerly line of the strip of land herein referred to: Provided, however, That the consent in writing of the abutting property owners of the said lots in block 5, Fairview Heights subdivision, be obtained.

SEC. 2. That the title to the said part of Massachusetts Avenue so closed, vacated, and abandoned shall vest in the abutting property owners and shall be taxable as private property to the same extent that other private property in the District of Columbia is taxable.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator from Delaware about the bill? Who is to get the land that now belongs to the District, and how much is there of it?

Mr. BALL. The abutting property owners get the land.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much of the city's property is to be given away under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. BALL. I think if the Secretary will read the report, which contains a letter from the Commissioners of the District, it will answer the Senator's question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1784) to provide for the closing of a portion of Massachusetts Avenue NW., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The Commissioners of the District urge the necessity of this legislation in the following communication to the chairman of the District Committee of the Senate:

WASHINGTON, January 4, 1924.

Hon. L. HEISLER BALL,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a bill to provide for the closing of a portion of Massachusetts Avenue NW., in the District of Columbia, which they request be introduced and enacted.

The subdivision of Fairview Heights, creating Massachusetts Avenue, 160 feet wide, was made many years prior to the enactment of a bill authorizing the extension of Massachusetts Avenue from the city, and when the avenue was extended it developed that it would not line up with Massachusetts Avenue as indicated in the Fairview Heights subdivision, the difference in the width being the area shown in red on the blue print attached herewith. The object of the bill is to abandon the strip of land indicated so that title may vest in the abutting property owners. The bill provides that before this strip of land may be abandoned the consent in writing of the abutting property owners must be obtained.

The commissioners are advocating the enactment of the proposed bill in order that improvements along this front may be brought out on a line with other improvements to be made along the south side of Massachusetts Avenue.

Very respectfully,

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
By CUNO H. RUDOLPH, President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDENING OF FOURTH STREET NW.

The bill (S. 1343) to authorize the widening of Fourth Street south of Cedar Street NW., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the widening of Fourth Street immediately south of Cedar Street NW., to its full width of 90 feet, upon such lines as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem best for the public interest: Provided, however, That of the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said widening plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings hereunder, not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by the jury as benefits.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the amounts awarded as damages. The amounts assessed as benefits when collected shall be repaid to the District of Columbia and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia why it is that this land can not be condemned under the general law? What is the difference between what is desired to be accomplished here and what is desired to be accomplished generally? I very much doubt the wisdom of having special laws for these purposes when we already have a general condemnation law on the statute books.

Mr. BALL. The report on the bill was written by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and I must admit that I am not familiar with it. A reading of the report will enable us, I am sure, to learn the reasons.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. BALL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. If I may be pardoned I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that there is a general statute in the District restricting the condemnation of land and the rights of certain corporations for public purposes to condemn or exercise the right of eminent domain; but, as I recall, that law does not authorize the condemnation of streets by the city. The custom has been to obtain the passage of a special bill whenever condemnation was sought, because it involved an appropriation. Congress was not willing to submit to the District the unrestricted power to condemn land for public purposes.

So they come to Congress whenever they desire to condemn property because in that way an appropriation will be carried.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see that the bill refers to "chapter 15 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia." I rather assume that that is a condemnation law. I am not familiar with it, but I merely wish to know if that be true. Of course, this would be a very proper law if there be no general condemnation law, but if there be a general condemnation law, I think it is a very bad practice when anybody wants something done or to get such and such special benefits to come forward and ask for a condemnation.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Tennessee will see that where it involves an expenditure Congress has not felt in the past that it was wise to commit to the District the right to involve the Government.

Mr. GEORGE. The report contains this recitation:

> It is their opinion that the matter in hand is one requiring special legislation because of the fact that the property to be taken will involve an assessment that would result in too great a burden upon the surrounding property if the proceedings were conducted under the law referred to.

I am reading from the report of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. What they state seems to be the reason for the passage of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suppose, then, they want the Government to bear a portion of the burden. I doubt very greatly whether we ought to permit this sort of legislation for the city. We have a general condemnation law, and the practice is bad to come here every time——

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield in just a moment. I repeat, the practice is bad—every time they want special favors to come and ask for a special act to obtain those favors. There ought to be a uniform law of condemnation for the city; indeed, I understand we have such a law, and it seems to me that we ought to abide by it, and everybody ought to abide by it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I read just another sentence from the report of the committee on the bill, giving the reason why the District Commissioners favor the passage of the bill. The report states:

> As the benefits that will result from the opening of Fourth Street will, in a great degree, accrue to the community at large, the commissioners believe that the General Treasury should bear one-half of the cost.

And so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was quite sure that there would be a good reason assigned for the proposed legislation, but whether it is a real reason or not is a very different thing. I wish to state that, so far as this bill is concerned, I shall not object, but if it shall become the practice, as it seems to be becoming the practice, for everyone who wants to get out of paying his proper share of assessments for street improvements, to come to Congress with a special bill for that purpose, I am going to object to it in the future, and I am not going to let such bills pass if I can prevent it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Tennessee will yield, I desire to say I think that the case now before us may be differentiated from the cases which the Senator has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope that it can.

Mr. KING. Take a case where there are benefits to be derived by the owners of abutting property, and they seek to have the street opened; in such case there is no appropriation sought. Supposing, however, that the District feels the necessity of opening a street, as it has in many cases. It will be recalled, for instance, that recently it was desired to open a street in the neighborhood of one of the hospitals of Washington. It is important that the street be opened. It may be that opening the street will require the taking of a portion of the land which is owned by individuals. Somebody must pay for the land. The individual whose property we take is not benefited, but is damaged. Who, therefore, shall pay the damage? Obviously the Government should do so. The Government pays a part and the District pays a part. Heretofore we have not been willing to remit such matters to the District and to permit the District commissioners to inaugurate condemnation proceedings whenever they please where such proceedings involve expense. So it has always been necessary to come to Congress, as I understand the law, where the proceeding involves appropriations out of the Treasury of the United States. Let me say to the Senator that I would not be willing that a general condemnation law should give power to the commissioners to condemn as, when, and where they pleased where it would involve expenditures which would have to be paid out of the General Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think a uniform condemnation law is very much better, and that is what we have. As the Senator from Utah will notice there are several bills similar to this now on the calendar. It is a bad practice. Whenever a street is opened, even though it may take some of the property, it benefits the remainder very much.

Mr. KING. But suppose there is no benefit and the Government itself is seeking condemnation of the property?

Mr. McKELLAR. But that is not the case here. It is not so stated in the report or in the bill. As I said, I am not going to object to the bill if the Senator from Utah assures me that there are unusual circumstances surrounding it, as he does, by reason of which it ought to be passed. I am going to take the Senator's statement now; but I repeat, it is a bad practice. I hope the committee will not report out such bills in the future onerating the Government with larger assessments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the situation of the District is considerably different from the situation in many of the municipalities in the States. In most of the States the municipalities have the power to exercise the right of eminent domain. They can without going to the legislature, where that power has been conferred upon them, bring suits for the purpose of condemning the lands of private individuals for public use. Here we have been, as I am informed, unwilling to permit the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to condemn whenever they please, because it has involved in many instances expenditures, appropriations for which have had to be made out of the Treasury, a part of them to be paid by general taxation. Therefore, in many of these cases it is necessary to come to Congress and obtain consent because a part of the money is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Speaking for myself, I should be unwilling to give unrestricted authority to the District commissioners to initiate condemnation proceedings whenever they please if such proceedings would involve expenditures to be paid for out of the General Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish to say that I think the Senator will agree with me that where benefits accrue to the owners, especially in cases where streets are broadened for their benefit, the general law ought to be observed, and no one who merely wants to avoid the expense of the improvement and throw it on the Government should be permitted to do so.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure the Senator does, and I want to say further to the Senator, who is a member of the District Committee, that we ought to be very careful as to the facts in each case when such bills as this, onerating the Government with large sums of money for improvements of this kind, are under consideration, and we ought to be very careful when they are reported to the Senate. I am sure the Senator agrees with me as to that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course the broad generalizations of my distinguished friend would call for a complete acquiescence in the conclusions which he has stated. Where the benefits to be derived from the improvement are to be enjoyed by the abutting property owners, of course they ought to pay whatever costs are involved in the expropriation, but where the city as a whole is the beneficiary and the abutting owners do not obtain benefits or obtain benefits in part only, then another question is presented. This case comes within the latter category, and the committee felt, because of the fact that the improvement was of general benefit to the public in contradistinction to special benefit to the abutting owners, the general public should pay a part of the expenses involved in this condemnation proceeding.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I should like to state that this money is not appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States from the general fund, but it is taken entirely from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the amounts assessed as benefits are to be returned to the Treasury.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has laid down the fair rule. I have known bills passed here which required the payment of the entire damages by the abutting property owners. That is arbitrarily fixing by legislation damages the amount of which is not known and can not be known in advance, and hence is quite as likely to be an unjust proposition as a just one. The rule ought to be that if the abutting property owners receive any benefits they should be required to pay for them, while if they get no benefits they ought not to be required to pay. If the cost is greater than the benefits, then the additional cost ought to be paid out of the Treasury.

The Senator from Utah has called attention to the fact that in most of the States a municipality has the right, whenever it sees fit, to condemn property; but in that case, although the damages, whatever they may be, may be assessed partly, and perhaps wholly, against property owners, if there are any other damages not paid by those who get benefits, the taxpayers of the municipality have to pay the bill.

The general rule would not work as well in the District of Columbia, because the Government of the United States comes into the equation, and there are cases where the Government of the United States ought perhaps to pay all of the expense. I have in mind now an appropriation of quite a large sum of money several years ago designed to extend the Zoological Park. I think the law provided in that case that the entire cost should be assessed against the property owners, and an effort was made to do that. I think in two different cases that was undertaken. I happen to know abutting property owners who get no benefit, and who, as a matter of fact, might have been damaged by the extension, but the entire amount was necessarily by the law assessed against them. That improvement, as I have said, was designed to provide an addition to a park that belonged to the whole city, and there ought to have been nothing assessed against anybody; the city or the Government of the United States, or both together, ought to have paid for it. In the District of Columbia it is impossible to tell in advance what the result is going to be, and if we had a general law that required the assessment of the entire damages against property owners benefited they would be assessed in many instances a great deal more even than their property was worth in order to pay the cost and more than it could be sold for. It would be an injustice. On the other hand, under the dual form of government which obtains here, there may be a good many cases where, perhaps, they ought to pay it all, but the legislative body can not tell that; it can only lay down the rule and that question must be settled by a court or by some other tribunal that is set up by law if the court does not determine it. Such a tribunal can examine the facts and determine what the damages are.

Mr. BALL. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BALL. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Tennessee that the Committee on the District of Columbia is very carefully considering such bills. In the case of the first bill that we passed, the damages are assessed entirely on the property owners, because the land taken was formerly a part of a highway on which the property owners gradually moved their fences until the highway was narrowed and could not be used as a highway until the street was opened. So the first bill provided for the assessment of the damages for widening that highway entirely against the abutting property owners. This is a different proposition entirely. It is for the public. It is for widening the streets to relieve congested travel, to relieve the very congestion which we all see here in Washington at certain hours in the morning. This is not entirely for the property owners, but it is for the public. For that reason we fix a different basis.

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the assurance of the chairman of the committee and the other members of the committee that these are benefits that are going to the city generally, instead of the property owners, I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 105) for the relief of Arthur Frost was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like some explanation from the Committee on Claims as to the bill and the liability of the Government.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this bill was introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARREL D], and he was chairman of the subcommittee which considered it. He is not in the Chamber at this time, and I ask that the bill go over until his return.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1867) for the relief of the estate of John Stewart, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 243) for the relief of Frank Vunbaca was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]—who, I see, reported the bill—why the whole question of damages was not embraced in a single measure? It appears that this is a claim for damages alleged to have accrued to the claimant's house by reason of blasting operations carried on in Portland Harbor, and that a number of other houses belonging to other persons were injured at the same time.

It would seem that they all should be treated with equal consideration and that the whole subject matter might very well be disposed of at one time instead of piecemeal and in separate bills. I note that the Chief of Engineers in reporting upon the matter suggests that course, but he makes no objection to the passage of this separate bill.

Mr. CAPPER. The committee considered only the claim presented in this bill; and I will ask that it go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 334) for the relief of Kate Canniff was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN H. WALKER.

The bill (S. 356) for the relief of John H. Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,690.52 to John H. Walker, of Pasadena, Calif., as compensation in full for services rendered by him in the matter of the survey of public lands under contract No. 385, New Mexico.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether under the appropriation made the following year there was no authority to pay this claim, if it was a valid claim against the Government?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I can answer the Senator's inquiry. This is a claim which should have been paid nearly 20 years ago. It arose out of a contract for some surveying in New Mexico. The surveyor made his report, but it was contended by some one in the land office that the job of surveying was not a good job, and his bill was held up. A number of other examinations were made; but within the last two or three weeks a matter involving the question of the boundary of the tract of land in question came before the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court held that the line run by this surveyor was the actual boundary of the property, and it was improperly held up for many years. The bill should be at least double the amount mentioned here, because this man has been out of the use of his money for all these years, and a great deal of it, of course, was expense money which he paid out in making the survey.

Mr. KING. Could he not convert the department to the justice of his claim?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He finally did it, and in 1920 the claim was audited and allowed; but when it came to payment it was turned down because there was no appropriation for it. The appropriation made back years ago had lapsed into the Treasury, and there was no money available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSA E. PLUMMER.

The bill (S. 1249) for the relief of Rosa E. Plummer was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Rosa E. Plummer, a former employee in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the provision of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like the author of the bill to explain it. I do not see where the Government was to blame.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this woman was working at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and while working there her eyes were injured. Under the law she had to file an application within two years, but she was under treatment all during the two years and did not file her application until after the two years had expired. Had she filed her application within the two years, she would have had the benefit of this law.

Mr. DIAL. Irrespective of the cause of the trouble?

Mr. CURTIS. It is admitted that her injury was the result of her service in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, according to the report, the woman is totally blind.

Mr. CURTIS. The woman is totally blind now.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as I understand, the fact that she can not receive compensation without the passage of the bill is due to the statute of limitations?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; the statute of limitations ran on her. She did not file her claim sooner because she was poor and she did not know the law and hoped she might recover and not have to file a claim.

Mr. DIAL. It is just a case where the time fixed in the statute has elapsed?

Mr. CURTIS. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMSHIP "KIN-DAVE."

The bill (S. 1894) for the relief of the owners of the steamship Kin-Dave was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,500 to the owners of the steamship Kin-Dave as compensation for and in full satisfaction of all claims of such owners for any damages to said steamship Kin-Dave sustained as a result of a collision between said steamship and the U. S. S. Colonel Clayton on November 3, 1920, in the Milwaukee River, Wis.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask what was the Government's report on this bill? Did the department recommend its passage?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; the department does recommend it. The recommendation is found in the letter of the Secretary of War, in which he says:

As there were no funds available from the appropriation provided for under the act of June 30, 1921, the owners of the Kin-Dave were advised by the Chief of Finance on the 21st ultimo that payment of the claim could only be made when an appropriation for that purpose was made by Congress. As above set forth, it is the opinion of the War Department that this claim is meritorious and should be paid.

Mr. DIAL. Very well.

Mr. CAPPER. He further says:

This proposed legislation has been submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, as required by paragraph 3a of Circular No. 49 of that bureau, and the director advises that this requested legislation is not in conflict with the financial program of the President.

So that it has the approval of all the departments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if it has not been the practice to remit these cases to the Court of Claims, and let the claimants bring their suits in the usual way?

Mr. CAPPER. No; as a general thing it has not been the practice. A few of the larger claims have taken that course, but it is not the general practice. This bill has the unqualified approval of the War Department and of the Director of the Budget, and is, as a matter of fact, an exceptionally just claim. It would not seem to be necessary that it should be referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. May I say that this bill passed the Senate at the last session, but too late for the House to act upon it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the fact that the bill passed the Senate is not of any very great significance, because we pass so many bills that are not meritorious. May I say, however, that it does seem to me that it is a rather dangerous thing to legislate upon unliquidated claims the value of property for the taking of which or the injury to which claim is made against the Government. It seems to me that if the Government provides a forum into which the owner of the property may go and present his evidence, we have done all that the Government ought to do or may do validly. We have erected the Court of Claims. It has jurisdiction over certain matters, and it does seem to me that the proper thing to do would be to send this case to the Court of Claims. If the plaintiff can establish negligence on the part of the Government, or agencies of the Government, then the court may so decide and determine the amount of damages. Here it is a mere guess. We have not the evidence to show what damages were sustained. We take the ex parte statements of interested parties, and obviously any judgment which we form does not rest upon a full consideration of the case.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. May I remind the Senator that the departments have been over this claim and have found that the damages were in excess of the amount named in the bill. This amount was a matter of compromise. They found that the damages were actually greater than the amount allowed.

Mr. KING. I can understand that there might be cases of that kind; but, as a general proposition, I am sure the able Senator from Wisconsin will agree with me that when the Government provides courts, and consents to be sued by individuals upon actions ex contractu or ex delicto, the Government has done more than many governments do.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not understand that there is any such general law. They are not permitted to sue under general law.

Mr. KING. No; but, I say, when we do that.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, when we do that?

Mr. KING. Yes; and I should be perfectly willing to remit this case to the Court of Claims and let the plaintiff go there and establish the damages.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Court of Claims has no jury.

Mr. KING. All right; let us remit it to the District Court, then, or to the Court of Claims. Indeed, the fact that there is no jury is unimportant. The Senator knows that in many of the States provision is made for the ascertainment of the damage to property taken for public use by a commission, not by a jury. Some of the States do not provide juries to ascertain the damages for property taken for public purposes. That is purely a matter for each State to determine for itself; and the suggestion that there is no jury in the Court of Claims is not a meritorious objection to the feasibility of the plan which I have just suggested.

I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I suggest to the able Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the chairman of the Committee on Claims, that in my judgment it is a very dangerous thing for the committee, taking ex parte statements, to report claims for damages against the Government, when we have judicial bodies that might go into the matter very fully and get both sides.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I hope the Committee on Claims will follow the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and that they will refer these cases to the Court of Claims. Otherwise I believe we will have to fight them on the floor of the Senate, and it seems to me it would be much better if the committee would adopt the course that has been suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 970) for the relief of the De Kimpke Construction Co., of West Hoboken, N. J., was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 85) to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the claim of Elizabeth B. Eddy was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REUBEN R. HUNTER.

The bill (S. 353) for the relief of Reuben R. Hunter was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to award and pay to Reuben R. Hunter, of Deming, N. Mex., who suffered a total and permanent loss of sight in both eyes as a result of voluntarily fighting a forest fire on Government land in the vicinity of Clouderoft, Otero County, N. Mex., in May, 1904, in an effort to protect valuable standing timber and other property of the United States, compensation at the rate of $66.67 per month from September 7, 1916, for the period and in the manner provided by the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, for the payment of compensation for permanent disability of a civil employee resulting from personal injury sustained while engaged in the performance of his duty.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if the injury in this case did not occur before the compensation act was passed?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The injury occurred before the act was passed. I do not know whether the Senator from South Carolina recalls the circumstances or not.

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. This bill was discussed thoroughly in the Senate at the last session of Congress, and was passed by the Senate. Those who went into the claim were of the opinion that there could not be a more meritorious claim. Reuben R. Hunter was engaged in helping to put out a forest fire. He was not in the employ of the Government at the time, but was working for the Government gratuitously, and for the forest rangers and other people in putting out fires. He lost his eyesight.

Mr. DIAL. I think I remember the case.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand it, this injury occurred before the passage of the employees' compensation act?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It did. I originally framed the bill making an appropriation of a lump sum, but the Committee on Claims concluded that it had better put this man in the same category he would have been in if he had been in the employ of the United States and entitled to compensation under the employees' compensation act.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think that we really ought to adopt an amendment to that act so that all in Government employ who suffered injury before its passage would come under its provisions?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am inclined to think so, but this individual was not in the employ of the Government. He was working gratuitously, aiding in putting out a forest fire.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He was not really a Government employee?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He was not a Government employee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He is now to be put on the basis of a Government employee?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is the purpose of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MASSACHUSETTS STATE CLAIM.

The bill (S. 55) making an appropriation to pay the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid, at the request of the President, in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast during the Civil War, in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims and Senate Report No. 764, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. MURRAY A. COBB.

The bill (S. 1815) for the relief of Capt. Murray A. Cobb was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have some information before I consent to the consideration of this bill. I do not understand why we single out one officer to make an appropriation of this character. If he is entitled to damages, or attention, or what not, his case should come under the general law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I can explain very briefly just how this claim arises.

Captain Cobb was seized with a disease known as Pott's disease, which was diagnosed finally as tuberculosis of the thoracic vertebræ. At the time that diagnosis was made, he was in an Army hospital in France. He had been gassed in the closing part of the campaign. He was so sick his life was quite dispaired of.

The Army doctors, and a specialist who was called in, said there was just one place in Europe where Captain Cobb had a chance of recovery, and that was at a sanatorium in Switzerland. He was unconscious. He was taken there by an Army doctor and an Army nurse, and put in that sanatorium.

When the time came for the payment of the bills of the sanatorium, his wife was there with him, and she paid them, and at the same time she paid her own. They were presented for payment here, the Army authorities approved them for payment, but the Comptroller General discovered that there was a hospital in France at which there was a ward for the treatment of tubercular cases, and therefore he ruled that the claim could not be paid. That is absolutely the only reason why it was not paid as a matter of routine, like any other emergency expense incurred by one of our military force.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator state what is the amount of the claim?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The amount is $15,000. The man lay there between life and death for over three years. He was constantly visited during that three years by Army surgeons, who were sent there by General Allen from Coblenz, at regular intervals, and each time they went they reported that he could not by any means be moved. When he finally was able to be moved he was brought back to this country, and most of the time since then has been taken care of in his own house. I believe he is now in a sanitarium down in the South. The payment of this money is absolutely the obligation of our country, because the man was taken to that hospital without his own knowledge even. He had no part in the selection of the sanatorium in Switzerland.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator's recollection of the case coincides with the statement of the Secretary of War. Of course, we sympathize greatly with this ill patient, this captain. The report on the bill, on page 7, reads:

The Surgeon General, October 20, 1920, stated that he entertained no doubt but what the Medical Department of the Army could have provided adequate and competent care for Captain Cobb through its regular instrumentalities and refused to approve payment of the claim for reimbursement. The Army Medical Service during the World War included many of the most eminent practitioners, and large numbers of those were on duty in France. The Surgeon General, December 4, 1920, after consultation with a number of such practitioners, reiterated the conclusion that the Army Medical Service in France was adequate for the treatment of the claimant and that hospital ships were equipped to bring to the United States men suffering with serious diseases. On January 4, 1921, he further stated:

"Special sanatoria for the treatment of pulmonary and surgical tuberculosis were not maintained by the Army in France. Special hospitals were, however, set apart for the diagnosis of these diseases. The policy of the War Department was to return to the United States all cases of active tuberculosis as soon as the diagnosis was established. Special sanatoria were maintained in this country for the definitive treatment of such cases. At the time Captain Cobb went to Switzerland the best of the Army transports were available for the transfer of sick and wounded from France to the United States. There would have been ample opportunity to have selected from the transports coming into St. Nazaire the one which would have been best suited for his transportation. The hospital at Savenay, as indicated in the letters from Maj. W. E. Cooper and Lieut. Col. W. S. Baer, was amply equipped both in material and personnel to have properly treated this case pending his embarkation for the homeland.

"As far as this office knows, Captain Cobb is the only individual of about 2,000,000 men overseas who has not returned to the United States for definitive treatment. Advanced cases of tuberculosis and other grave diseases, as well as serious and extensive injuries incurred on the battle field, were returned to the United States. It is believed that Captain Cobb could have been transferred from Tours to the port of embarkation in France with less prejudice to his health than to Leysin, Switzerland, and that the ocean trip home could have been made in one of the capacious liners which at that time were in use as transports in comparative comfort and with very small tax on his physical strength. It is believed that the question as to whether Captain Cobb's transfer to Switzerland instead of to the United States was a life-saving measure is at the most a debatable one. On the other hand, there is scarcely any doubt that there were at that time, and are now, a number of sanatoria in France and England where adequate medical and surgical treatment could be obtained at a much smaller rate than Captain Cobb is now paying at Leysin."

As claimant has admitted that Army medical facilities were available for his treatment, and the Surgeon General of the Army has stated and reiterated that such facilities were adequate for his treatment, he is not entitled to the reimbursement claimed.

Mr. OVERMAN. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. DIAL. From a letter of the Secretary of War.

It is believed that the foregoing is a recital of all the essential facts relating to this claim. If, in addition thereto, you still desire copies of the entire file and will so inform me, I shall be pleased to have same made and sent to you. Inasmuch as the Comptroller General has determined that the claim is not payable under existing laws, it is considered that this claim is one peculiarly for the consideration of Congress. For this reason I consider it inappropriate for me to express an opinion on the merits of the matter.

Respectfully,

JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

Mr. President, I looked over this report some time ago, but some of the facts had escaped me. My recollection is that the wife of Captain Cobb insisted upon his being sent to this place without consulting the Army officers.

As I said before, I would hesitate to resist any claim brought before us in behalf of any soldier, but I can not see that this is good practice. This would establish a bad precedent. If we are going to allow such claims for the high officers of the Army, they should also be allowed for the privates. Such a claim might just as well be allowed for a private. I feel that this man's family took this course at their own risk and at their own volition. They did not go through the usual practice of having him treated by the Army officers, or having him returned to the United States. This report says it is questionable whether it was better to send him to Switzerland than to have sent him back to the United States. I can not help thinking that the claim should not be allowed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it ought to remind the Senate that it is operating under a rule which limits speakers to five minutes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the bill had better go over, I think.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Before the Senator makes his request, will he not permit me one minute to make an explanation?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The same claim was before the Senate last year and was debated at considerable length, and the Senate then passed the bill, although this same letter from the Surgeon General which the Senator from South Carolina has just read was read at that time. The Senate passed the bill because the Committee on Claims had considered that letter along with the other evidence, and I desire to read what they said at that time, which is very brief, and which I think completely answers the questions raised. The Committee on Claims of the Senate last year said:

Whether or not the Government had facilities elsewhere at which he might have been treated has no place in the consideration of the matter. It is not a question of what the Government had, but one of what the Government did, and there is no question whatever but that it took this officer, apparently fatally ill, delivered him to a hospital by its own duly authorized agents, repeatedly approved of his being kept there during the entire period for which he was treated, and now leaves him to pay the bills thereby incurred.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, my objection was based on the question how it cost $15,000 to take care of a sick soldier in Switzerland.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He was there three years.

Mr. OVERMAN. Five thousand dollars a year?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. And he had the attention of doctors sent to him from our service?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes. They sent doctors there to inspect and they approved the treatment he was getting.

Mr. OVERMAN. That did not cost him anything.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The doctors who went there went only to inspect and report, and not to treat. Furthermore, if I may add it, the amount of the bill has been audited thoroughly by the War Department and they make no objection to any item in it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I gathered from hearing read the letter from the Secretary of War, which I have not read myself, that he rather writes against the merits of the case.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No. The letter which the Senator from South Carolina read, all except the last paragraph, was a letter of the Surgeon General of the Army back in 1920.

Mr. OVERMAN. General Ireland?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. General Ireland's office, but I think it was not signed by him. The Secretary of War does not disapprove of the claim. He said that the Comptroller General's decision binds him, but he submits it without recommendation to Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. He does not recommend it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He does not recommend either way, although the claim was recommended by the Army doctors.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do they give the items of expense? I can not understand how treating a soldier in Switzerland would cost $5,000 a year.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He had to have a special nurse. He was taken there in a dying condition.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that. But even with a special nurse and a special doctor——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not think he had a special doctor, but he did have a special nurse.

Mr. OVERMAN. How would it cost that much then?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It might very easily cost $5,000 if a man had a special nurse.

Mr. OVERMAN. Special nurses must be pretty high there.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is only $100 a week for the patient's treatment and pay for the special nurse. It could very easily come to $100 a week. At any rate, it has all been audited, and the War Department said the claim is correct if Congress wants to authorize it, and I think Congress ought to do so. Here was an officer who had suffered from battle injuries. This was not a case of tuberculosis brought about by dampness but was the result of gases. He was taken in a dying condition to this hospital, without any choice on his part. The Army doctors took him there and the Army nurses cared for him until he got there.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not going to object, but I think it is a bad precedent.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It would not be a bad precedent, because the case is absolutely unique.

Mr. OVERMAN. Any officer could be sent away from the hospital which the Government provides for him, into some far distant country, and taken care of under similar circumstances.

Mr. CAPPER. The officer never would have lived if he had not been taken to that hospital. That act undoubtedly saved his life.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Murray A. Cobb, Captain in the United States Army, the sum of $15,747.63, to reimburse him for medical and hospital treatment for tuberculosis of the thoracic vertebræ (Pott's disease) with pulmonary complications, said officer having been gassed in October, 1918, while serving in the American Expeditionary Forces in France, said treatment covering the period from May, 1919, to March 25, 1922, and having been rendered at Leysin, Switzerland, where Captain Cobb was taken with the approval of the medical officers of the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, may I inquire as to the rule under which we are proceeding and as to the time limit?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is operating under a unanimous-consent agreement which continues until 8 minutes past 5. The Secretary will report the next bill on the calendar.

BRIDGE BETWEEN BROOKLYN AND QUEENS, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 3265) to authorize the construction of a bridge between the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens, in the city and State of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of New York is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Newtown Creek, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Maspeth Avenue between the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens in the city and State of New York, one end of said bridge to be in the Borough of Brooklyn and city of New York and the other in the Borough of Queens, city of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED V. PLOMTEAUX.

The bill (S. 361) for the relief of Fred V. Plomteaux was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200 to Fred V. Plomteaux, of Espanola, N. Mex., as reimbursement for the loss of two horses, one having died while in use on official business on May 12, 1916, and the other being killed on account of an injury sustained while in official use on July 8, 1914; said horses being the personal property of Fred V. Plomteaux and used by him in the performance of his duties as forest ranger.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] if the Government recommended the passage of the bill?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Government recommends the passage of the bill. The claim would have been paid if the funds had not been exhausted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM R. BRADLEY.

The bill (S. 383) for the relief of William R. Bradley, former acting collector of internal revenue for South Carolina, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and directed to credit the account of William R. Bradley, former acting collector of internal revenue for South Carolina, with the sum of $100, this amount now being charged against him for the loss of one special stamp book of the value of $100.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE M'COLGAN.

The bill (S. 1353) for the relief of Annie McColgan was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Annie McColgan, of Philadelphia, Pa., widow of Peter McColgan, who, while a civilian employee of the Ordnance Department, United States Army, in the discharge of his duties and without fault or negligence, was killed by the explosion of fuses at the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., on February 5, 1903, the sum of $5,000, being two-thirds of the sum recommended to be paid her by the board of officers appointed to investigate said explosion by the commanding officer at Frankford Arsenal on February 6, 1903.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN LAWS TO HAWAII.

The bill (H. R. 4121) to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That seems to be quite an important bill and we have only about a minute left under the unanimous-consent agreement. I suggest that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over. The unanimous-consent agreement has expired.

PAYMENTS OF RECLAMATION CHARGES.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I had hoped that we would reach Calendar No. 109, the bill (S. 1631) to authorize the deferring of payments of reclamation charges. We are very close to it. I am compelled to be absent to-morrow. The bill confers authority upon the Secretary of the Treasury to continue extending the time for payment of water charges on reclamation projects. It is in all respects similar to the law which was enacted last year. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1631.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for information.

The reading clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to ask one question. I have not had time to study the bill. Just looking over it hurriedly, it would seem that the object of the bill is to extend the time for the payment of charges on reclamation projects.

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes; where necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; or already paid.

Mr. PHIPPS. Or where the man is able to pay.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not change the status of any obligation?

Mr. PHIPPS. It does not.

Mr. McKELLAR. It merely extends the time of the obligation?

Mr. PHIPPS. That is true.

Mr. FLETCHER. What time is intended to be allowed?

Mr. PHIPPS. It is in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to alter the time of the final payment under the contract on a reclamation project.

Mr. FLETCHER. What extensions have been heretofore had?

Mr. PHIPPS. A little over one year ago we authorized the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion, where it was necessary for the relief of farmers, to permit them to have their charges extended for a year or two upon the payment of interest at 6 per cent. The present bill would cover the time that has now elapsed, and those payments are falling almost immediately due. The settlers on the projects are not all of them able to meet the obligations. The Secretary is without authority to extend the payment of the charges.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator give an idea of how much is involved?

Mr. PHIPPS. That would depend upon the ability of the settlers on the projects to meet the various charges maturing. Many of them are able to do so and will pay the charges as they mature rather than carry the obligation on which they have to pay 6 per cent interest, but where they are unable to pay, the Secretary would be under the necessity, if he enforced the law strictly, to cut off the water at this season and not permit them to have water with which to mature their crops this year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Colorado if he would have objection to an amendment like this: After the word "acts" in line 9 insert the words "and upon irrigation projects on Indian reservations"? The conditions on the Indian reservations are substantially the same as on the regular irrigation projects, and the Secretary ought to have the same discretion there that he has on the regular irrigation projects. I anticipate there will be no objection to the proposition, and I do not want to embarrass the Senator's bill, except that I would like to have an amendment of that sort.

Mr. PHIPPS. This is the first time that problem has been drawn to my attention. I have been dealing only with direct reclamation project matters. The bill, of course, has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, as shown by the report. I would have no objection, if no one else has, to the inclusion of the matter proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill covers all projects now existing "under said act."

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is, under the regular reclamation act; but these projects are not under that act. They are on Indian reservations and dealt with separately.

Mr. FLETCHER. And they are not covered by any amendatory act?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No. I offer the amendment—after the words "acts" in line 9 insert the words "and upon irrigation projects on Indian reservations."

Mr. FLETCHER. May I state that would come better, it seems to me, in line 11, after the word "act."

Mr. JONES of Washington. That would put it after the words "as may in his judgment be necessary." I thought it better to have it before those words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. After the word "acts" in line 9 insert the words "and upon irrigation projects on Indian reservations," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to defer the dates of payments of any charges, rentals, and penalties which have heretofore accrued, or may hereafter accrue, prior to the 1st day of January, 1925, under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L. p. 388), and amendatory and supplemental acts, and upon irrigation projects on Indian reservations, as may, in his judgment, be necessary to the making of rearrangements and readjustments in or concerning any irrigation project now existing under said act: Provided, however, That interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on the amount of each payment so deferred shall be collected in lieu of any penalties that may now be provided by law in cases of delinquencies in such payments: Provided further, That no payment shall be deferred in any particular case beyond the date on which the last payment of construction charges shall be required by law to be made in that case, thereby permitting the distribution of the deferred payments over the life of existing contracts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WACCAMAW RIVER BRIDGE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SMITH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bridge bill, the bill (H. R. 3681) to authorize the building of a bridge across the Waccamaw River in South Carolina. The bill has passed the House and has the recommendation of the department.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it on the calendar?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Duly reported?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; it was duly reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 3681, being a bridge bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3681) to authorize the building of a bridge across the Waccamaw River in South Carolina, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Horry, in the State of South Carolina, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Waccamaw River, in the State of South Carolina, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and at or near a point known as Star Bluff, or at or near a point known as Bellamys Landing, in said State, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN LAWS TO HAWAII.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, a few moments ago, when Order of Business 971, being House bill 4121, was reached, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], as I recall, objected to the consideration of the measure. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up the bill, and I will state in a moment my reason for doing so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely objected to the consideration of the bill at that time for the reason which I then stated. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand the Senator from Washington.

Mr. President, this is a bill which has been carefully considered by the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions. I am calling it up at the request of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who is unable to be present. The bill simply proposes to extend to Hawaii the terms of the Federal farm loan act, the act for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy, the vocational education act, and the vocational rehabilitation act. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and he does not object to it, though he has given it full consideration.

Mr. KING. Have the acts to which the Senator from Ohio has referred been extended also to Porto Rico and Alaska?

Mr. WILLIS. A bill has been introduced for that very purpose, I will say to the Senator from Utah, although it has not yet been acted upon by the committee. The bill for which I ask consideration, however, has been fully considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4121) to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the date "1916," to strike out the word "or" and to insert the words "known as"; and in the same line, after the word "act," to strike out the word "or" and to insert the word "and," so as to make the section read:

That beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, the Territory of Hawaii shall be entitled to share in appropriations now or which may hereafter become available for apportionment under the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, known as the Federal highway act, and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, upon the same terms and conditions as any of the several States, and such Territory shall be included in the calculations to determine the basis of apportionment of such funds: Provided, That in approving road projects in such Territory to receive Federal aid the Secretary of Agriculture shall give preference to such projects as will expedite the completion of an adequate system of highways for the national defense or which will connect seaports with units of the national parks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 8, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. Subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe, the provisions of the Federal farm loan act, as amended, are extended to the Territory of Hawaii. Such board shall include the Territory in a Federal land bank district, and such Federal land bank as the board may designate is authorized to establish branch banks in the Territory.

And in lieu thereof to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. The provisions of the Federal farm loan act, and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, are extended to the Territory of Hawaii. The Federal Farm Loan Board shall include the Territory in a Federal land bank district, and such Federal land bank as the board may designate is authorized to establish branch banks in the Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 2, before the word "any" to strike out the word "or" and to insert the word "and," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. The Territory of Hawaii shall be entitled to share in the benefits of the act entitled "An act for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy, and for other purposes," approved November 23, 1921, and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, upon the same terms and conditions as any of the several States. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,000, to be available for apportionment under such act to the Territory, and annually thereafter such sum as would be apportioned to the Territory if such act had originally included the Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 18, after the date "1917," to strike out the word "or" and to insert the word "and," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. The Territory of Hawaii shall be entitled to share in the benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure," approved February 23, 1917, and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, upon the same terms and conditions as any of the several States. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and annually thereafter, the sum of $30,000, to be available for allotment under such act to the Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 5, after the date "1920," to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. The Territory of Hawaii shall be entitled to share in the benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment," approved June 2, 1920, and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, upon the same terms and conditions as any of the several States. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and annually thereafter, the sum of $5,000, to be available for allotment under such act to the Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD the reports of the House and Senate committees on the bill, so that there may be a full statement of the facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The reports referred to are as follows:

HAWAIIAN BILL OF RIGHTS.

Mr. CURRY, from the Committee on the Territories, submited the following report to accompany H. R. 4121:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4121) to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii, having considered the same, report it to the House, without amendment, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of H. R. 4121 is to establish beyond all doubt the right of the Territory of Hawaii to participate in general legislation extending Federal aid to the several States of the Union that qualify under the laws providing appropriations for good roads, vocational education and rehabilitation, maternity and child hygiene, and Federal farm loans.

Section 1 provides that beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, the Territory shall share in the appropriations available for apportionment under the Federal highway act on the same terms and conditions as the several States. In the apportionment of funds inclusion of the Territory will not disturb the allotments to the various States. It is also provided that preference shall be given highway projects that are units in the national defense or will connect seaports with the national park.

While it is not required by law, the plans and specifications of the Territorial roads on the island of Oahu, and on the other islands where such roads have relation to the national defense, are submitted by the superintendent of public works to the Hawaiian Department of the United States Army, and the United States Army Engineer officer goes over the plans and signs his approval of them. The roads are made wide, heavy, and strong enough for use as military roads as well as commercial roads, and the roads are used by the Army for military purposes. This is entirely at the expense of the Territory, and the cost is very much greater than would be necessary for purely commercial purposes, the minimum thickness of the roads being 8 inches, as they must be and are made strong enough to sustain the transportation of gun tractors weighing 25 tons and more and other heavy munitions and supplies.

Section 2 extends the terms of the Federal farm loan act to the Territory of Hawaii, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

Section 3 includes the Territory of Hawaii within the benefits of the act for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy, and other purposes. Authorization is given for the appropriation of $13,000, which is approximately the amount to which the Territory would be entitled annually under the terms of the maternity act, and does not disturb the apportionments already made to the several States.

Section 4 includes the Territory of Hawaii within the benefits of the act to provide for the promotion of vocational education approved February 23, 1917, this on the same terms and conditions applying to the several States. The amount authorized to be appropriated annually is $30,000, that being the sum now allotted to each of the States participating. The apportionment to the several States is not disturbed.

Section 5 includes the Territory of Hawaii in the benefits of the act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry, approved June 2, 1920. An appropriation of $5,000 is authorized for allotment to the Territory.

The allotments available to the Territory under the different sections of this bill and assuming that the Territory will qualify by appropriating its share, will be: Under the highways act, $365,625; under the maternity act, $13,000; under the act to promote vocational education, $30,000; under the act to promote vocational rehabilitation, $5,000, or a total of $413,625. The terms of the Federal farm loan act do not call for direct appropriation.

The revenue of the Federal Treasury from the Territory of Hawaii for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, was as follows:

From customs receipts	$1,449,932.79
Income and profits tax	3,506,113.16
Miscellaneous internal revenue	642,142.89
Total	5,598,188.84
Cost of collection, including salaries, incidental expenses, and refunds	59,012.01
Net Federal income	5,539,176.83

The justification of the Territory of Hawaii for such participation is that it pays Federal taxes on the same basis as the States, receiving none of the Federal moneys into its own Territorial treasury; it is an integral part of the Union under the terms of its annexation; its right to participate in general appropriations was stated in section 5 of the organic act passed in 1900 by Congress and specifically amended in 1910 to include "laws carrying general appropriations"; but apparently through oversight or a misunderstanding the more recent Federal aid laws have been worded so as to leave a doubt as to the authority of administrative officers to include the Territory in their calculations.

This bill clarifies any remaining doubts. It grants no special advantages to Hawaii, but extends the laws named to the Territory so that Hawaii may take its proper place in Federal-aid privileges in accordance with its tax-paying responsibilities and its ability to qualify by bearing the proportional share required in each law.

The position of the Territory has been fully presented through an act of the Territorial legislature passed at the regular session of 1923. This act, called the Hawaii bill of rights, unique in legislation, reviews the historical detail of the admission of the Republic of Hawaii by annexation as an integral part of the United States, the passage by Congress in April of 1900 of the organic act creating Hawaii a Territory of the United States, including among other things section 5, which was amended by Congress in May of 1910 and now reads:

"SEC. 5. That the Constitution, and except as otherwise provided, all the laws of the United States, including laws carrying general appropriations, which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within said Territory as elsewhere in the United States."

Also the unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Hawaii v. Mankichi that Hawaii had been incorporated as an "integral part of the United States," and while calling attention to the failure of the Territory to receive recognition under certain appropriations, expresses confidence in the "good faith and intent of the Congress to do full justice to the Territory of Hawaii," voices the hope that the failure to recognize the rights of the Territory "will be speedily remedied when Congress is fully informed of the facts."

The records of the Treasury Department show that the Territory of Hawaii has been a source of income to the Federal Government and not a liability or cause for extraordinary expense. The amounts paid into the Federal Treasury by the Territory of Hawaii through the customhouse, the Internal Revenue Bureau, and other sources of Federal taxes have been equal to and during many years larger than the Federal taxes paid by many States of the Union. These are set forth in the statistical record and fully confirm the position of the people of the Territory that they have carried an equal share of the common costs of government. Indeed, this phase of the Territory's position was brought to the attention of Congress and favorably reported upon by the Committee on the Territories through Representative Edward L. Hamilton, the then chairman, and acted upon by the Congress when it voted approval of the amendment to section 5 of the organic act so as to insert the words "including laws carrying general appropriations." The committee reporting at that time, May, 1910, said:

"The first section of the bill is designed to correct the injustice of a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury * * * since Hawaii pays about $1,400,000 into the Federal Treasury each year, the justice of this amendment is apparent."

It is appropriate to call special attention to section 89 of the organic act of Hawaii, which reads:

"SEC. 89. That until other provision is made by Congress the wharves and landings constructed and controlled by the Republic of Hawaii on any seacoast, bay, roadstead, or harbor shall remain under the control of the government of the Territory of Hawaii, which shall receive and enjoy all revenue derived therefrom on condition that said property shall be kept in good condition for the use and convenience of commerce, and no tolls or charges shall be made by the government of the Territory of Hawaii for the use of any such property by the United States or by any vessel of war, tug, revenue cutter, or other boat or transport in the service of the United States."

The wharves of Hawaii have been maintained and improved by direct taxation and public-improvement loans paid by the citizens of the Territory amounting to millions of dollars, so that modern docks are at the disposal not only of commerce but the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Lighthouse Service, and all other agencies of the Federal Government requiring port facilities.

The Territory of Hawaii has steadily increased its payments into the Federal Treasury. The customs receipts alone from the Hawaii customs district since the organization of the Territory in 1900 have averaged $1,250,000 a year. And there is every reason to believe that the Territory will continue to be a source of great net income to the Federal Government.

The Territory of Hawaii has already expended since 1901 not less than $25,000,000 in the construction of main highways that are a factor in industry and commerce with the mainland of the United States, are used daily by the forces of the Army and Navy, and are vital units in the scheme of national defense involving this all-important outpost and naval and commercial key to the Pacific. The Territorial administrative departments are well organized to qualify under the requirements of the laws for Federal aid. Vocational education occupies an important place in the Americanization program of the Territorial public schools, and its health and educational departments are equipped under the laws relating to maternity and child hygiene to reduce infant mortality, especially among the families of the native Hawaiians. The extension of the Federal farm loan act will strengthen the position of the American farmer of the Territory.

The committee has received reports on this bill from the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Department of Labor. These executive and administrative branches of the Government all recommend the enactment of this bill.

The committee has held hearings at which facts were presented by Hon. W. R. Farrington, Governor of the Territory of Hawaii, and Hon. L. H. Bigelow, superintendent of public works and chairman of the board of harbor commissioners of the Territory.

The bill has been carefully considered and the committee urges prompt passage as an act of common justice to our fellow citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, who not only pay their equitable share of taxes but also maintain a progressive and thoroughly loyal Territory of the United States, and are entitled to share in the benefits of citizenship in the same measure in which they accept and meet its obligations.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. JOHNSON of California, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 4121:

The Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions report H. R. 4121, an act to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii, with the recommendation that it pass with the amendments hereinafter set forth. Certain formal amendments were agreed upon by the committee, as follows:

1. Line 9, page 1, strike out the first "or" and insert in lieu thereof the words "known as."

2. Line 9, page 1, strike out the second "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

3. Line 10, page 2, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

4. Line 10, page 3, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

5. Line 22, page 3, strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Section 2 of the act as passed by the House provides that the provisions of the Federal farm loan act should be extended to the Territory of Hawaii, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board and under such conditions as it may prescribe.

The committee did not believe any such discretion should be committed to the Federal Farm Loan Board; that the determination of the applicability of the Federal farm loan act should rest wholly with Congress. Accordingly section 2 of the act has been amended to read as follows; that is, by striking out the section as appearing in the original bill, and inserting in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 2. The provisions of the Federal farm loan act, and any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, are extended to the Territory of Hawaii. The Federal Farm Loan Board shall include the Territory in a Federal land bank district, and such Federal land bank as the board may designate is authorized to establish branch banks in the Territory."

WILLAMETTE RIVER BRIDGE, OREGON.

Mr. MCNARY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 584, being order of business 151, which is a bridge bill. The bill has passed the House of Representatives. It simply authorizes Multnomah County, Oreg., to construct and operate a bridge across the Willamette River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Multnomah, in the State of Oregon, be, and is hereby, granted authority to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Willamette River, in the city of Portland, Oreg., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, approximately 15½ miles above the mouth of said Willamette River, in the vicinity of the present site of the Sellwood Ferry, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF DATE OF INAUGURATION.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I realize that the hour is late, but I desire to address the Senate upon Senate Joint Resolution No. 18, which I introduced on December 6, 1923. The joint resolution is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary, and practically its counterpart passed the Senate in the Sixty-seventh Congress. I ask that the Secretary may read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the joint resolution will be read.

The reading clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 18) proposing an amendment to the Constitution to change the date of the inauguration of President and Vice President, assembling of presidential and vice presidential electors, and the commencement of the terms of Senators and Representatives.

Resolved, etc., That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. That the terms of the President and Vice President of the United States shall commence at noon on the third Monday in January following their election.

"SEC. 2. That the presidential and vice presidential electors, composing the Electoral College, shall assemble in the States by which they are appointed and cast their votes for President and Vice President on the second Monday in December following their appointment, and the vote so cast, duly certified, shall be filed with the President of the Senate before the first Monday in January next thereafter, and the Congress shall meet in joint session on the second Monday in the said January and open and count the same: Provided, That Congress may alter all the dates fixed in this section, in its discretion.

"SEC. 3. That the terms of Senators and Representatives shall commence at noon on the first Monday in January following their election.

"SEC. 4. That the Congress shall assemble at least once in every year and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

"SEC. 5. That this amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any President, Vice President, Senator, or Representative chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Constitution—Article II, section 1—ordains that the President and Vice President shall hold office for the term of four years, but does not provide when the term shall commence. The only recognition of the 4th of March succeeding the day of a presidential election as the day of the commencement of the terms of the President and Vice President is the provision in the twelfth amendment to the Constitution, effective September 25, 1804, that—if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them before the 4th day of March next following, then the Vice President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

This would probably be construed to be a provision that the term of the President expired on the 4th of March after a presidential election—that a vacancy then exists—in which event the then Vice President succeeded to the office.

The time when the presidential electors shall be elected and the date on which they shall meet and give their vote is, by Article II, section 1, of the Constitution, left to the discretion of Congress, with the restriction that the day of voting shall be the same throughout the United States. An act was passed February 3, 1887, requiring them to meet and give their vote on the second Monday in January next after their appointment, in such place in each State as the legislature thereof shall direct; which vote, duly certified, to be delivered to the President of the Senate before the first Wednesday in February, and be canvassed by Congress, in joint session, on the second Wednesday in February thereafter.

The Constitution, while providing that Representatives shall hold their offices for two years—Article I, section 2—and Senators for six years—Article I, section 3—does not provide when the terms shall commence.

The commencement of the terms of the first President and Vice President, and of the Senators and Representatives composing the first Congress, was fixed by a resolution of Congress adopted September 13, 1788, providing "that the first Wednesday in March next—which happened to be the 4th day of March—be the time for commencing proceedings under the Constitution."

Congress has provided—act of March 1, 1792, Revised Statutes, section 152—that the terms of the President and Vice President shall commence on the 4th day of March next succeeding the day on which the votes of the electors have been given, but there seems to be no statute enacted since the adoption of the Constitution fixing the commencement of the terms of Senators and Representatives.

The Constitution is proposed to be amended by this resolution, as follows:

The terms of the President and Vice President, by the first section, are made to commence on the third Monday in January instead of the 4th day of March succeeding the election of electors.

The second section proposes that the electors composing the Electoral College shall assemble in the various States by which they are selected and shall cast their votes on the second Monday in December following their selection, and shall certify their votes to the proper authorities before the first Monday in January next thereafter, and that Congress shall meet in joint session on the second Monday of the said January and open and count the votes.

There is also a provision in this section that Congress, in its discretion, may alter any of the dates fixed in this section.

The terms of Senators and Representatives are, by the third section, made to commence on the first Monday in January following their election.

The fourth section changes the second paragraph of section 4 of Article I of the Constitution so as to provide that Congress shall meet at least once each year, commencing on the first Monday of January instead of the first Monday in December.

Section 5 is what is usually called "a saving clause" and the language is appropriate and eligible plainly to express that this amendment is prospective and not retroactive.

Under the present law Congress does not convene in regular session until 13 months after the election of its Members. There was some reason for such a provision at the time of the formation of our Government, as it then took a long time to ascertain the results of elections and to reach the Capitol from remote parts of the country. But there is no excuse whatever now, since the most distant States of the Union are within a few days' travel of Washington.

Senators heretofore have been elected by the legislatures of the States in January, and sometimes not until February or March. But since the adoption of the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution, by which Senators are to be elected by the people, usually at the November election, it becomes opportune for Congress to convene in January following. The convening of Congress on the first Monday of December, as at present, is inopportune, as adjournment for the Christmas holidays is always taken and many Members go to their homes, returning late, which precludes any real work until January.

Some of the reasons for the adoption of the proposed amendment are:

Congress should at the earliest practicable time enact—within the limits of the Constitution—the principles of the majority of the people, as expressed in the election of each Congress. That is why the Constitution requires the election of a new Congress every two years. If it be not to reflect the sentiment of the people these frequent elections have no meaning nor purpose. Any evasion of this meaning is subversive of the fundamental principle of our Government, that the majority shall rule. No other nation has its legislative body convene so long after the expression of the people upon governmental questions.

During the campaign preceding a congressional election the great questions that divide the political parties are discussed for the purpose of determining the policy of the Government and of having the sentiments of the majority crystalized into legislation. It seems to be trifling with the rights of the people when their mandates can not be obeyed within a reasonable time. It is unfair to an administration that the legislation which it thinks so essential to the prosperity of the country should be so long deferred. It is true an extraordinary session may be called early, but such sessions are limited generally to one or two subjects, which of necessity make for enormous waste of the time of each House, waiting for the other to consider and pass the measures.

As the law is at the present time, the second regular session does not convene until after the election of the succeeding Congress. As an election often changes the political complexion of a Congress, under the present law many times we have the injustice of a Congress that has been disapproved by the people enacting laws for the people opposed to their last expression. Such a condition does violence to the rights of the majority. A Member of the House of Representatives can barely get started in his work until the time arrives for the nominating convention of his district. He has accomplished nothing, and hence has made no record upon which to go before his party or his people. This is an injustice both to the Members and to the people. The record of a Representative should be completed before he asks an indorsement of his course.

Under the present system a contest over a seat in the House of Representatives is seldom, if ever, decided until more than half the term, and in many instances until a period of 22 months of the term has expired. For all that time the occupant of the seat draws the salary, and when his opponent is seated he also draws the salary for the full term; thus the Government pays twice for the representation from that district. But that is not the worst feature of the situation; during all of that time the district is being misrepresented, at least politically, in Congress.

This amendment if adopted would eliminate the short session of Congress. It is my opinion that the short session is not a good institution. It has been the source of much criticism and ought to be abandoned. No vital governmental questions can be considered during a short session.

By Congress meeting the first Monday in January succeeding the elections, contested-election cases may be disposed of at least during the first six months of the Congress.

The President and Vice President should enter upon the performance of their duties as soon as the new Congress can count the electoral votes. The newly elected governors of the States are inducted into office as soon as the new legislatures of the States canvass the votes and declare their election. It is the old Congress which now counts the electoral votes. It is dangerous to permit the defeated party to retain control of the machinery by which such important officers are declared elected.

In the event that no candidate for President receives a majority of the electoral votes, the Constitution provides that the House of Representatives shall elect the President, each State having one vote. At the present time it is the old Congress that elects the President under such contingency, and thereby it becomes possible for a political party repudiated by the people to elect a President who was defeated at the election. Under the present provision of the Constitution, in the event the House fails to choose a President before the 4th of March, then the Vice President then in office becomes President for four years. This affords a temptation by mere delay to defeat the will of the people, and if it is ever exercised it will cause grave consequences.

It is true that January weather might be inclement for an inaugural parade, but that is a reason too insignificant to constitute an argument against a constitutional amendment which promises so much for good government. Nearly all the governors of the States are inaugurated in January. The pomp and ceremony which usually attend the coronations of monarchs are at least not necessary to a republic.

Mr. President, in my opinion, sound public policy requires that each amendment to the Constitution hereafter submitted should contain a limitation of the time within which the States may ratify the particular amendment, as was done in the case of the eighteenth amendment by the following provision:

SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Mr. President, it is startling to reflect upon the complexities that have come and that may come in the future by a continued failure to set a time limit within which a proposed amendment may be ratified.

Four different amendments proposed by the Congress are now pending before the States for their action. These amendments are as follows:

One, proposed September 15, 1789, 135 years ago, relating to enumeration and representation:

ARTICLE I. After the first enumeration required by the first article of the Constitution there shall be one Representative for every 30,000 until the number shall amount to 100, after which the proportion shall be so regulated by Congress that there shall be not less than 100 Representatives, nor less than 1 Representative for every 40,000 persons, until the number of Representatives shall amount to 200, after which the proportion shall be so regulated by Congress that there shall not be less than 200 Representatives nor more than 1 Representative for every 50,000 persons.

Another, proposed September 15, 1789, 135 years ago, relating to compensation of Members of Congress:

ART. II. No law varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives shall take effect until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.

Another, proposed May 1, 1810, 114 years ago, to prohibit citizens of the United States from accepting presents, pensions, or titles from princes or from foreign powers:

If any citizen of the United States shall accept, claim, receive, or retain any title of nobility or honor, or shall, without the consent of Congress, accept and retain any present, pension, office, or emolument of any kind whatever, from any emperor, king, prince, or foreign power, such person shall cease to be a citizen of the United States, and shall be incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under them, or either of them.

Another, proposed March 2, 1861, 63 years ago, known as the Corwin amendment, prohibiting Congress from interfering with slavery within the States:

No amendment shall be made to the Constitution which will authorize or give to Congress the power to abolish or interfere, within any State, with the domestic institutions thereof, including that of persons held to labor or service by the laws of said State. (12 Stat. 251.)

On September 15, 1789, 12 constitutional amendments were proposed by the First Congress. The requisite number of States ratified proposed articles numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 within exactly two years and three months, whilst Nos. 1 and 2, although proposed 135 years ago, have not, according to the latest available returns, received favorable action by the requisite number of States and are yet before the American people, or the States, rather, have been for 135 years, and are now subject to ratification or rejection by the States. After those two proposed amendments, to wit, Nos. 1 and 2, had been in nubilous—"in the clouds"—for 84 years, the Ohio State Senate in 1873, in response to a tide of indignation that swept over the land in opposition to the so-called "back-salary grab," resurrected proposed amendment No. 2 and passed a resolution of ratification through the State senate. No criticism can be visited upon the Ohio Legislature that attempted to ratify the amendment proposed in 1789; and if the amendment had been freshly proposed by Congress at the time of the "back-salary grab," instead of having been drawn forth from musty tomes, where it had so long lain idle, stale, and dormant, other States doubtless would have ratified it during the period from 1873 to 1881.

Thus it would seem that a period of 135 years, or 84 years, within which a State may act is altogether too long, and I will support a proposition limiting the time to 6, 8, or 10 years within which a State may act under a particular submission, so that we will not hand down to posterity a conglomerate mass of amendments floating around in a cloudy, nebulous haze, which a State here may resurrect and ratify, and a State there may galvanize and ratify.

We ought to have homogeneous, steady, united exertion, and certainly we should have contemporaneous action with reference to these various proposed amendments. Judgment on the case should be rendered within the ordinary lifetime of those interested in bringing about the change in our fundamental law. Final action should be had while the discussions and arguments are within the remembrance of those who are called upon to act.

When the 12 amendments were submitted in 1789 there were only 13 States. Vermont had not been admitted, if I remember correctly.

Question: Should three-fourths of the States then in the Union or three-fourths of those now in the Union be the test as to what shall be the number required for ratification?

The amendment proposed on May 1, 1810, was submitted to the States under peculiar auspices and was as follows:

If any citizen of the United States shall accept, claim, receive, or retain any title of nobility or honor, or shall, without the consent of Congress, accept and retain any present, pension, office, or emolument of any kind whatever, from any emperor, king, prince, or foreign power, such person shall cease to be a citizen of the United States and shall be incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under them, or either of them.

What was the reason for that proposed amendment? It is probable that the Congress which submitted the amendment believed that when officials accept presents of great value they dissolve the pearl of independence in the vinegar of obligation.

Unfortunately, the annals of Congress and contemporary newspapers do not give any of the debate upon this interesting proposition. The only light thrown upon the subject by the annals is the remark of Mr. Macon, who said "he considered the vote on this question as deciding whether or not we were to have members of the Legion of Honor in this country." What event connected with our diplomatic or political history suggested the need of such an amendment is not now apparent, but it is possible that the presence of Jerome Bonaparte in this country a few years previous, and his marriage to a Maryland lady, may have suggested this amendment.

An article in Niles's Register—volume 72, page 166—written many years after this event, refers to an amendment having been adopted to prevent any but native-born citizens from being President of the United States. This is, of course, a mistake, as the Constitution in its original form contained such a provision; but it may be possible that the circumstances referred to by the writer in Niles relate to the passage of this amendment through Congress in regard to titles of nobility. The article referred to maintains that at the time Jerome Bonaparte was in this country the Federalist Party, as a political trick, affecting to apprehend that Jerome might find his way to the Presidency through "French influence," proposed the amendment. The Federalists thought the Democrats would oppose the amendment as unnecessary, which would thus appear to the public as a further proof of their subserviency to French influence. The Democrats, to avoid this imputation, concluded to carry the amendment. "It can do no harm" was what reconciled it to all.

That amendment was submitted 114 years ago, and it was ratified within two years by Maryland, Kentucky, Ohio, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Vermont, Tennessee, Georgia, North Carolina, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire. It was rejected by two or three of the States. At one period of our national life the schoolbook histories and the public men stated that it was a part of our organic law, because in the early days of our Government the Secretary of State did not send messages to Congress announcing ratification or promulgate to the public any notice whatever as to when an amendment became a part of the Constitution. I have caused the journals, records, and files in the Department of State to be searched, and there may not be found any notice of any proclamation or promulgation of the ratification of the first 10 amendments to the Constitution. The States assumed—it was not an unwarranted or violent assumption—that when the requisite number of States had ratified an amendment it was then and there a part of our organic law.

On March 2, 1861, the following amendment, known as the Corwin amendment, to the Constitution of the United States was proposed to the States, and it read as follows:

No amendment shall be made to the Constitution which will authorize or give to Congress the power to abolish or interfere, within any State, with the domestic institutions thereof, including that of persons held to labor or service by the laws of said State. (12 Stat. 251.) Proposed by Congress March 2, 1861.

I warrant there are not 5,000 people in the United States to-day who know that such an amendment is now pending before the various States of the Union for their ratification. The amendment was ratified by the State of Ohio and by the State of Maryland through their legislatures and was attempted to be ratified by the State of Illinois in 1862 by a convention.

Thus we perceive that a system which permits of no limitation as to the time when an amendment may not be voted upon by the State is not fair to posterity nor to the present generation. It keeps historians, publishers, and annalists, as well as the general public, constantly in doubt.

Having searched closely as to whether there is in the Constitution itself any expressed or implied limitation as to when an amendment may not be adopted, I am driven irresistibly to the conclusion that an amendment to the Constitution, once having been duly proposed, although proposed as remotely as September 15, 1789, may not be recalled even by the unanimous vote of both Houses, if the Congress wished the same recalled, because the power to submit an amendment is specifically pointed out; but no power is given to recall it, and silence is negation.

I am of opinion that a State which rejects a proposed amendment may, of course, at any time thereafter ratify the same, and that a State which adopts or ratifies a proposed amendment may withdraw its ratification, provided it withdraws such ratification before the required number of States shall have ratified.

Mr. President, I have here some copious data, being largely historical, with reference to the dates when various amendments were adopted, which I prepared some time ago. I ask that they may be inserted in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix A.)

Mr. ASHURST. I also have here a report of the committee of the American Bar Association to the American Bar Association, urging this proposed amendment which I introduced last year. This committee report is signed by William L. Putnam, chairman, William C. Kinkead, Levi Cooke, and Aubrey L. Brooks. I ask that their report be included as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Appendix B.)

APPENDIX A.

DISCUSSION OF CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS INVOLVED.

(Jameson.)

SEC. 585. VI. Two further questions may be considered: (1) When Congress has submitted amendments to the States, can it recall them? and (2) How long are amendments thus submitted open to adoption or rejection by the States?

1. The first question must, we think, receive a negative answer. When Congress has submitted amendments at the time deemed by itself or its constituents desirable, to concede to that body the power of afterwards recalling them would be to give to it that of definitely rejecting such amendments, since the recall would withdraw them from the consideration of the States and thus render their adoption impossible. However this may be, it is enough to justify a negative answer to say that the Federal Constitution, from which alone Congress derives its power to submit amendments to the States, does not provide for recalling them upon any event or condition and that the power to recall can not be considered as involved in that to submit as necessary to its complete execution. It therefore can not exist.

2. The same consideration will perhaps furnish the answer to the second question. The Constitution gives to Congress the power to submit amendments to the States; that is, either to the State legislatures or to conventions called by the States for this purpose, but there it stops. No power is granted to prescribe conditions as to the time within which the amendments are to be ratified, and hence to do so would be to transcend the power given. The practice of Congress in such cases has always conformed to the implied limitations of the Constitution. It has contented itself with proposing amendments to become valid as parts of the Constitution according to the terms of that instrument. It is therefore possible, though hardly probable, that an amendment once proposed is always open to adoption by the nonacting or nonratifying States.

The better opinion would seem to be that an alteration of the Constitution proposed to-day has relation to the sentiment and the felt needs of to-day, and that, if not ratified early, while that sentiment may fairly be supposed to exist, it ought to be regarded as waived and not again to be voted upon unless a second time proposed by Congress.

SEC. 586. In discussing the question of the right of the States to vote upon proposed amendments at any time after the date of their proposal it is proper to look into the consequences of such a right. If they have the right, there are now floating about us as it were in nubilous several amendments to the Constitution proposed by Congress which have received the ratification of one or more States but not of enough to make them valid as parts of that instrument. Congress could not withdraw them, and there is in force in regard to them no recognized statute of limitations. Unless abrogated by amendments subsequently adopted they are, on the hypothesis stated, still before the American people to be adopted or rejected.

In 1873 the Senate of Ohio, acting upon the theory that once proposed an amendment to the Constitution is always open to ratification, adopted a joint resolution ratifying the second of the 12 amendments submitted to the States by Congress in 1789, but then rejected, providing that "no law varying the compensation of Members of Congress shall take effect until an election for Representatives shall have intervened." This resolution, prepared by Madison, was an excellent one; but suppose it had been unjust, proposed, perhaps, in the interest of a section or of a party, and, failing at the time to receive the requisite majority, it had subsequently by a concerted rally of those interested in its adoption been carried without discussion or a clear expression of the existing public will; is that a true construction of the Constitution which may be followed by so dangerous consequences? And supposing the right referred to exists, by what majority shall the resurrected amendments be adopted? If proposed in 1789, when the States numbered but 13 and when a majority of 10 States might have ratified the amendment, how many would have been requisite in 1873, when there were 38 States which would have been called upon to vote? If the answer should be that 29 States must have voted to ratify, since that number was three-fourths of all the States in 1873, however reasonable such an answer might seem, it would be founded upon no statute or custom of the country, and therefore different opinions as to its reasonableness might well be entertained. Hence the danger of confusion or conflict. We discuss this question here merely to emphasize the dangers involved in the Constitution as it stands and to show the necessity of legislation to make certain those points upon which doubts may arise in the employment of the constitutional process for amending the fundamental law of the Nation. A constitutional statute of limitation prescribing the time within which proposed amendments shall be adopted or be treated as waived ought by all means to be passed. (Jameson, John A., A Treatise on Constitutional Conventions (4th ed., 1887), pp. 634–636.)

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES PROPOSED BY CONGRESS BUT NOT RATIFIED BY THREE-FOURTHS OF THE STATES, COLLATED BY SENATOR ASHURST.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.

After the first enumeration required by the first article of the Constitution, there shall be 1 Representative for every 30,000 until the number shall amount to 100; after which the proportion shall be so regulated by Congress that there shall be not less than 100 Representatives nor less than 1 Representative for every 40,000 persons, until the number of Representatives shall amount to 200; after which the proportion shall be so regulated by Congress that there shall not be less than 200 Representatives nor more than 1 Representative for every 50,000 persons. (1 Stat. 97.) (Submitted at the same time as those which became part of the Constitution as amendments 1 to 10.)

Proposed by Congress September 15, 1789.

Ratified by the following States:

New Jersey, November 20, 1789. (Senate Journal, p. 199, 1st Cong., 2d sess.)

Maryland, December 19, 1789. (Senate Journal, p. 106, 1st Cong., 2d sess.)

North Carolina, December 22, 1789. (Senate Journal, p. 103, 1st Cong., 2d sess.)

South Carolina, January 19, 1790. (Senate Journal, p. 50, 1st Cong., 2d sess.)

AMENDMENT PROHIBITING ABOLISHING OR INTERFERING WITH SLAVERY (CORWIN AMENDMENT).

No amendment shall be made to the Constitution which will authorize or give to Congress the power to abolish or interfere, within any State, with the domestic institutions thereof, including that of persons held to labor or service by the laws of said State. (12 Stat. 251.)

Proposed by Congress March 2, 1861.

Ratified by the following States:

Ohio, March 13, 1861.

Maryland, January 10, 1862.

Illinois (convention), February 14, 1862.

ATTEMPTS TO REGULATE RATIFICATION.

On May 23, 1866, when the resolution proposing the fourteenth amendment was under consideration, Mr. Buckalew, of Pennsylvania, submitted an amendment to add to the resolution the following additional section:

"SEC. 6. This amendment shall be passed upon in each State by the legislature thereof which shall be chosen, or the members of the most popular branch of which shall be chosen, next after the submission of the amendment, and at its first session; and no acceptance or rejection shall be reconsidered or again brought in question at any subsequent session; nor shall any acceptance of the amendment be valid if made after three years from the passage of this resolution." (Cong. Globe, vol. 36, p. 2771.)

When the fifteenth amendment was before the Senate on February 3, 1869, Mr. Buckalew, of Pennsylvania, proposed to add to the resolution submitting it to the States the words:

"That the foregoing amendment shall be submitted to the legislatures of the several States, the most numerous branch of which shall be chosen next after the passage of this resolution." (Cong. Globe, vol. 40, p. 828.)

His speech in support of this proposal on February 5, 1869, is reported in the Congressional Globe, volume 40, pages 912 and 913. On February 9, 1869, this amendment was rejected—yeas 13, nays 43.

On February 17, 1869, an amendment practically identical with the above was offered by Mr. Hendricks, of Indiana, and the constitutionality of such a limitation was discussed by Senators Morton, Bayard, Buckalew, Dixon, and Yates. The question being taken, the amendment was rejected—yeas 12, nays 40. (Cong. Globe, vol. 40, pp. 1311–1314.)

On January 30, 1882, Mr. Berry, of California, introduced a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 116, 47th Cong., 1st sess.) proposing an amendment to the Constitution to regulate ratification, as follows:

"SECTION. 1. The legislature of a State shall not vote upon a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States except at a regular session held following an election of the members of the most numerous branch of the State legislature, which election must take place subsequent to the time of submission by Congress or a convention of the proposed amendment.

"SEC. 2. This amendment shall not take effect until the 5th of March, 1885."

On March 17, 1869, Mr. Morton, of Indiana, introduced in the Senate, and on March 29, 1869, Mr. Shanks, of Indiana, introduced in the House, identical joint resolutions (S. J. Res. 32 and H. J. Res. 57, 41st Cong., 1st sess.), which read as follows:

"Be it resolved, etc., That on the sixth legislative day of a regular session, or of a legally called special session, of any State legislature, each house of said legislature, at the hour of 12 meridian, shall proceed to the consideration of any amendment of the Constitution of the United States that may have been submitted by the Congress of the United States to the legislatures of the several States for ratification, according to the provisions of the fifth article of the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That such amendment may not have been acted upon at any preceding session of said legislature. And if, upon the consideration of such amendment, it shall receive the votes of a majority of the members elected to each house of said legislature, it shall be held to be duly ratified by such legislature. And if final action is not taken upon the first day, then the house shall meet the next day at the same hour and so continue to meet from day to day (Sundays excepted) until final action is taken upon such amendment. Nor shall the action of either house of said legislature upon such amendment be hindered or prevented by the resignation or withdrawal, or the refusal to qualify, of a minority of either or of both houses of said legislature.

"SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That if such amendment or amendments shall be ratified according to the provisions of the preceding section, the same shall be duly certified by the officers of each house and shall be transmitted by the governor of the State to the President of the United States."

APPENDIX B.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CHANGE OF DATE OF PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURATION.

To the American Bar Association:

Our efforts to secure the needed change in the Constitution have led to interesting and dramatic results. As stated in our report for 1921 Senator ASHURST, of Arizona, introduced on April 12, 1921, in the first session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 8) which followed so nearly the lines of the resolution passed by this association that the committee felt justified in supporting it. Leaving out the preamble, that resolution passed at our meeting in Cincinnati in 1921 is as follows:

"Now therefore be it resolved, That it is desirable:

"1. That Congress should come into being immediately upon its election, and that the ensuing session of Congress should be a session of the new Congress and not the old one.

"2. That the electors should meet at the earliest practicable date to count the votes for President and Vice President.

"3. That the Congress should meet at the earliest practicable date to count the votes for President and Vice President.

"4. That the President and Vice President should be inaugurated thereafter without any unnecessary lapse of time."

Senator ASHURST'S resolution was referred by the Senate to the Committee on the Judiciary, and by that committee to a subcommittee of which Senator CUMMINS was chairman, but owing partly to Senator CUMMINS'S ill health and partly to the press of business no action was taken on the resolution for a long time.

Finally, through the efforts of Mr. Levi Cooke, of Washington, a member of your committee, the Senate subcommittee ordered a hearing on the resolution to be held on the morning of December 5, 1922. Mr. Cooke and the chairman of your committee were present and presented the resolution of the bar association and made oral arguments in support of it. They also filed a written argument, a copy of which is hereto attached.

Meanwhile, as some of you may recall from the debates in the Senate, Senator CARAWAY had introduced a resolution that no Members of the House or Senate who had been defeated at the November election should be allowed to vote at the short session of Congress. Senator CARAWAY requested that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, was chairman. This reference was agreed to by the Senate amidst laughter of the Senate. None the less, the resolution, under the rules of the Senate, was properly before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and, concurrently with the consideration of the matter in the Senate Judiciary Committee, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry considered, and on the day of the hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee reported to the Senate a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution in line with Senator ASHURST'S previously introduced proposal.

The members of your committee had the advantage of consultation with Senator NORRIS and other Senators concerned with the proposal. The resolution passed by the Senate was known as the Norris resolution.

The hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee was referred to throughout the debate in the Senate on the passage of the Norris resolution, and it was generally understood in the Senate that the Senate Judiciary Committee was favorable to the proposal.

We are informed that the resolution would have commanded the necessary majority in the House and would have passed the House in the closing days of the session but for the illness of Speaker GILLETT.

The Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress considered the Norris resolution and, with some slight changes therein, reported the resolution favorably to the House of Representatives. (A copy of the amended resolution is hereto attached.) Representative WILLIAM E. ANDREWS, of Nebraska, chairman of the House committee, was unable in the closing days of the session to secure recognition from the Acting Speaker. It was believed, however, that the temper of the House was such that the resolution would have passed readily had it come to the voting stage in the House of Representatives.

While the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate never made a report, yet the members present at our hearing, Senator CUMMINS and Senator BRANDEGEE, expressed themselves decidedly in favor of our recommendation, and so did Senator PEPPER, of Pennsylvania, who attended the hearing. We have, therefore, the support of some of the most conservative Members of the Senate most strongly interested in maintaining the substantial integrity of our Constitution.

The development of consideration before the Senate Judiciary Committee in the Senate debate and in your committee's consultation with individual Senators and Representatives indicates that there is a very strong feeling amongst public men that the reform should be dealt with promptly.

Senators and Representatives of all shades of opinion on other public questions seem to be agreed that the present system of holding sessions of Congress and inaugurating the President of the United States is an anachronism, the preservation of which in practice tends to interrupt the proper dispatch of the public business in Congress. It is generally felt that two regular sessions of each Congress of equal dignity and ability to dispatch the public business, without arbitrary termination of each second session in the midst of the very period during which legislation should be going forward without a complete stop as of March 4, will cure many of the difficulties and some of the abuses for which the Congress itself has been subjected to criticism, fairly attributable not so much to the Congress itself as to the calendar system under which it is compelled to operate. The so-called short session of Congress has afforded opportunity for filibustering and resort to compulsions affecting legislation which are well-nigh inescapable so long as the short session of Congress terminates arbitrarily in a period of three months, during which the holiday recess falls. Experienced legislators in Congress feel that with two sessions of equal dignity responsibility will be more clearly felt in all quarters, properly to attend to the public business, and that the ultimate effect will be not only to eradicate an illogical present system, but to afford both additional fair deliberation on all questions, coupled with economy of congressional operation, and, over a period of years, more vacation from congressional duties for Senators and Representatives, during which periods of vacation Senators and Representatives can have time for rest and commingling with their constituencies.

Indeed, as appears from the brief historical statement attached to this report, the resolution is really a return to and a carrying out of the intention of the framers of the Constitution, who never meant that there should be a long delay between the election and the assembling of Congress, but on the contrary intended that the Congress elected in the autumn should assemble early in December.

The large majority by which the resolution was carried in the Senate and the strong indications that the feeling of the House was substantially the same leads to the hope that the resolution will be passed early in the next session and will then be referred to the State legislatures for action.

In view of this we hope that this association will take such steps as may be best calculated to further favorable action by the various States, and we would suggest the appointment of a large committee, consisting of one Member from each State, to take such action as may be helpful to secure the passage of a constitutional amendment on the lines of Senator NORRIS'S resolution.

WILLIAM L. PUTNAM, Chairman.

LEVI COOKE,
AUBREY L. BROOKS.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 29, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 28, 1924.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

How rich Thy bounties, our Father in heaven! Thy divine care, how wonderful! Grant that we with true and faithful hearts may show forth our gratitude. May Thy marvelous gifts to us inspire all our powers to bless and praise Thee. Let us live on in patient trust, accepting our duties as Thy appointments, and never shrinking from the responsibilities to which we are called. Help us at all times to serve our fellows with the freest and the best impulses of our beings. Amid all the demands that press us help us to serve Thee best of all. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AIR SERVICE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present, for printing under the rule, a report from the Committee on Rules on a privileged resolution (H. Res. 192) for the appointment of a special committee composed of seven Members of the House, appointed by the Speaker, to inquire into the operations of the United States Army Air Service, United States Naval Bureau of Aeronautics, the United States Mail Air Service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the immigration question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the immigration question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, the immigration question is important, not alone to America of to-day but of even more importance to America of to-morrow. It is important not alone to the present generation but of even greater importance to the generation yet unborn.

For a hundred years immigrants in an ever-increasing stream have poured into America. The numbers by 10-year periods are as follows:

1821–30	143,439
1831–40	599,125
1841–50	1,653,275
1851–60	2,571,936
1861–70	2,377,279
1871–80	2,812,191
1881–90	5,246,613
1891–1900	3,687,564
1901–10	8,795,386
1911–20	5,735,811
Total	33,621,719

For the 10 years just preceding the World War, this stream had increased to an average of over 1,000,000 immigrants per year.

On account of European conditions, resulting from the war, the millions of immigrants that will annually seek our shores, if not restricted by law, will only be limited by their inability to obtain passage.

With America threatened with this hoard of millions, let us take stock of our present conditions and our possible future conditions.

In 1920, the population of the United States was 105,710,620. Of this population, the number of foreign-born was 13,920,692.

The fact that 13 per cent of our population is foreign-born may be grounds for apprehension, but the fact that these fourteen millions of foreign-born are not equally distributed throughout the United States, but are massed in unwieldy groups in certain localities, is a matter for grave apprehension.

Some striking examples of this local massing may be seen by noticing the per cent of foreign-born in some of our States in 1920.

	Per cent.
Rhode Island	29
Massachusetts	28.3
Connecticut	27.4
New York	27.2
Arizona	24.1
New Jersey	23.5
California	22.1
Nevada	20.7
New Hampshire	20.6
Minnesota	20.4
North Dakota	20.4

Even more noticeable examples of this local massing may be found in our cities.

In 1920 there were 68 cities in the United States having a population of over 100,000.

Practically one-half of these cities had a foreign-born population of over 20 per cent, running as high as 42.1 per cent in New Bedford, Mass. Some of our largest cities showed the following per cent of foreign born:

	Per cent.
New York	36.1
Boston	32.4
Chicago	29.9
Cleveland	30.1
Detroit	29.8
Providence	29.4
San Francisco	29.4

It is also entirely proper for us to inquire into the source of this stream of immigration, from what countries and in what proportion does it come, what has been its environment, what are the political, social, and moral standards of the countries from which these millions of aliens come? From the following table we may ascertain the countries from which came approximately 17,000,000 of immigrants during the last 24 years, the number that have departed during the last 16 years, and the number remaining June 30, 1923:

Countries.	Immigrant aliens admitted, 1899–1923.	Immigrant aliens departed, 1908–1923.	Immigrant aliens remaining June 30, 1923.

Grand total	16,929,187	3,498,185	13,431,002

There is much public discussion as to the desirability of immigration from southern and eastern Europe as compared with that from northern and western Europe.

It is, therefore, interesting to analyze our immigration for the past 24 years from this viewpoint.

NORTHERN AND WESTERN EUROPE.

While it can not be said that every foreign-born man that has become a naturalized American citizen has become Americanized in the broad and full meaning of the word, still the fact that he has taken this step is evidence on his part of his desire to become a part of America.

For the purpose of throwing light on the desire of the various foreign groups to sever their Old World connections and become a part of America I present a table showing the per cent of foreign-born white males 21 years of age and over residing in the United States who had become naturalized as shown by the census of 1920:

	Per cent.
Germany	73.3
Denmark	69.6
Sweden	69.5
United Kingdom	68.5
Norway	67.3
France	60.1
The Netherlands	58.1

I am of the opinion that the desirability of an immigrant does not depend so much on his racial blood as it depends upon the moral standards of the country from which he comes, coupled with the opportunities he will have to mingle with Americans, learn our language, and obtain a knowledge of the purposes of American institutions. His Americanization is seriously retarded by his becoming a part of a great unassimilated mass of his countrymen.

It is better for the individual immigrant, as it is better for America, that our immigration be composed of many different nationalities, rather than have it composed of one nationality.

I believe the per cent of aliens in any locality may rise to such a point that it becomes a certain and definite menace to America.

In some localities to-day the congestion of foreign-born, unable to speak the English language, together with their lack of understanding of American customs and purposes, has become a matter of such grave concern that the State is appropriating money for special schools for such foreign born. There is now pending before this Congress a measure to appropriate seven and one-half million dollars for the special education of the foreign born in our country.

The fact that the immigration problem is to-day receiving the serious consideration of millions of our thinking men and women is conclusive proof that its correct solution is of vital importance to our future welfare.

On the 30th day of June, 1924, the restrictive feature of our present immigration law expires by limitation, and we are now called upon to decide whether the millions of aliens desiring to enter our country shall come without hindrance or shall their coming be restricted; and if restricted, to what degree?

The economic, social, and moral standards of the United States surpass the standards of every other country.

The present-day standards of America can not be maintained except by the determined and honest efforts of American citizens.

America must Americanize the alien or the alien will alienize America.

There are able men, some of whom appeared before the committee, who profess to be unable to distinguish any difference of interests between the citizenship of the United States and the millions of aliens who desire to come to our country. Such men profess to believe that whatever is best for these alien millions is best for America.

I confess that I am unable to agree with these gentlemen, and prefer to meet this question from the standpoint of America, not America first, but America first, last, and all the time.

I have, therefore, applied the yardstick of American interests to the consideration of this question, and for the use of such yardstick I do not offer any apology or explanation to any foreign country or alien group.

The principal opposition to the restriction of immigration comes from foreign governments and their native sons, both naturalized and unnaturalized, residing in the United States.

Within the last few days the American Congress has witnessed the formal protests of three European Governments against the Johnson immigration bill.

The individual Members of Congress have been interviewed by foreign-born men, who have sworn allegiance to the American Government, and who profess to be loyal to American principles, but who protest vehemently against the restriction of immigration from their native country and say they will be offended if their fellow countrymen are not permitted to come.

Whenever the members of a large alien group in this country still retain their love for their native country to such an extent as to cause them to act in unison in behalf of their native government when an issue has been raised between that government and the Government of the United States, that fact alone is conclusive proof that immigration from that country should be suspended until such time as that particular group shall have become Americanized, not naturalized alone, but Americanized in word, thought, and purpose.

How thoroughly any alien group has become assimilated may be judged by the inverse ratio that such group protests against the restriction of immigration from their native country.

It has been pointed out on this floor that a half century ago there was a wave of prejudice against a particular alien group that led to riots and bloodshed. That wave has passed, because that particular alien group is no longer an unwieldy mass of unassimilated aliens living, thinking, and acting as a group, but they have become assimilated and are to-day a part and parcel of America.

RACE PREJUDICE.

There is no race prejudice in the United States against any particular man because of his racial blood. What may at times appear to be a racial prejudice is only the manifestation of the fear on the part of American citizens that American institutions and American ideals are endangered by the presence of a great unassimilated mass of any alien group.

This manifestation of fear has, from time to time, appeared in the past, as it will, no doubt, appear in the future, whenever the citizens of any foreign country come to our country in such numbers that they are unable to be assimilated.

It may be urged that America owes a duty to humanity that requires us to admit without restriction the unfortunate people of all the world. However uncertain the extent of that duty may be, there is no uncertainty as to the extent of the duty we owe to America.

There can be no question but what we owe a duty to the foreign born that are now in our country and this duty should be discharged before we permit more aliens to enter.

OUR DUTY TO AMERICA.

It is our duty to allay and prevent race prejudice and to offer every opportunity and facility for our foreign born to fall into step with America. No greater service can be performed for our foreign born than to restrict immigration for the next few years, and thus give those that are now here a better opportunity to become assimilated.

If we can not select the type of our immigrants without discriminating against certain countries and if we do not wish to so discriminate, then it is our duty to suspend immigration until all alien groups have become assimilated to such a degree that a future American Congress can approach the consideration of this question unharassed or uninfluenced by alien groups.

While the temporary suspension of immigration is in force, provision should be made for the deportation of those aliens who, by violation of the laws of our land, have demonstrated their unwillingness to embrace the opportunities of good citizenship we have extended to them.

By taking these two steps we are providing better advantages for the law-abiding and liberty-loving aliens who are now here, and at the same time we are protecting the future of America.

This is the opportunity for Congress to preserve America and her uplifting influences, not only for the benefit of America but for the benefit of the entire world.

REVENUE ACT OF 1924.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 372, nays 0, not voting 59, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and seventy-two Members are present—a quorum. The motion is agreed to. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6715) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill, H. R. 6715, to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote on the automobile amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that a man in the gallery has just displayed a banner with some printing upon it. This makes twice that the same individual has violated the rules of this House. I ask that he be removed and prevented from doing that again.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Doorkeeper will remove the individual indicated from the gallery.

Mr. DENISON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. DENISON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENISON. Will the Chair advise us what is before the House now?

The CHAIRMAN. The matter before the House now is an amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will now be reported.

Mr. DENISON. After that is disposed of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is still open to amendment, is it not—not for debate, but open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is open to amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVEY:

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will it be in order at this time to request that the original amendment as well as the amendment to the amendment be read for the benefit of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done. The original amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] with the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] added to it will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 166, line 15, at the end of the line add the following: "Provided, That this paragraph (1) shall not apply to automobile trucks and automobile wagons (nor to the chassis thereof if sold separately) if the selling price of such chassis of such trucks or wagons is not in excess of $1,000."

Also, page 166, line 23, strike out the figure "5" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "2½."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVEY: Strike out lines 8, 9, and 10 of the McLaughlin amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Strike out lines 20 to 24, inclusive, page 166."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to get the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] for just a moment if I may. The gentleman from Iowa recalls the circumstances under which debate was closed upon this amendment in Committee of the Whole on Tuesday evening, and will recall that a considerable part of the time which should have been devoted to debate was taken up by teller votes, so that two or three gentlemen were deprived of speaking who seemed to have that right or ought to be permitted to speak. I am wondering whether the gentleman from Iowa will not make a request that there may be as much as 10 or 12 minutes' debate on this amendment now.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not feel inclined to do so. The gentlemen who were getting teller votes and delaying the proceedings knew full well what the effect would be, and I do not consider I am responsible for it at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa is not responsible for it, nor are we responsible for it on this side. The teller vote which was had on this side was had after debate had been exhausted or after the hour had been reached; but it was agreed to close the debate at 6 o'clock, and at about 10 minutes to 6 the House got into great confusion and there was practically no debate between 10 minutes of 6 and 6 o'clock. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] desired to debate the amendment and it had been agreed that he should have an opportunity to do so, and I know the gentleman from Iowa was willing for him to have that opportunity.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] having five minutes provided the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] also has five minutes, because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] made some remarks about Mr. MCLAUGHLIN which I do not think were entirely proper.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think there would be any objection to that. I ask unanimous consent for 10 additional minutes' debate on this amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CLANCY, to have five minutes and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, to have five minutes?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suppose that would be the understanding.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is that a part of the gentleman's request?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That would be the understanding, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the proposition, and also state to the committee that it will facilitate the reading of this bill and enable us to get along faster if the committee will help the Chair in maintaining order.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks unanimous consent that there be 10 minutes' additional debate on subsections 1, 2, and 3, one-half of which time is to be allotted to the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CLANCY, and one-half to the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota objects.

The question is now on——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] to the amendment offered by me reference is made to my amendment by the number of the lines. My amendment has no numbered lines, the lines having no numbers.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This is a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is stating a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And it has seemed to me that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio ought to be in different form, because when we come to make up the record on this proposition there will be nothing to indicate at what point the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is to be put in.

Mr. BRITTEN. And, Mr. Chairman, a further question. There is nothing in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to indicate just what he is striking out except the number of the lines, which means nothing.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is what I was referring to. It would strike out the lines, and it gives the number of the lines in my amendment, while the lines in my amendment are not numbered at all. So no one knows with any accuracy at all what the gentleman would strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment is somewhat informal, but the Chair thinks, after conferring with the Clerk, that it is probably intelligible. The part of the McLaughlin amendment which is sought to be stricken out is the following language:

Also, page 166, line 23, strike out the figure "5" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "2½."

That seems to be the part of the McLaughlin amendment which is to be stricken out by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment as it would read in the event it were adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan as it would be if amended by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As interpreted by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and the committee will give attention to the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN: Page 166, line 15, at the end of line 15, add the following: "Provided, That this paragraph (1) shall not apply to automobile trucks and automobile wagons (nor to the chassis thereof if sold separately) if the selling price of such chassis of such trucks or wagons is not in excess of $1,000." Strike out lines 20 to 24, inclusive, on page 166.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. My understanding is that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio strikes out my amendment, while, as the Clerk reads it, it would strike out the lines of the bill. My amendment to the third paragraph is simply the suggestion of a change of the figure "5" to the figures "2½."

Mr. McKEOWN. Regular order, Mr. Chairman. The regular order is to vote on the amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the gentleman strikes out my amendment altogether, that would leave the paragraph as it is. I have undertaken to reduce the tax now levied at the rate of 5 per cent to 2½ per cent. As I understood the gentleman's amendment, it would strike that out and leave the tax as it is now, which would be at the rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I beg to withdraw my request. I do not want to substitute the interpretation of the Chair and the reading of the Clerk for the amendment. We do not know what it is.

Mr. BURTNESS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURTNESS. The McLaughlin amendment amends two separate subdivisions—that is, subdivision 1 and subdivision 3—but it is offered as one amendment. It deals with two separate subjects. My inquiry is whether we can ask for a division of the question, so as to vote upon each proposition separately; that is, first to vote upon the proposition pertaining to subdivision 1 and then vote upon the proposition pertaining to subdivision 3.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, that can not be done now. It is too late.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that I have asked for the regular order twice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is stating a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes, sir; and making a speech under the guise of a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the matter would be divisible.

Mr. BURTNESS. I therefore ask that it be divided.

The CHAIRMAN. But the division would not come until the decision on the Davey amendment.

Mr. BURTNESS. I understand that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] as applicable to the first subsection of the paragraph.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, can we have that part of the amendment read, please?

Mr. DYER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], as applicable to subsection 1.

The question was taken, and the amendment to subsection 1 was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the amendment to subsection 3. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan as applicable to subsection 3.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment made necessary by the adoption of the McLaughlin amendment in order to prevent the exemption of parts of chassis costing more than $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 166, line 23, strike out the words "enumerated in" and insert the words "taxed under."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STENGLE and Mr. HAYDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAYDEN: Amend, on page 166, after line 24, by inserting as a new paragraph the following:

"That beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, all moneys received from excise taxes collected under paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of section 600 of Title VI of this act shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved and set aside as a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the 'Federal aid highway fund,' to be subject to appropriation from time to time by Congress in carrying out the provisions of the Federal highway act approved November 9, 1921 (42 Stat. L. p. 212), and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment, in effect, makes an appropriation. It is entirely foreign to the bill and there are about 100 other reasons why it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arizona wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have examined the parliamentary authorities and the gentleman from Iowa is correct. I concede the point of order and will present this proposal to the proper legislative committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STENGLE: Page 167, line 20, after the word "machine" insert a new paragraph, to read:

"9. Chewing gum or substitutes therefor, 3 per cent."

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that this amendment needs much discussion on my part. It is simply restoring a subject matter that was in the bill in 1918, and everybody knows what chewing gum is and I am ready for a vote. [Cries of "Vote! "Vote!"]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling that a vote should be taken upon this important amendment in this perfunctory way. I want to explain the effect of the amendment which is offered. If it had not been offered by the gentleman from New York who has offered it, I was going to offer it myself. The chewing-gum tax went into the law in 1918 and was repealed by the act of 1921. Chewing gum is a revenue proposition, one of the best we have. It is as important perhaps as cigarettes and is a tax that ought to be restored. I want to explain to the committee what it accomplished while it was in effect.

In 1920 under this 3 per cent chewing-gum tax we collected $1,124,943.74. In 1921 under this tax we collected $1,332,267.44. Of course, we collected this tax for only a part of the year 1922, and the collections fell off during that year. We may assume that 1921 was a fair test so far as revenue goes for this particular tax. The chewing-gum industry in the United States is now controlled by two or three different manufacturing companies, but the Wrigley Co. manufactures most of the chewing gum in the United States. Here is what Mr. Wrigley claims for his two factories. He has two factories, one in Chicago and one in Brooklyn. This is the statement he recently issued himself. His chewing gum from these two factories is distributed in the United States through 900,000 retailers, and his plants have a daily capacity of 7,000,000 packages of gum. In other words, these two plants under the control of Mr. Wrigley turn out a product which sells to the ultimate consumers of the United States for $350,000 every day in the year. His are not the only factories.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. What would be the approximate expense of collecting this tax and would it be collected by a stamp tax?

Mr. RAINEY. It is not collected by a stamp tax; it is a tax that collects itself; it is a manufacturer's tax collected at the source. In this statement he issued not long ago he stated that over $40,000,000 had been expended by him in advertising his gum. He commenced the manufacture of gum in 1891. While the tax was in force from 1918 to and including the few months in 1922 we collected from the chewing-gum tax over $4,000,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I just overheard a question on the other side of the House as to whether or not this was an indirect attempt to levy a tax upon campaign contributions; will the gentleman enlighten us as to that? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAINEY. I think this tax will still leave Mr. Wrigley with enough money to continue his campaign contributions if he feels like doing it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If too much is taken, could he not get a refund by employing some man representing the Treasury Department? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAINEY. I am presenting this as a serious proposition; and while I appreciate these pleasantries, I do not want to be sidetracked, because I want to get some money out of this chewing-gum proposition, for we need some more money in this bill. Now, during the period of time the chewing-gum tax was in effect Mr. Wrigley probably paid the most of the tax, but during that period of time he built the Wrigley office building in Chicago out of his profits while paying the tax, and the Wrigley office building, he says, cost $3,900,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Wrigley then built another office building, which is nearly completed and which will cost $4,500,000. In other words, during the time the tax was in effect he has added office buildings to his holdings costing over $8,000,000.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. How does the gentleman from Illinois regard a tax on Coca-Cola? That is about as thrifty as chewing gum.

Mr. RAINEY. We will take care of Coca-Cola later on. I do not want to mix up Coca-Cola with chewing gum. I would like to see Coca-Cola taxed and have been in favor of it.

Mr. LOZIER. In enumerating Mr. Wrigley's holdings, has the gentleman in mind the acquisition of the island of Catalina?

Mr. RAINEY. I am coming to that. During this time, when he built these office buildings costing over $8,000,000, he acquired Catalina Island, off California, and the steamboat line which plies between the island and the mainland. During that period of time he has bought two baseball clubs on the Pacific coast, and he owns a large interest in one of the Chicago baseball clubs. I am glad that Mr. Wrigley is prospering. I know him well, and he is a delightful person. I am glad that he is making money.

I am presenting these facts to show to the committee that Mr. Wrigley can pay this chewing-gum tax and then make as much money as anybody ought to be permitted to make.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. In a moment. This is what we have done for Mr. Wrigley recently: In the last tariff bill we took off the tariff on his chicle and he now brings all his chicle free from Mexico. He saves all of that now. Chewing gum is made out of chicle and sugar and some coal-tar flavoring extracts. That is all there is in it. During that time we have also cut his surtax. He is in the high bracket always and we cut his surtax from 65 to 50 per cent. We propose now to lower his surtaxes more. We have also taken off the excise tax on chewing gum. We have also relieved his corporation from the payment of excess-profits taxes. It is about time, I submit, to put back some of his taxes and let Mr. Wrigley resume these payments as a patriotic citizen. He has during the present campaign already advocated the election in a substantial way of two different Republican candidates for the Presidency. He is a versatile gentleman who fits into most any situation, and he ought to pay this tax.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. Do I understand that this tax is proposed for the purpose of getting even with Mr. Wrigley on account of his political activities?

Mr. RAINEY. Oh, no.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Is the purpose of the gentleman's amendment to tax only Mr. Wrigley's gum?

Mr. RAINEY. Oh, no.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. According to the gentleman's argument, there would seem to be no small manufacturers of gum at all.

Mr. RAINEY. Oh, there are some.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. There are a lot of them.

Mr. RAINEY. But their production is negligible. We ought not to let any of them escape. I have a package of Wrigley's gum here. Every package of his chewing gum is wrapped in about 13 different wrappers. Printed on the inside of the outside wrappers there is a profit-sharing coupon, and if you want to find out what you win by buying this particular package of chewing gum you have to write to New York to some profit-sharing corporation for a catalogue. When he paid these taxes by making these strips of chewing gum a little thinner—he was able to do it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. He put this united profit-sharing coupon on a separate piece of paper when he paid the tax, but now he prints it on the inside of the outside wrapper of the gum. He was able by putting another piece of paper into the package to make the package large enough so that they could be fed out of his coin-delivery devices, so that it would go through his machines, and in that way when he really paid the tax he put it on to the ultimate consumer, who really got one more piece of paper and thinner sticks of chewing gum. That is all there was to it. His is a fair example of the prosperity that can come to a man who engages in this business. Whether he pays the tax or not, he made enough during these years to satisfy anyone—as much as he ought to make—and we ought now to see that he pays the tax again. Twenty million industrious chewers of gum have brought to Mr. Wrigley his great wealth and his enormous income. In return for their disinterested and valuable service to him he ought now to be given an opportunity to pay some taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, at the time this tax was taken off I opposed it to the extent of my ability, fought it as hard as I could. I did not think it ought to be taken off at that time because at that time there was a tax on candy, and chewing gum competed with candy. There was a tax on other similar articles but I was unable to prevent its being taken off. The situation is now reversed. We have taken the tax off candy which competes with chewing gum, and we have taken it off because confections and chewing gum and other things compete with candy and were not taxed.

As far as Mr. Wrigley is concerned, if he were the one who would have to pay the tax I would not worry about it, and I would be willing to let it go on, but as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] very properly stated, Mr. Wrigley does not have to pay this tax, and he will not pay it. He simply passes it on, and it goes on to the little fellow who peddles on the street and the little storekeeper. Mr. Wrigley simply adds the amount of the tax.

Also, there is a mistake when one thinks that all these people in the chewing-gum business have been highly successful. The only one that I know of is Mr. Wrigley himself. The American Chicle Co. is in very serious difficulty, threatened with bankruptcy and a receiver.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. I remind the gentleman of the fact that while I said that he passed it on, Mr. Wrigley claimed when the tax went on that he could not pass it on.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But he did pass it on, as the gentleman knows, and made as much money as ever.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in three minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I have one or two observations to make upon this question. This bill takes the tax off candy. That recommendation was made by the Committee on Ways and Means. It takes the tax off Coca-Cola and all manner of soft drinks, everything of food or drink which the people buy that is more or less in the nature of a delicacy. Some call it a luxury, but it is a luxury in which we all indulge.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Especially the poor people.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is a luxury in which the poor people of large cities particularly indulge. It is a luxury in which the Members of this House indulge in the cloakrooms at times and even on the floor.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. Purely in the interest of civilization, would not the gentleman suggest putting some provision in the bill which would limit the use of chewing gum to Indians and negroes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly not. The gentleman is mistaken in supposing that gum is an injury to civilization. The time is passed when gentlemen can make that argument to intelligent people, at least people as intelligent as the Members of this House, many of whom use chewing gum. The pepsin that is in the chewing gum is a very healthful article.

There is but one more proposition I wish to state. If you put the tax on, you are not going to injure Mr. Wrigley or one or two other of the big manufacturers, but you will probably put a number of small manufacturers out of business, and we have some of those. You are going to hit the little retailer and the small manufacturer who would not have the opportunity or the facility for passing on the tax in the first place, or of absorbing it in his enormous output in the second place. This was, when we started, a bill to reduce taxes. It is rapidly becoming a bill to increase taxes and of course to create situations that existed immediately after the war and from which we have been trying to seek some avenue of escape. If there ever was a nuisance tax, the tax on candy, soft drinks, and chewing gum certainly was and is a nuisance tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STENGLE].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. STENGLE. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 150.

Mr. STENGLE. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are asked for.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. STENGLE and Mr. TIMBERLAKE to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 129, noes 152.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. PURNELL. I move to strike out subsection 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PURNELL: Page 167, beginning with line 13, strike out all of subsection 8.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this chewing-gum discussion suggests an inquiry propounded at one of the local theaters this week in a very serious sentimental ballad entitled, "Does spearment lose its flavor on the bedpost overnight?" [Laughter.]

I have moved to strike out subsection 8 of this section for the reason that I am not willing, as far as my vote is concerned, for the Government to continue to put its stamp of approval upon the manufacture and operation of gambling devices by imposing a tax which creates no burden. I am not a reformer, and I have no desire to pose as such, but I do have some very fixed notions when it comes to any matter that may in any way tend to poison the minds or corrupt the youth of this country. I regret that time will not permit me to enter into a discussion of this subject as I would like to do; however, I do hope in the few minutes allotted to me to be able to present for the consideration of the House some facts that may be of future use.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. PURNELL. I regret I have not time now. I will in a minute if I can get a little more time.

I called the Treasury Department this morning to find out whether or not this Government is actually taxing gambling devices. I was informed by the department that machines which are regarded by the Government as strictly gambling devices are exempt from taxation. The particular class of machines I have in mind, however, are not taxed except for a very small amount because by merely placing on the side a simple little attachment which occasionally vends gum or mint these manufacturers and operators who are running riot throughout the country and poisoning the youth of America and taking the earnings of working people are able to scatter throughout the land these gambling devices and avoid taxation entirely except on this little added attachment, which is very nominal in its cost and as a result carries a very small tax.

Mr. YOUNG. Why not add that to the tax instead of cutting the section out?

Mr. PURNELL. I do that because it does not bring in enough money to quibble over. This section brings in altogether only $126,000. At least half of it is produced from weighing machines. The other half is divided among a number of so-called automatic vending devices, so that the proportionate part which these purely gambling machines pay amounts to not more than $10,000 per year. I want to strike it all out because it is next to impossible—and I am so informed by the department—to determine what is and what is not a gambling device, so that in order that we may be sure that we will not have our Government put its stamp of approval upon these gambling devices, I ask that you vote to strike it entirely from the bill.

Now, in order to increase sales and create the impression throughout the country that these machines do have the sanction of the Government, they have printed on them, as you see here in this picture, in very large type, "The United States Government excise tax has been paid on this gum vendor." You will notice there is no tax on the machine itself, simply on the little gum-vending attachment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I understand the gentleman merely wants to strike out this provision because a part of the machine is used as a gambling device?

Mr. PURNELL. That is substantially correct.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If that is so, why not strike out the stamp tax on playing cards?

Mr. PURNELL. All the machines I have in mind are used for gambling purposes exclusively, while that is not always true of playing cards.

Mr. Chairman, several States, including my own State of Indiana, have driven these slot machines and so-called vending devices out. They continue to flourish, however, in other sections and continue to make gamblers of children and men who seek to take a chance and get something for nothing. I am primarily interested in the enactment of a law prohibiting their shipment in interstate commerce. Looking toward this end, I have introduced House bill 6071, to prohibit the importation and the interstate transportation of gambling or chance slot machines and automatic vending devices connected with chance devices. These machines are being operated over the country by syndicates backed by the manufacturers, and are a growing menace to the community in which they get a foothold. For this reason they have been legislated against and declared illegal in many States. But despite this fact these syndicates evade the law by applying for an injunction against the law-enforcement officers pending a decision of the court as to their legality, and in the interim the gambling machines continue to reap a big harvest for the operator. When the law finally stops their activities they move elsewhere and follow the same method of procedure.

The machines are worked on a strictly gambling principle, though they usually have a blind to conceal this fact in the form of a receptacle for gum or mints on the side. For every nickel played into the machines the player is entitled to one package, if there should happen to be any in the compartment at the time. But the player is not after the gum or mints; he plays his nickel for a different reason—to win more and, if lucky, receive from 2 to 20 coupons or checks, which have a definite value and may be redeemed for cash or merchandise or may be played back into the machine again.

A victim generally wins just enough to encourage him to continue to play. This being the operator's game and the machine being so constructed, the player losses all in the end.

There are several types of machines. Some resort to no gum or mint subterfuge whatever and are played for straight cash, sometimes as high as a quarter. From this it can be readily seen what harm is wrought and what hardship is worked upon those who can ill afford to play. Aside from this however, these machines exert a far more baleful influence upon the character of our school children, inculcating in the habit-forming period of their lives this desire to gamble and get something for nothing. In St. Louis last year the machines were filching a harvest from school children, some of whom were so small they could barely pull down the lever which manipulates the device. They were sacrificing their lunch money in order to play them. Finally, after six months, they were driven from St. Louis as they had previously been from such cities as Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Denver, and towns on the Pacific coast. The supreme court of my own State, in a leading case, has held them to be gambling devices, regardless of whether or not the player gets value received with each operation of the machine.

This gambling syndicate is even now operating across the line in the State of Maryland. Only a few days ago I observed a crowd of school children playing one of these machines in a near-by town. If something is not done to stop them, we may reasonably expect to find these machines in operation under the very shadow of the Capitol.

I have here clippings from a number of magazines which enjoy the privilege of our mails, whose columns carry such attractive headlines as "$10,000 profit in six months made by operators using our machines."

As Representatives and guardians of the youth of our country, we can well afford to concern ourselves with the preservation of the morals of our country by driving these devices out of interstate commerce. To this end I have introduced H. R. 6071, which I trust will have the indorsement of the Congress at an early date.

I will say to the gentlemen very frankly that I have offered this amendment primarily for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to my bill to which I have just referred.

I do not know what the attitude of the House will be on this proposed amendment, brought up as it is at the eleventh hour, but I certainly hope that this will be the opening gun in a campaign to rid this Government of these machines, which, though harmless in their appearance, are subtle in influence and powerful in their potential evil. [Applause.]

Mr. BEGG and Mr. DYER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PURNELL. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. With reference to the gentleman's bill, which he has introduced, making it a felony to ship any gambling device in interstate commerce, and which is pending in the Committee on the Judiciary, I want to assure the gentleman that I personally know a majority of the committee will favor that legislation. I shall do everything I can to help put this bill through.

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman from Missouri very well knows that in his own city of St. Louis within the last year hundreds of small boys and girls, hardly large enough to reach and pull down the levers on these vending machines, have wasted their lunch money and have loitered after school in the hope of getting something for nothing. Such a condition must appeal to the membership of this House and suggest the need of immediate legislation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am very much in sympathy with the gentleman's object, but I want to ask his candid judgment as to whether these devices will be more encouraged, taxed or untaxed?

Mr. PURNELL. I think they will be less encouraged by no tax, because these men would not object for one minute if you should put a 100 per cent tax on these machines. If they were thus taxed they could and would broadcast throughout the country the fact that these machines have the sanction of the Government, because the Government collects a tax.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Suppose the Government does tax them and does give them this privilege, can not the States easily prevent their use?

Mr. PURNELL. The States are doing it to a very great extent, but they are not doing it rapidly enough to suit me.

People do not walk up and play these machines in order to get 5 cents worth of gum or 5 cents worth of mint; they play them in order that they may get an opportunity to win checks which are redeemable in merchandise or cash, but which actual practice shows they ultimately lose.

But whatever other purpose the machines may claim to have they are in reality gambling machines, and this Government ought not to put its stamp of approval upon them.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I am very greatly interested in what the gentleman has said about taking this tax off of these machines and in that way decrease the manufacture and use of these machines. That is a new theory in taxation, and if the gentleman can demonstrate that he would help us out very much in the matter of getting taxes. It is a new theory to me; that the more tax you put on a thing the more they make of them.

Mr. PURNELL. I say that very well applies to these machines. These machines sell for $125 or $150, and I undertake to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that if you would put a 100 per cent tax on them the men interested would not bat an eye. Big money is made with these machines and they would not be disturbed by any tax the gentleman would impose.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Does the gentleman say that if we take all tax off of them they will quit making them?

Mr. PURNELL. No. But let me tell the gentleman something. These machines are made by certain manufacturers who in turn sell or lease them to operators who travel around the country. They are in New York to-day. I have a clipping from a morning paper of New York which indicates that within the last few days 4,000 of these machines have been made and shipped into New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am sorry but I will have to object, although I would be willing that the gentleman have one more minute.

Mr. PURNELL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. PURNELL. I just want one more minute in order to finish my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PURNELL. These parlor highwaymen, who take these machines around over the country from city to city and from State to State, in the early course of their operations succeed, somehow or other, in getting an injunction against the officers whose duty it is to enforce the law. They do not care how that injunction proceeding is finally terminated; the point is that they operate as long as possible before the matter is determined, and when it is finally determined that these are gambling devices and that they can not be operated in that particular city or section they move on, spreading pestilence and disaster as much as is spread by locusts or other vermin.

Mr. DYER and Mr. REED of New York rose.

Mr. PURNELL. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not a fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that these devices are gambling devices, and that the State legislatures have held them to be gambling devices; that the Supreme Court of the United States has held they are gambling devices under the lottery provision, even though you get a penny's worth of gum when you put a penny in, provided there is a chance to win more?

Mr. PURNELL. That is true; yes.

Mr. REED of New York. And these machines offer every inducement for people to put in more money than they otherwise would because there is an apparent opportunity to get something for nothing?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes; these are gambling devices which offer inducements to people to put in money which they can ill afford to lose with the hope of getting something for nothing, and I hope they will all be put out of business. If my bill is passed I am sure this will be the result; and in conclusion I want to add that I shall leave nothing undone to bring this about at the earliest possible moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's argument and the gentleman's amendment, announcing an absolutely new theory of taxation, is that some of these vending devices are gambling devices and therefore we ought to take away from them all tax burdens; if they are gambling devices, then do not tax them, and if they are gambling devices, then encourage their production. As a matter of fact, these—not many of them—devices are gambling devices. In all of the cities of the country they now have automat restaurants in order to serve sandwiches and other articles of food without the expense which usually accompanies the conducting of an ordinary restaurant. You go into such a restaurant and drop a coin into a slot divice and take out a sandwich. Does the gentleman say that is a gambling device? Does the gentleman say that is something you ought to suppress? These are not gambling devices; in fact, very few of these things are gambling devices. But, as a matter of fact, this amendment will relieve the gentleman I have just been discussing of the payment of some more tax, because Mr. Wrigley owns $2,000,000 worth of these slot devices, in which he places gum for delivery to customers. You can find them in every railroad station and on every street corner, and, as I say, that gentleman owns $2,000,000 worth of them. In order to make your bill perfectly harmonious you gentlemen on that side ought to vote to relieve him from the payment of these taxes also. His devices are continually wearing out and must be replaced. He pays this tax when he buys these machines. This tax, of course, is passed on to him, and if you take it away you are relieving him of some more taxes. I am talking about Mr. Wrigley, who is the chewing-gum trust.

In the 1920 campaign he contributed $25,000 to the Republican national campaign fund.

Mr. MURPHY. How much did Mr. Doheny contribute to the Democratic campaign fund?

Mr. RAINEY. And how much to the various States I do not know.

Mr. MURPHY. You have an angel, too.

Mr. RAINEY. Immediately afterwards you relieved him from paying his tax on the chicle he gets from tropical countries to use in the manufacture of his chewing gum and then immediately after that you relieved him from 15 per cent of his surtax rates, and now you propose to relieve him from half of his surtax rates that remain, if the Mellon plan succeeds. Then you relieved him in 1921 of the payment of this excise tax which I tried a while ago to get reinstated. Now, in order to make a perfectly harmonious program for the Republican side, and nearly everyone of you voted a while ago to relieve him from these excise taxes, you ought to adopt this amendment.

In gratitude to Mr. Wrigley for his campaign contributions of the past and for the contributions he may make during the approaching campaign, and God knows you will need all the money you can get, you ought to relieve him from this tax. Mr. Doheny's name has just been mentioned. I do not know what his politics is now—but I notice that he is vigorously attacking the Democratic Party, and I also understand that with his millions he has succeeded in corrupting and buying only Republican officials. If Mr. Wrigley is to control the Republican side of this Congress with his campaign contributions of the past and the campaign contributions you expect him to make in the future, then pass this too and make it a perfectly harmonious Wrigley taxing program from the start; and if you can find anybody else who has contributed large sums of money to the Republican campaign fund and will contribute further this fall, because you will need them this fall more than you have heretofore, then if you have not already relieved him sufficiently from his taxes, go ahead and relieve him further and then go before the country with an absolutely harmonious program, and in that event you ought to vote unanimously to take this tax off also.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SANDERS of Indiana). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTNESS: Page 167, line 6, strike out the words "shells and cartridges" and insert in lieu thereof "and golf balls."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the subject matter of the provision.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman will reserve his point of order, I am sure.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will reserve the point of order, but, of course, a golf ball is not used in using firearms.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I think most of you who are ardent admirers of sports will agree that my amendment will help out a great many thousand red-blooded sportsmen of the country, but that is not the only reason I think you are going to adopt the amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. In a moment. I think you may possibly have a more selfish purpose than that. I have no doubt that when you were home last year you had a great many of the hunters stop you, even though you may have been on your way to the golf course, and ask you why this tax upon shells and cartridges should be retained, and I am sure that in such way you got in close and intimate personal touch with all those hunters. Therefore, you will not need to be in touch with them this summer and I want to give you an opportunity to get in touch this summer with the golf players, for if my amendment passes, they will doubtless see you in the same way. I have had a very close check-up made among the membership of the House to determine whether the membership spends more for shells and cartridges than they do for golf balls, and I find they spent just $12.37 more during 1923 for golf balls than they did for shells and cartridges.

Mr. MERRITT. Twelve dollars and thirty-seven cents each?

Mr. BURTNESS. No; altogether. Of course, 99 per cent of that amount is due to the number of balls that the Republican whip loses, but still those are the figures. [Laughter.]

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I will be delighted to yield to my friend, the whip.

Mr. VESTAL. It does not make any difference to me, I will say to the gentleman, whether there is a tax or not, because the gentleman himself pays for all the golf balls I lose.

Mr. BURTNESS. Be that as it may, in view of the fact that the House spends a little more for golf balls than it does for shells and cartridges, even though the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] is the largest contributor, it seems to me we ought to be sportsmen enough to put a tax on that commodity which we use the most of. Now I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that I do not play golf, but I am just sport enough to advocate not taxing the golf balls. Why do you not make them a separate proposition? That is why I made the point of order.

Mr. BURTNESS. I will take the gentlemen of the House into my confidence and say to them that if they turn down my amendment which would tax golf balls, in place of shells and cartridges, then I am going to offer another amendment to eliminate shells and cartridges from the tax, and I hope that the gentleman from Illinois is a good enough sport to eliminate the tax on shells and cartridges as well as on golf balls.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I will make the point of order. I think we ought to have orderly procedure.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will not the gentleman withdraw his amendment in order to save time?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 52. Joint resolution for the relief of the drought-stricken farm areas of New Mexico.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes; had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REVENUE ACT OF 1924.

The committee again resumed its session.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINDRED. I wish to give notice to the House, for its information, that I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will later recognize the gentleman for that purpose if the amendment is in order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not up for debate yet.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I do not think substituting golf balls for shells and cartridges is a germane amendment to the subject matter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Furthermore, this amendment applies to golf balls sold for use of States and Territories. [Laughter.] I do not think there is any authorization of law for that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think it does not apply to golf balls for use of States and Territories, and I do not think there is any constitutional question involved, I will say to the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think the amendment is in order unless the gentleman from Illinois has some argument further than the argument he has suggested. The Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The amendment being offered simply in jest, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to the amendment do now close.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, there has not been five minutes debate, and it is not in order to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] moves that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota and all amendments thereto close at the present time.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there has been no debate, and that the motion is not in order until there has been five minutes of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been five minutes debate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KINDRED to the amendment offered by Mr. BURTNESS: Strike out the words "golf balls" and insert in lieu thereof "high balls and monkey glands."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make that motion in order that I may ask the majority and the minority leaders a question. In paragraph (a), page 167, I notice that automatic slot-device vending machines are taxed at 5 per cent, and automatic slot-device weighing machines at 10 per cent. There may be some sufficient reason for that, but if there is I have never been advised. While I am not going to make a motion to amend by making the automatic slot-device weighing machines bear only 5 per cent, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he would have any objection to such a motion being made?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I do not recall the argument that was used in favor of the 5 per cent tax on the slot-device vending machines. I would have no objection to his offering an amendment, but I would increase the 5 per cent on the slot-device vending machines to 10 per cent rather than to reduce the 10 per cent tax to 5.

Mr. KEARNS. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I think the tax of 10 per cent on weighing machines only brings in a revenue of about $46,000 a year.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman is correct, and the House might as well understand what this section does. There are three manufacturers of these machines in the United States, and when you reduce the tax you reduce the tax of these gentlemen making these machines. I do not know whether the committee wants to reduce the tax of three men, although it only brings in thirty or forty thousand dollars.

Mr. KEARNS. There is no reason why the three men should be discriminated against, even if they only have three votes. Will the gentleman from Texas state whether he has any objection to a motion that I have indicated?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I say I would vote against a motion to strike out the 10 and make it 5. I think the gentleman, not having any knowledge on the subject, would not be voting very intelligently himself.

Mr. KEARNS. I have this knowledge, that the automatic slot-device vending machines that the committee has reported the 5 per cent tax on are machines that are kept in cigar stores and places of that kind where men go in and use them, but they do not take the stick of chewing gum. They play for the extra checks they hope to get.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let me say to the gentleman that this is the present law.

Mr. KEARNS. I know it is, but the weighing machines are used mostly by children who walk along the street and drop their penny in to learn their weight. It does not seem that they ought to be discriminated against.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. It occurs to me that the difference between these machines is that one is a device whereby a commodity is sold and in weighing machines there is no commodity sold.

Mr. KEARNS. That is not a sufficient reason when you remember that nine-tenths of the vending machines are in the cigar stores. A man goes in and drops a nickle into a slot but he never asks for the stick of chewing gum, he tries to get two cigars for one if he is playing it or perhaps many for one price. They are gambling machines, nine-tenths of them. But here is a weighing machine that your boy and girl use, that they find in front of a store to learn what their weight is, and you put a 10 per cent tax upon those machines, while upon the others that are used for gambling purposes you only put on a 5 per cent tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KEARNS. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, may I suggest to the members of the committee that we have spent an hour and a half on paragraphs that are practically of no importance whatever, involving only a few hundred dollars. How can we hope to close the consideration of this bill to-day if we go on in this way?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman from Ohio who now has the floor is a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not blaming him, I am simply taking this opportunity to urge gentlemen not to take up time on these comparatively unimportant matters.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio for two minutes more?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. I was going to suggest that there are some of us who would be glad to vote for an amendment changing the 5 per cent tax to 10 per cent. It seems that that ought to be increased. Just here I want to say that it seems to me that we are proceeding to cut down taxes on things that are luxuries, or at least not absolutely necessary, and the more we do of that the more we shall have to increase on other items.

Mr. KEARNS. Oh, these men could well afford to pay 50 per cent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this subsection and all amendments thereto now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 167, line 11, strike out the word "and" and in line 12 strike out the words "smoking stands."

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, in order to get this amendment before the House, I shall read the subsection:

(7) Cigar or cigaretto holders and pipes, composed wholly or in part of meerschaum or amber, humidors, and smoking stands, 10 per cent.

The amendment I offer is to strike out "smoking stands." The first articles referred to in the subsection are somewhat personal in their use and might be classed as luxuries. Smoking stands are merely pieces of furniture. A manufacturer making furniture can not understand why he has to pay a different tax on a smoking stand from what he pays on other furniture. It is a matter of cleanliness and of use in the household, and many people have smoking stands in their homes when there is not a member of the family who uses tobacco. I have talked with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means with reference to the matter, and he does not object to the amendment, and I think you will hear no objection on the minority side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will not the gentleman modify his amendment by putting in the word "and" before humidors?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I did do that. It will read:

Cigar or cigarette holders and pipes, composed wholly or in part of meerschaum or amber, and humidors.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. CANFIELD. And is it not a fact that these smoking stands are made by small furniture companies throughout the country, as a rule in time of slack business, for the purpose of keeping their men busy?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am so informed.

Mr. Chairman, there is no more reason for placing a tax on smoking stands than there would be to place a tax on telephone tables, night tables, or any furniture of that kind, and there would be more reasons for placing a tax on card tables and mah jong tables than there would be on this piece of furniture, yet they are not included in the revenue bill.

This tax on smoking stands is a discrimination. I am sure that Members of the House do not want to discriminate, even for the purpose of raising revenue. The revenue derived from this one item—smoking stands—is necessarily very small, and no doubt would net the Government very little after the expenses are taken out in the collection of the same.

There was in the revenue bill of last year a tax on bowie knives, brass knucks, and other articles of this character, which it is unlawful to sell or carry in most of the States, but these articles were left out of this present revenue bill because, as the chairman states, the revenue derived therefrom was not sufficient to cover the expense of collecting same. So I trust the committee will see fit to adopt my amendment, first, because the tax is a discrimination, and, secondly, because the revenue derived will not justify the expense of collecting.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman misstated my attitude somewhat, but I think it is far more important that we should get on with the reading of this bill than to quibble over these small matters. I move that all debate upon subsection 7 and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER: Page 167, line 9, strike out the numerals "10" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "5."

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have no doubt that many of you have had letters from men who belong to fish and game clubs and shooting clubs regarding this tax on shells, cartridges, and firearms. Of course, in the determination as to what shall be taxed and what should be exempt in the list among the excise taxes, or, as we call them, indirect taxes, there certainly could be no degree of science used. We have had a great deal of discussion here about science, as to whether this is a scientific or an unscientific tax bill. We have had a great deal of discussion of minor subjects, such as chewing gum, and so forth, and it appears to me from what I read in the press and the messages that I get from home, that the people of the United States are fairly well disgusted with the Congress and its attitude on this tax bill, and they would like to see an excise tax put on "chewing the rag" on matters of no importance on the floor of this House.

We have lost sight of the original plan of tax reduction. We have heard a great many personal attacks made on the floor of the House. The Democratic method is for a gentleman to get up here and say, "Oh, So-and-so is a very lovable man, a very estimable gentleman, and I admire and respect him," and then proceed to take his skin off from his forehead to his toenails. An attack has been made on Mr. Wrigley. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] that Mr. Wrigley might, if he can not have vending machines, deposit his gum in the 150,000,000 bread cans which the gentleman's side supplied for the Army during the war that are somewhere now in storage houses, or he might tie it up in bundles with some of the 7,000,000 halters that you had made for the 300,000 horses and mules used by the expeditionary forces. The trouble with the halters is that they got them in the wrong place. They ought to have been around the necks of some of the profiteers awarded contracts by Democratic officials.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The point of order is that the gentleman from New York is not discussing his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed in order.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I notice that in some of these excise taxes provision is made for certain reductions. The tax on candy has been eliminated and there has been a reduction in the taxes on jewelry. The gentleman's amendment seeks to apply that principle to this proposition and cut the revenue down from $4,000,000 to $2,000,000?

Mr. CROWTHER. About two and a half million dollars. It seems to me that everybody ought to have some little benefit in this reduction of excess taxes, because, as I say, there can be nothing scientific or even logical in the method employed. For instance, levying a tax on cameras, so that every little boy or girl who wants to buy a Brownie and take a picture has to pay a tax. I think we might be fair, and on firearms, shells, and cartridges take off one-half, as we have done in the other places in the bill.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. There is one point which I think the gentleman should stress. We have fish and game clubs in my district, as I assume most of the Members have in their districts. Those persons who are not familiar with the purpose of these organizations think that the members of these clubs are out to butcher game. In my section of the country the fish and game clubs are actively engaged in conservation, and that is their real purpose. They have gun clubs, but they shoot at targets. They are interested in the conservation of game and in legislation to protect it. They are carrying on reforestation and getting fish and putting them into the streams. In my own county they have a large section set aside where they are planting trees, creating forests. This is not only true in Chautauqua County but also in Allegany and Cattaraugus Counties. I think those clubs should be encouraged. The amendment ought to be passed.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Why is not the gentleman in favor of striking out in line 6 the word "firearms"?

Mr. CROWTHER. I am.

Mr. VESTAL. And in lieu of that inserting the words "pistols and revolvers." People ought not to pay a tax on shotguns and things of that sort, but on pistols and revolvers I think the tax ought to be placed.

Mr. CROWTHER. I accept that amendment and ask unanimous consent to so modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment, and the Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. CROWTHER: Page 167, line 6, strike out the word "firearms" and insert in lieu thereof the words "pistols and revolvers," and in line 9 strike out the numeral "10" and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "5."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, the gentleman understands it lowers the tax on pistols.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. I want five minutes.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I want five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let me appeal to the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] wants five minutes in which to make a speech. I hope he will be given opportunity to do so. He has been trying to get an opportunity ever since last Tuesday. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will modify his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa modify his motion?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman from Texas desire me to make it 15 minutes?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I want five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon, a member of the committee, will be recognized first.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to oppose the motion. I shall be very brief, so that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] may have five minutes.

When we selected items upon which to reduce or eliminate excise taxes we selected those in which the industries were suffering. In some instances the tax was more than the income of the business. In other cases the tax was a great burden. It cost more to keep the books and pay the tax than the entire amount of tax paid on the sales. We found that the sale of firearms, shells, and cartridges was not an industry that was suffering from depression. It was an industry making a profit and increasing its sales. Therefore it did not come within the rule established to effect reductions in favor of the industries and businesses that were in distress.

Now, if we reduce this tax as proposed, and modify the section, it will lose to the Treasury about $3,000,000.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The time is limited, and I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAWLEY. If we continue to eliminate from the bill more and more taxes it would remind me of the small boy whose teacher took him to a museum. That evening his mother asked the boy, "What did you see?" The boy answered, "She took us to see a dead circus." If we continue to eliminate these taxes the bill will fail to realize the revenue necessary for the Government by hundreds of millions of dollars. Somebody must pay the taxes. I am sorry it is so. I would like to see these particular taxes removed or reduced. But somebody must pay the taxes. Those can pay taxes best who are prospering and whose business is expanding. Those can not afford to pay the taxes whose business profit does not amount to the tax itself, whose taxes are more than the income received from the business.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, the Republican representing my district, who sat here just before me, carried that district by a majority of 69,000. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has insinuated against my tactics, claiming that they are unfair. There is the answer. In a district which is 69,000 Republican I could not count 10 working, 100 per cent Democrats out of 550,000 people. I carried the district. My district knows I am a hard fighter and a fair fighter.

The gentleman from Iowa in his adroit and Machiavellian manner, in trying to refuse me continuously the floor, said it was because I had attacked the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], an old friend of 12 years' standing, and to whom I have been very generous in the auto fight. I have given my support on the Democratic side to his bills.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CLANCY. Not until I get through. I have not time enough.

Now, I wish to thank with all my heart the majority leader, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who is a good sportsman and a square shooter. The gentleman from Ohio asked in Tuesday's fracas that I be given unanimous consent to be heard five minutes. I think he displayed his instinctive love of sportsmanship and fair play when he insisted that the Chair should recognize the minority leader [Mr. GARRETT]. I wanted to get the floor on Tuesday, and I had made a gentlemen's agreement to that effect with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman claim he made an agreement with me?

Mr. CLANCY. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] came to me and said that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] had suggested that it was getting late, and that the automobile amendment would require a lot of discussion, and that we could enter into a unanimous-consent agreement, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and myself would agree to that. I saw Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, but not being on very good speaking terms with the gentleman from Iowa, I did not consult him, but I understood from both Mr. GARNER and Mr. MCLAUGHLIN that the gentleman from Iowa had agreed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] worded it in any such way as that.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not wish to be interrupted any further. Please speak in your own time. I can not spare the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. CLANCY. I wanted to offer my support of the McLaughlin amendments because they were practically what I advocated in a speech on the floor on February 18, and a copy of which speech was sent to every Member. The parts, tires, and accessories tax reduction, 5 per cent to 2½ per cent, involving a reduction of about $20,000,000 is identical with my suggestion. The principle of the trucks reduction is the same. It repeals the taxes on the light truck—the truck of the farmer, the butcher, the grocer, and the merchant. But I suggested the basis of the reduction to be capacity, two tons and under, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] suggested the selling price of the chassis, and in a conference with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] I agreed to the chassis arrangement.

UNITED DEMOCRATS FORCED THE FIGHTING.

I wanted to get the floor two days ago to point out to the House and to the country that it was the 11 Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee who fought a great part of the fight for auto relief. I owed that to them. Mr. OLDFIELD made repeated motions for relief. So did Mr. GARNER, and he helped me when I appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, when nearly all the Republican Members attacked me. Mr. RAINEY made motions for auto relief, and so did Mr. COLLIER. Mr. HULL and Mr. CASEY helped materially. So did Messrs TAGUE, CAREW, CRISP, MARTIN, and DICKINSON.

Mr. FREE. I rise to a point of order. This debate is not on the section we have before us, but it seems to be in the nature of a political speech. We have passed the subject to which the gentleman is referring, and I make the point of order that it is not germane to the section under consideration.

Mr. CLANCY. I suggest to the Chair that I was shut out by the arbitrary methods used when this question was under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, if the gentleman from California insists on his point of order, I assume it must be sustained.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue out of order for the remainder of his five minutes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will a continuation of this argument in any way interfere with the action agreed to on Tuesday and formally ratified by the committee this morning reducing the taxes on automobile repairs and accessories?

The CHAIRMAN. No; it simply extends the right to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] to proceed out of order for the remainder of his time.

Mr. KETCHAM. I shall not object if the remarks of the gentleman can not endanger the action we have already taken, but if they are in any way liable to revise that action I will have to object. My only interest is in making sure that the reductions already granted by the committee are not to be jeopardized by the very evident intent of the gentleman to make partisan capital out of it, by remarks made after the action has been taken.

The CHAIRMAN. That matter can not be reopened. This is simply a request that the gentleman have unanimous consent to proceed out of order for the remainder of his time. Is there objection to that request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. CLANCY. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] was not accorded the courtesy of any reduction of auto taxes by his Republican colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] was in the same boat with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, I think it is only fair to give these Democratic leaders and their loyal followers due credit for espousing the cause of the motorists of the country.

They were big enough and generous enough to follow the lead of a new Member, myself. They gave me the right to speak on auto taxes in a Democratic caucus devoted to the income-tax schedules. They helped me in every possible way. I am intensely grateful to them, and I am sure the motorists of the country, whose representatives in Washington have closely followed this fight and know the real situation, appreciate their Democratic supporters and also those Republicans who broke away from the old guard of their party on this matter.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLANCY. No, sir. I can not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CLANCY. The old guard of the Ways and Means Committee have opened the eyes of the auto people of this country. Only three days ago in Washington two gigantic organizations, formerly bitter enemies, the American Automobile Association and the National Motorists' Association, merged into one organization, the New American Automobile Association. They gave as the reason the smashing drive the old guard of the Ways and Means Committee had been making on the vital and honorable automotive interests of this country.

THE SLIMY TRAIL OF OIL.

Two years ago the American Automobile Association fought the old guard of the Ways and Means Committee on oil and asphalt tariffs. The old guard wanted to levy a tariff of 35 cents a barrel on oil and even threatened $1.50 per barrel. The action of the old guard was unpatriotic and thoroughly unjustified. It meant a tax of $140,000,000 on the motorists of the country. It meant raising the price of gasoline from 3 to 7 cents a gallon.

The automobile people took the fight to the floor after they had appealed to the country and they beat the old guard on oil and asphalt. And that was before the slimy trail of oil was clearly depicted to the country. That was before the Sinclair and Doheny and Fall revelations made the country sit up with a gasp of horror.

NOW THE RAILROADS ATTACK.

This time the auto people are fighting the railroads, who see in the auto and motor truck most vital and serious competition, taking from the railroads hundreds of millions of passenger rides per year and tens of millions of tons of freight. The committee hearings, both in the House and Senate, make clear, even to the most skeptical, the truth of that statement. Friends of the railroads are pursuing a shortsighted policy of opposition here in Congress fighting a square deal for the 15,000,000 owners of autos and trucks in this country.

I wish to most emphatically assert that I cherish no hostility to the railroads on that account. I believe railroads are also vital to this country, and I would not try to hamper, injure, or embarrass them because they pursue stupid and shortsighted methods of trying to cripple their competitors, such as canals, ships, aviation, electric railways, and automobile passenger cars and trucks.

ALUMINUM NEXT.

I hope to see the auto interests begin a fight in this session to relieve the industry from the extortion of the aluminum trust of this country, which over bitter opposition increased the aluminum tariff from 2 to 7 per cent in the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill and which, I believe, can be reduced by the Tariff Commission as soon as the men on that commission charged with representing various selfish interests benefited by the Fordney-McCumber Act are removed or made complaisant to the demands of justice and political expediency.

I wish to make it clear and emphatic to the friends of the motorists in this House that I never at any time gave my consent to cutting off all debate within a short time on this auto-tax question. I was perfectly willing that all possible amendments be introduced and, of course, I wanted as many speeches as possible made here in behalf of the motorists.

These gentlemen desiring to offer amendments and speak helped to forestall a vote on Tuesday and it seems they were entirely justified in their stand.

Mr. WELLER. Is it not a fact——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York [Mr. WELLER] rise?

Mr. WELLER. I want to propound a question to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CLANCY. Two days after this Congress was elected, which was about 15 months ago, I made a speech in Detroit that this would be one of the hardest fighting Congresses in American history. But I did not foresee that I would figure so prominently in the fighting. Whenever an effort is made in this House to curtail property rights or human rights in which my district is vitally interested I will not regard that affair as a private fight, and I reserve the right to enter all such fights.

A few Members probably resented my attack on the floor of this House on February 18 as on a controlling coterie of the Ways and Means Committee, which I designated as the "old guard," and which the country understands as the old guard, and which Republicans back in the districts regard as a millstone around the party's neck, and which the American people quite generally regard with disfavor.

It was this coterie, some 11 Members or so, which was attacked on the floor of the House Tuesday by members of the Ways and Means of both parties, and a great deal of Ways and Means dirty linen was washed on the floor of the House. That is a good thing for the country. I have a shrewd suspicion that my attack on the old guard with reference to its hard-boiled attitude on the auto and trucks tax proposition involving some 15,000,000 voters who were getting angry and indignant and ugly had something to do with the washing of the linen on the floor and the desire of some gentlemen to get to cover.

I have fought this auto-tax campaign for the past three months with all the energy and earnestness at my command. I felt a smashing attack on the old guard to be the proper political strategy. My campaign was simple—to line up the Democratic leaders, then the Democratic rank and file, invite the liberal and progressive Republicans to come in, and then beat down the old guard. I can not see any grounds for apologies in taking that course.

THE OLD GUARD MADE THE AUTO ISSUE PARTISAN.

I did not make the automobile tax reduction fight partisan in this session. It was already made partisan when the Republican administration, speaking through Secretary Mellon, fought all suggestions to reduce this taxation and when the controlling Republicans of the Ways and Means Committee bitterly fought all reductions.

Secretary Mellon and his Republican backers fought the same way two years ago and smashed the Members who attempted to get reduction. They fought reduction a year ago also.

I attempted to make all Democrats fight this year for my auto tax bills for relief, the only ones introduced in the House, and I succeeded to a remarkable measure, considering that I am a new Member.

I was nonpartisan when I requested Senator EDGE, administration Republican, to introduce my bills in the Senate and finally succeeded. I was not partisan when I tried to form a working coalition with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], a Republican, and when I did not display any pride of authorship in refusing to suggest any amendments on the floor myself.

Or, rather, I was bipartisan and wanted to see both the Democrats and Republicans aiming to protect the motorists of the country. In the Senate, which I considered the court of last resort if we were defeated in the House, I asked one Republican and two Democrats, Senator FERRIS, of Michigan, and Senator COPELAND, of New York, to introduce my bills, and they did so, with the reservation that Mr. FERRIS introduced my parts bill.

WHY BE PETTY WHEN DANGER THREATENS ALL?

The biggest thing that has come out of this fight is the uniting of competing auto organizations. The allied nations made but little headway in the Great War because they were jealous of one another and would not consent to one leader and a united command.

The German smashes at Amiens and at Paris in 1918 taught them better and they united upon General Foch as commander in chief. Then they won the war. The motorist of the country will be a luscious oyster for the predatory interests until he ceases to be an oyster. Why be a stupid and supine prey for slimy oil and gasoline interests, the metal interests, and for unfair tax-assessing officials of town, city, State, and the Federal Governments?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, referring to subsection 6, firearms, shells, and cartridges, we have been here now for nearly three weeks in an effort to reduce taxation. There have been considerable politics on both sides of the aisle, but, for one Member, I have earnestly endeavored to assist in bringing about a reduction in taxation. There has been considerable said about the necessity of reducing the taxes upon the small man, the poor man, the workingman, and there has been an effort, particularly on the Democratic side, to have it appear that you were making most strenuous efforts in that direction.

Now, my judgment is that on this section, which brings in $3,500,000 in taxes, based on 10 per cent, the fact is that the whole $3,500,000 is paid by the poor man, the ordinary workingman, the farmer, and the so-called sport.

Mr. CASEY. What particular item is that?

Mr. SNYDER. That is the item for firearms, shells, and cartridges. They are used by the laboring men of the country.

Mr. CASEY. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's argument, and, if he will permit, I will say that it is the miner, who gets a day off, who goes out in the woods to hunt, as well as the farmer boy, so that I think this tax ought to come off.

Mr. SNYDER. There is not a section in this country which has a few bare acres of land in which there is not some normal fellow out hunting every day in the year in every part of the country, and there is no reason in the world why, if we want to reduce taxes upon the ordinary man, this amendment of the gentleman from New York should not be accepted.

Gentlemen, this is a thriving industry—the making of firearms—but every single cent of that 10 per cent is passed on to the men who buy shells and guns. There can not be any question about that.

The only argument I have made on this tax bill is that if you want to reduce taxes to the poor man you must take them off of production, because practically every single dollar of the 12½ per cent that is paid into the Government by corporations, by individuals in business, or partnerships is immediately added to the price and passed on to the consumer. Notwithstanding the statements made by other gentlemen, that is the fact.

This particular amendment ought to be passed in the interest of the sportsmen of this country. It is a wonderful thing for boys who have a holiday to take their guns and wander about the forests, hunting, but when a man who desires to buy a gun at $30 must pay $33 for it, a burden is imposed on him, and I think it should be taken off.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does not the gentleman think more general relief would be given if you cut out the tax on shells and cartridges rather than upon firearms themselves?

Mr. SNYDER. That is what I intended to offer, but the gentleman thought it would be wiser to leave it as it was. Now, if I had my way, I would strike it all out and give the sportsmen and the workingmen the benefit of a holiday without taxing them on the things they use in their sport. It is perfectly foolish to put on these little taxes from which the Government is receiving only $200,000 or $300,000.

Gentlemen, you have been talking so much about the so-called rich men of this country. Let me tell you they are not afraid of the income tax, and the greatest mistake you have made in this bill, in the interest of the poor man, is that you have not reduced the tax on production.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman would not object to the placing of a high tax on pistols, would he?

Mr. SNYDER. No.

Mr. HUDSPETH. In our State we prohibit the manufacture of pistols.

Mr. SNYDER. What I desire is to care for the sportsmen of the country, the poor man, the farmer, and all men who enjoy hunting, and I favor taking the tax off of the shells and cartridges.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Let me call the attention of my freind from New York to the fact that his colleague Mr. CROWTHER makes a reduction in the tax on pistols.

Mr. SNYDER. I understand that was at the suggestion of the gentleman from North Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

On page 167, line 6, strike out the words "firearms, shells, and cartridges" and in lieu thereof place the words "pistols and revolvers."

Mr. SNYDER. We will accept that, and be glad to.

Mr. VESTAL. And in line 9 leave 10 per cent.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; on pistols. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VESTAL to the amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER: Page 167, line 6, strike out the words "firearms, shells, and cartridges" and insert in lieu thereof "pistols and revolvers"; and strike out "5" and insert "10."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition for the other two minutes.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the only recreation that I take each year is in the hunting camp, but I want to say that every real hunter who is a sportsman is willing to pay his way. It is not the real hunter who wants to escape this tax. It is the trap shooter in these exclusive clubs who goes out and thinks nothing of shooting up $6 or $8 or $10 or $15 worth of ammunition in a day, and he ought to pay for that, and I am against any change in this amendment. The ordinary farm boy who goes out and shoots a squirrel does not pay much of this tax, and it does not amount to anything, so far as he is concerned, during the entire year.

Mr. SNYDER. He pays a little, does he not?

Mr. BLANTON. It is the trap shooter who pays it. The farm boy has his old long rifle slung behind the door that he can take out and kill a squirrel, and it is the big trap shooter in these clubs who wants to escape this tax.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to say that I have not any interest at all in the trap shooter.

Mr. BLANTON. When you speak of a sportsman you ought to speak of a sportsman who is willing to pay his tax just like everybody else. I am not in favor of changing one word relative to the tax on firearms and ammunition in the committee's bill. We ought to pass it just like it is and let every gun that is sold and every box of ammunition that is sold pay its way, and not a single real hunter in the United States will object to it. The rich clubs out here that a great many of our friends belong to, when they go out on these trap-shooting expeditions, can save in a year's time $10 or $15 or $20 of taxes and can spend that money in some other way. I do not blame them for wanting to relieve themselves of it. I relieve the gentleman of any such intention. He is speaking for the farm boy in his district alone.

He is speaking for the laboring man in his district alone. I do not impute any bad motives to him, but there are big clubmen in the country who spend a great amount of money for fine guns. There are clubmen who spend as much as $500 for fine handmade guns, and they ought to pay the tax on same.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, is there any objection to again reporting the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] was again reported.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURTNESS. As I understand it, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York was, in fact, withdrawn, so that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is to be submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the amendment was modified. There was a modification agreed to by the gentleman from New York and after that modification was made the gentleman from Indiana offered his amendment.

The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CROWTHER) there were—ayes 42, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARNER of Texas and Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I just want to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa and to the committee that while I do not know whether you want to get through with this bill this week or not, yet if you do, you will have to make a little more progress than you have been making for the last two hours. As far as I am concerned, and, I think, so far as the membership of the committee on this side is concerned, they are anxious to help you and to facilitate getting through with this bill. If you are going on, however, it is your responsibility.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, the gentleman from Texas recognizes that I have been doing everything possible to get the matter along, and also, as chairman, I have taken but a few minutes this afternoon. That is all the time I have taken.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I have used the gentleman from Iowa as a battering ram to talk to somebody else.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: Page 167, line 20, after the word "machine," insert: "If any such machine or the operation thereof be of such a nature that the operator or customer stands a chance to win a prize or to win more or less in one operation than another, a tax equivalent to 100 per cent of its fair market value shall be imposed upon every such machine sold or put into operation."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order, but if there is going to be any discussion on it I will withdraw it and let a vote be had. This is merely a regulatory matter and not a tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SNYDER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

On February 27:

H. R. 3198. An act to authorize the States of Alabama and Georgia, through their respective highway departments, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Chattahoochee River at or near Eufaula, Ala., connecting Barbour County, Ala., and Quitman County, Ga.; and

H. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution to provide an appropriation for the prosecution of suits to cancel certain leases, and for other purposes.

REVENUE ACT OF 1924.

The committee again resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 604. (a) On and after the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (in lieu of the tax imposed by section 905 of the revenue act of 1921) upon all articles commonly or commercially known as jewelry, whether real or imitation; pearls, precious and semiprecious stones, and imitations thereof; articles made of, or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory; watches; clocks; opera glasses; lorgnettes; marine glasses; field glasses; and binoculars; upon any of the above when sold or leased by or for a dealer or his estate for consumption or use, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold or leased.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to strike out the section. Shall I move to strike out paragraph (a) and then the following paragraphs, or wait until the whole section is read?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think we had better fight it out on this paragraph.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Then, I submit the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 169, line 22, strike out paragraph (a).

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, on this amendment to strike out the jewelry tax I would like to have the close attention of the membership of the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield and let me see if I can get a unanimous request?

Mr. WATKINS. If you strike out this paragraph would that go back and leave——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The effect would be to entirely wipe out the tax.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I think the gentleman from Iowa or some one ought to say a word as to what effect this amendment is going to have. We have reduced this $13,000,000, and this will reduce it over $20,000,000 more.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Iowa at this time to move to limit debate?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I am not going to make any motion at this time.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Is the gentleman going to ask unanimous consent to limit debate?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It seems to me that we ought not to spend more than 15 minutes on this amendment or this paragraph, and I would like 1 minute of that myself.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I will limit my time as much as possible; but I hope the gentleman from Iowa will withhold his request.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that all debate on this subsection and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I ask the gentleman to withhold that a few minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All the gentleman has to do is to object, and I will sit down.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I do not want to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment to strike out entirely the excise tax on the jewelry business is an appeal for a business that has suffered and is suffering very seriously under the tax. The purpose of a tax is to raise revenue and not to destroy business. This discriminatory tax on the jewelry business has destroyed business, thrown many retail stores into bankruptcy, and has correspondingly reduced the tax income of the Government. The time has come to repeal the tax altogether.

This appeal is in behalf of all the thousands of small jewelers throughout the United States who have suffered so severely as a result of the tax that they are up against financial difficulties and financial disaster. There is a good deal that could be said on the subject in this appeal to the membership of the House if permitted. Within my limited time, permit me to call attention to some figures.

This 5 per cent retail tax went into effect for the latter half of the year 1919. The first half of that year the tax was 3 per cent on manufacturers. It was changed by the act of October 18 to 5 per cent on retailers. The first year, 1919—half of the year being 5 per cent on retailers—the total amount received by the Government was $6,567,512. The first full year of 5 per cent retail tax the Government received $25,863,607, but the years 1920 to 1923 the tax income received by the Government has grown steadily less, until 1923 the total income received was $20,297,875.91, a reduction in tax income under the operation of these excise taxes against the jewelry business of over five and a half million dollars. That reduction of tax income reflected the failures among the men engaged in the jewelry business. In 1919 there were 94 failures, 1919 being the year when the tax was in effect only one-half of the year. There were 94 failures in that year with a total liability of $688,000. In 1920 there were 139 failures with liabilities of nearly $3,000,000. In 1921 there were 488 failures with liabilities of nearly $14,000,000.

In 1923, the last full year of the tax, there were more than 500 failures in the jewelry business. Out of a total of a little over 18,000 jewelers throughout the United States there was a total of 1,794 failures during the years of this tax with total liabilities of $40,657,880. This tax is a tax on the entire business, not a tax on precious stones alone. With few rare exceptions the sale of precious stones by a retail jeweler is less than 10 per cent of the total sales. More than two-thirds of the 18,000 jewelers in the United States have a capital of less than $20,000. These struggling small retail jewelry stores have suffered disaster under this discriminatory tax in severe competition with untaxed business. It is a wicked discrimination and should be abolished.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. May I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for two minutes more.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am compelled to object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, we all know that taxes are burdensome, and we would like to repeal all taxes if it were possible, but it is not possible to do it. We are practical men, we represent the Government, and it is our duty to see that the Government has sufficient revenue to meet its legitimate needs. When the Committee on Ways and Means met we found it possible to repeal some of these annoying nuisance taxes to the amount of about $45,000,000. All the items in the bill that are given the benefit of reduction I do not suppose are the choice of any member of the committee, either Republican or Democrat. We have tried to relieve those industries that we thought were suffering the most and which were most seriously affected by the tax and the items upon which we gave relief are the judgment of a majority of the committee.

Let us take the jewelry proposition. We must have a revenue. The jewelry tax last year brought in about $20,000,000. The committee found it impossible to relieve all of that tax and have sufficient revenue in the bill to meet the needs of the Government. We recognized that the jewelers were suffering, and the committee decided to reduce the tax one-half, amounting to $10,000,000. The Ways and Means Committee favored a manufacturers' tax if it was feasible. The Ways and Means Committee then appointed a subcommittee to confer with the representatives of the retail jewelers, and asked them to make suggestions as to how we could reduce the jewelers' tax by $10,000,000 and affect them the least injuriously and give them the greatest benefit of the reduction. They met with us. They insisted that the whole tax be repealed. The subcommittee—and I had the honor to be upon it—advised them that as a subcommittee we could not report a bill repealing it all; that we were limited to repealing one-half, or $10,000,000. They would not give us any suggestion. We finally told them if they would not assist us we would have to act.

When driven to the wall, they finally made the suggestion that they would prefer to reduce the tax on all items rather than to have a manufacturers' tax. When we began to consider the manufacturers' tax, the question arose as to who is a manufacturer. They said that every jeweler is a manufacturer, and that if you put it on the manufacturers it would be pivoted in four or five exchanges, and finally the subcommittee decided after a conference with the experts that the most practical way was to draw it under the terms in which it appears in the bill. Under that all plated silverware, all small articles of jewelry, all articles of jewelry selling for less than $40 are relieved entirely from the tax. The bill provides that a watch sellin; for less than $60 is relieved. We raised the watch to $60 because it was represented to us that railroad men must have accurate watches in the discharge of their duties, and the testimony showed that they could get an accurate watch for $60. Under the provisions of the bill a watch costing less than $60 is relieved from all the tax. The provision as drafted in the bill, according to the Treasury experts, will net in revenue about $7,000,000, so that we have reduced the tax of the jewelers by nearly 65 per cent. We have knocked off $13,000,000. Do you not think that the committee has been just and fair to the jewelers? Nearly all of the $7,000,000 that the retailers will have to pay will come from pearls, diamonds, precious and semi-precious stones—luxuries—and surely if the Government must have a revenue there is no better place to levy it than upon such luxuries. Those who purchase such ornaments are able to pay a small tax.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Does not the gentleman know that in a large number of jewelry stores throughout the small towns and villages the proportionate part of their business relating to precious stones, diamonds, and so forth, would not exceed 10 per cent of the total business?

Mr. CRISP. I do not know what it would amount to, but I say that this provision, in my judgment, will relieve practically all of the small jewelry stores in the small towns throughout the United States from having to pay a tax and put the tax on these expensive diamonds and pearls and precious stones.

Mr. BACHARACH. Is not it a fact that the purchaser pays the tax?

Mr. CRISP. I think that is the fact.

Mr. BACHARACH. The 5 per cent is added, and the poor jeweler is not affected by this.

Mr. CRISP. That is true. In this instance I want to appeal to the House to stand by the Ways and Means Committee. This committee did the best that it could. It considered all of the testimony. It granted all the relief it could commensurate with the needs of the Government for revenue. If we strike one article out after another, there will be no revenue left. I appeal to the House to stand by the bill in respect to the repeal of the excise taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has so well said, the committee thought the jewelry industry made a good case. Take the matter of musical instruments, for example. A small amount of silvering is used on the mouthpiece and to make the instruments sanitary, and that caused the tax of 5 per cent to be levied on the entire value of the instrument. The silvering might not be worth more than 10 cents and the instrument might cost $100. It would add a tax of $5 for the 10 cents worth of precious metal on the instrument. Small articles, like canes and umbrellas, with small bands of silver around them are taxed 5 per cent on the entire value of the article. In hardware stores they are compelled to carry a small quantity of silver-plated ware in order to furnish complete house furnishings at one place. The cost of keeping the accounts for the sales of these small items of silver-plated ware is greater than the amount of profit made upon the entire sale of the articles. Then the jewelry stores suffer from competition with traveling salesmen who do not pay any local taxes or rents, but who compete with the local jewelers in the sale of articles and also evade the tax. The average rate of profit for the entire industry was very small. We concluded that the jewelers had made a good case, that a great many people would be benefited by the relief from this tax on articles we never had intended to tax, such as musical instruments, but we were unable to relieve the industry to the extent of more than $13,000,000. We asked the representatives of the industry to appear before our subcommittee and we told them the fact that we could relieve them to the extent of $13,000,000, but that for the present $7,000,000 would need to be retained, although we greatly regretted the necessity that compelled us to take such action. Therefore we limited the tax in this way. Articles up to $40 do not pay a tax; that is, any single article costing $40 or less, no matter what it is, will pay no tax. Watches up to $60 will not pay a tax. Articles costing more than $40 or watches costing more than $60 will pay a tax of 5 per cent.

Eyeglasses, surgical instruments, spectacles, flat tableware, and silver-plated musical instruments at any price are entirely exempt. Now, if some one chooses to buy a $600,000 black-pearl necklace why not impose a tax on that? When any of these gifts run to $10,000 or $100,000 there is no reason in the world why this small tax should not be levied.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the more you study this bill the madder you get. All my life I have insisted that everybody should be treated alike. It makes no difference to me if he is the richest man in the world or the poorest; and if anybody is to be given preference, then the latter. The same is true of business. This bill does not do that.

This bill eliminates all excise taxes on fans, pocketbooks, yachts, carpets and rugs, hand bags, purses, trunks, hunting garments, livery and livery boots, portable light fixtures, dirk knives, candy, telegraph and telephone messages, seating capacity of theaters, circuses, aggregation of entertainments, cereal beverages, unfermented fruit juices, still drink, mineral waters, fountain sirups, and carbonic-acid gas. Heretofore all such taxes were removed from chewing gum, hair dye, and many other similar items, hundreds of which were and are admitted by everybody as wholly nonessentials and in most cases luxuries.

But what treatment is meted out to the automobile and jewelry business? They are merely reduced, and then not commensurate with the need. Now, I have no quarrel with anybody because the excise taxes heretofore mentioned have been eliminated; not at all. I favor the abolition of all such taxes. Certainly they ought to be deducted proportionally instead of wiping out some entirely and only partially reducing others. Especially is this unwise and unjust when the favored classes in many instances are nonessentials, whereas the reverse is true of automobiles. Every railroad man must have a high-priced watch and every betrothed couple an engagement and wedding ring, and so I could go on and on enumerating instances ad infinitum. It is no excuse to say that it can not be done, for this Government has not yet reached the point where it can not treat everybody exactly the same. If you have $300,000,000 in revenue in excise taxes and only $200,000,000 can be taken off, then take two-thirds off everybody and not all off some and none off others. If, however, that is the rule, then for heaven's sake do not relieve luxury first.

I maintain, however, that all excise taxes can be eliminated. You will, too, if you are fair and unbiased when you recall that a stock-dividend tax has been written in this bill, likewise a gift tax; the inheritance tax has been increased, and all in all enough revenue from these will be forthcoming to remove these nuisance taxes from industries that are being driven into bankruptcy and despair.

This question ought to be treated as a business matter, but I am blunt enough to say that if you do not give more consideration to industries actually in need of relief the last one of you will be driven from power, for you just as well remember what Lincoln said about fooling all the people all the time; it can not be done in this country any more. The business man is wide-awake and he cares not a tinker's iota what your politics may be; he expects you to practice what you preach. I am willing to be defeated if I break my word, and I hope every man here who breaks a promise will receive the same verdict. These excise taxes ought to be removed and in the place of them get your taxes from these other sources already written in the bill. When you do that, and then economize in the operation of the Government, you will find that there is revenue sufficient and these nuisance taxes unnecessary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, when an industry comes before the Committee on Ways and Means asking that a tax on a luxury be reduced and the committee takes half of the tax off with the understanding that there will not be any further trouble—and I am not referring now to the gentleman from New York—what we ought to do, when they do make trouble, is to put the tax back for the full amount. [Applause.]

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What we are doing in this bill with reference to automobile accessories is to put a tax on the tire of the poor fellow who blows one out; but here is a proposal to take the tax off the $5,000 necklace or a $50,000 diamond. I hope the amendment will be voted down. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOWELL). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out on line 2, page 170, the words "jewelry, whether real or imitation."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FAIRCHILD: Page 170, beginning in line 2, strike out the words "jewelry, whether real or imitation."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no further debate, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VII.—Special taxes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Virginia: Insert under Title VII, Special taxes, after line 3, page 174, the following independent section:

"Gifts, advances, subscriptions, payments, contributions, and expenditures made in behalf of, or in opposition to, or for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, the nomination or defeat, or the election or defeat of, any candidate or candidates for the office of President, Vice President, Senator, or Representative, or presidential or vice presidential elector, or for use in, or in respect to, any convention, primary, or election in which there is nominated or elected a candidate for any of the aforesaid offices, shall be subject to special taxes as follows: When the aggregate thereof made by any person during the year to which the return hereinafter mentioned applies exceeds the sum of $5,000, such person shall pay thereon a tax equal to 50 per cent of such excess. In order to minimize confusion and expense in administering this provision, it shall be the duty of every person who makes an income-tax return as hereinbefore provided in this act, to state the aggregate for the year to which the return applies of his gifts, advances, subscriptions, payments, contributions, and expenditures made as aforesaid, provided that when the aggregate does not exceed $1,000 no return thereof need be made. Any person willfully making a false return of such gifts, advances, contributions, and expenditures shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $1,000, and, in addition, the individual, member, official, or employee of a partnership, corporation, trust, or estate willfully making such false return shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned not less than 30 days nor more than one year."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, that it is not germane to the section or germane to the bill, and is in fact a sort of corrupt practice act, intended to regulate elections. The gentleman who is ordinarily in the chair has ruled out a very similar provision; a provision very similar, so far as the principle is concerned; an amendment to regulate rents, offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN]. The Chair said it was the duty of the Chair to look into the real purpose of an amendment offered, and if it were not in fact a tax provision, to sustain the point of order. The Chair not only sustained the point of order but the committee sustained the Chair.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will only occupy a few minutes in stating the case.

This amendment is similar to but not the same as the amendments I heretofore offered. This amendment, like the others, has reference to those who contribute to campaign funds; but, unlike the others, imposes a tax not of 100 per cent on the excess over $5,000 but a tax of 50 per cent.

It was said with respect to the previous amendments that they were not germane, because they were in the nature of a subterfuge and did not really relate to the subject of taxation; and incidental to that it was said that they dealt with a matter covered by our corrupt-practice legislation.

On the latter point it will be admitted that there is no legislation in effect that fixes a limit upon or penalizes contributions, except those made by candidates themselves.

[At this point Mr. DOWELL retired from the chair and Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois resumed the chair.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, to repeat what I have already said——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In a moment I will yield to the gentleman. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the present amendment is not the same in substance as the amendments heretofore offered by me.

The objection to the other amendments was that they were in the nature of a subterfuge, because they did not deal with the subject of taxation; and it was further said, to repeat once more, that they were of that character because they covered a matter dealt with in existing corrupt-practice statutes. But this, as I have explained, is not the fact.

The existing legislation refers to candidates and to committees. It directs that campaign committees shall file statements of contributions, and shall file those statements within 30 days after a campaign closes; and, by the way, it may be noted that if there is a deficit of, say, $1,000,000 in the funds of a national committee there is no legislation whatever that requires any showing of the contributions to the deficit if made after the 30-day period expires. So we have practically no legislation on the subject to which the present amendment relates.

Another point, Mr. Chairman. There is now no legislation whatever applicable to the nomination of candidates for Federal offices by conventions or in primaries, the Supreme Court having condemned the statutory provisions respecting nominations. My proposition includes not only elections but the nomination processes.

Further, Mr. Chairman, we are enacting revenue legislation; we are considering a tax bill; this amendment provides that any "person"—that is to say, any individual, corporation, estate, or trust—contributing in excess of $5,000 shall be subjected to a tax of 50 per cent upon the excess. Such a provision may produce revenue. In the Newberry case, as I recall, there was complete evidence of the relatives and friends of the candidate having subscribed some $200,000 to his campaign expenses. If this provision had been in effect at that time, it might have yielded the Government $100,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the proposed legislation had been in effect at the time Mr. Doheny contributed the sum of $200,000 to the Democrats, it would have yielded $100,000?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Perhaps so. And such contributions for political purposes are indefensible, whoever makes them.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the gentleman's argument. The gentleman from Virginia is not confining his argument to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman from Indiana is somewhat tempestuous in regard to this matter.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Virginia that he must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have simply used the Newberry case as illustrative of my view that the amendment is not subject to the point of order. By way of further illustration, I might refer to the effort to affect the nomination of candidates for the Presidency in 1920.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Virginia is not confining himself to the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does not the gentleman wish to consider these pertinent illustrations?

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. I want to get through with this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Ah, but is not the gentleman a little timid about this matter?

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. There will be plenty of time for the gentleman to make his speech after we get through with the tax bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am not anxious to make a speech. I have never been anxious to make a speech since my advent in this body, but I am anxious for legislation which may serve to minimize one of the gravest evils, one of the greatest perils confronting the country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Would it not be better for my friend, if he wants such legislation, to introduce a bill for that purpose and have it referred to the proper committee and considered by that committee at the proper place and proper time?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have had my experience in attempting legislation which might affect the plans and purposes of the party of which my friend is one of the leaders.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman a bill on this subject pending in the House?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Bills have been introduced.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But has the gentleman a bill pending?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have upon my table a bill that is pending before one of the committees and also a bill introduced at a previous session of Congress, but those bills do not reach the particular matter embraced by this amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So the gentleman himself has not introduced a bill of the kind which he seeks to inject into this revenue measure?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is no obligation on my part to do so, believing, as I do, that the necessary legislation is permissible here and now. But I shall not detain the committee longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair has heretofore on two different occasions ruled on this matter or similar matters, once when the gentleman from Virginia offered an amendment similar to this on a preceding occasion and the other when the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] offered an amendment on excess rents. The Chair thinks his conclusion in those cases was right and believes that the same reasoning which was then applied applies to the amendment before the committee now, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAPITAL STOCK TAX.

SEC. 700. (a) On and after July 1, 1924, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 1000 of the revenue act of 1921—

(1) Every domestic corporation shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business, equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of so much of the fair average value of its capital stock for the preceding year ending June 30 as is in excess of $5,000. In estimating the value of capital stock the surplus and undivided profits shall be included;

(2) Every foreign corporation shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business in the United States, equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of the average amount of capital employed in the transaction of its business in the United States during the preceding year ending June 30.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make a statement.

Mr. Chairman, if I had the information which the Treasury Department has at the present time I would offer an amendment to this section and undertake to get into the Treasury at least $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 additional revenue. I would do that for the purpose of trying to reach stock dividends which have been declared in the last four or five years, but being unable to get that information and being unable to describe the character of corporations on which I would levy an additional excise capital stock tax, I will not offer the amendment because I do not like to do something in the dark and not know the full force and effect of it. But this is one method by which we can reach stock dividends; the corporations which have been issuing their stock dividends can be reached in this way each year on their stock dividends and it would probably equal the tax they have avoided when they issued stock dividends under the decision of the Supreme Court. For instance, I could describe a domestic corporation as one which had issued a stock dividend within the last three years increasing its capital stock exceeding $100,000.

If I had all this information, as I say, I would offer an amendment here for the purpose of getting two or three hundred million dollars additional taxes from these corporations that in my judgment have avoided the tax by issuing stock dividends. I merely wanted to say this to the committee so that if I can secure the information some of these days I will undertake to reach these particular corporations.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. After this bill becomes a law, if it becomes a law, the gentleman will be able to get that information.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Just as soon as the next election is over we can get it, but we can not get it now.

Mr. DENISON. Then, of course, the gentleman will introduce that kind of a measure in the next Congress, if he has control of it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will give consideration to the matter of trying to reach corporations that are avoiding their taxes under the stock-dividends decision.

Mr. DENISON. We will await with interest to see what the gentleman does do when he gets control.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I am glad the gentleman will wait with interest.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska: Page 174, line 10, strike out the figure "1" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "2."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman care to be heard?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I do not care to be heard, Mr. Chairman. It is too patent; it is right. I do not care to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS OCCUPATIONAL TAXES.

SEC. 701. On and after July 1, 1924, there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually the following special taxes—

(1) Brokers shall pay $50. Every person whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stock, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank notes, promissory notes, other securities, produce, or merchandise for others shall be regarded as a broker. If a broker is a member of a stock exchange, or if he is a member of any produce exchange, board of trade, or similar organization, where produce or merchandise is sold, he shall pay an additional amount as follows: If the average value, during the preceding year ending June 30, of a seat or membership in such exchange or organization was $2,000 or more but not more than $5,000, $100; if such value was more than $5,000, $150.

(2) Pawnbrokers shall pay $100. Every person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money loaned thereon, shall be regarded as a pawnbroker.

(3) Ship brokers shall pay $50. Every person whose business it is as a broker to negotiate freights and other business for the owners of vessels or for the shippers or consignors or consignees of freight carried by vessels, shall be regarded as a ship broker.

(4) Customhouse brokers shall pay $50. Every person whose occupation it is, as the agent of others, to arrange entries and other customhouse papers, or transact business at any port of entry relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded as a customhouse broker.

(5) Proprietors of bowling alleys and billiard rooms shall pay $5 for each alley or table. Every building or place where bowls are thrown or where games of billiards or pool are played, shall be regarded as a bowling alley or a billiard room, respectively, unless no charge is made for the use of the alleys or tables.

(6) Proprietors of shooting galleries shall pay $20. Every building, space, tent, or area where a charge is made for the discharge of firearms at any form of target shall be regarded as a shooting gallery.

(7) Proprietors of riding academies shall pay $100. Every building, space, tent, or area where a charge is made for instruction in horsemanship or for facilities for the practice of horsemanship shall be regarded as a riding academy: Provided, That this tax shall not be collected from associations composed exclusively of members of units of the Federalized National Guard or the Organized Reserve and whose receipts are used exclusively for the benefits of such units.

(8) Persons carrying on the business of operating or renting passenger automobiles for hire shall pay $10 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than two and not more than seven, and $20 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than seven. The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not be collected in respect of automobiles used exclusively for conveying school children to and from school.

(9) Every person carrying on the business of a brewer, distiller, wholesale liquor dealer, retail liquor dealer, wholesale dealer in malt liquor, retail dealer in malt liquor, or manufacturer of stills, as defined in section 3244 as amended and section 3247 of the Revised Statutes, in any State, Territory, or District of the United States contrary to the laws of such State, Territory, or District, or in any place therein in which carrying on such business is prohibited by local or municipal law, shall pay, in addition to all other taxes, special or otherwise, imposed by existing law or by this act, $1,000. The payment of the tax imposed by this subdivision shall not be held to exempt any person from any penalty or punishment provided for by the laws of any State, Territory, or District for carrying on such business in such State, Territory, or District, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such business contrary to the laws of such State, Territory, or District, or in places prohibited by local or municipal law.

If any person first become subject to the tax imposed by subdivision (1), (2), (3), or (4) after December 31, he shall pay for the fiscal year in which he first becomes subject to the tax only one-half the tax specified in such subdivision.

The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of persons upon whom a corresponding tax is imposed by section 1001 of the revenue act of 1921, be in lieu of such tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 178, line 17, after the figures "31," insert "in any fiscal year," and in lines 18 and 19 strike out "for the fiscal year in which he first becomes subject to the tax" and insert "for such fiscal year."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is merely a clarifying amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska: On page 175, line 12, after the word "pay," strike out the figures "50" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "100."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out paragraph 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: On page 177, beginning with line 13, strike out all of subparagraph (8).

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how much revenue this paragraph yields the Government. I would be glad to have the chairman of the committee enlighten us on that, but

I do not think the Federal Government ought to collect a license fee from jitney drivers and others operating automobiles for hire. They have to pay very many different taxes. Some of them pay, in some parts of the country, 8 or 10 different kinds of taxes—Federal, State, and municipal—and it seems to me that Congress could very well afford to grant some little relief to jitney drivers. I do not think this paragraph yields the Government a very great amount of revenue, but it amounts to a whole lot to the men who are trying to make a living carrying passengers at 25 or 50 cents apiece. This is one form of transportation. We have taken off the tax on other forms of transportation, and it seems to me we might well take it off this one.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman understands that this is the present law?

Mr. DENISON. I understand that.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And it yields to the Treasury about $2,000,000?

Mr. DENISON. Well, that is a $2,000,000 tax on transportation, is it not?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Well, probably it is.

Mr. DENISON. It is, of course, and we have taken it off of the railroads and other forms of transportation. Why not take it off of the jitneys? The United States Government does not have to collect this tax from the poor jitney men and others who earn their living hauling people in automobiles in order to keep functioning.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I might answer the gentleman by asking why not take it off of everything?

Mr. DENISON. You have taken it off of all other forms of transportation. Why pick on the jitney drivers?

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. HAWLEY. In the case of the street car or the railroad train, they have to buy their right of way, obtain their franchise, build their road, and maintain it, while the jitney driver has his road built and maintained for him.

Mr. DENISON. The jitney driver pays his part of the expense of building roads. The jitney driver has to pay a license tax to the city wherein he operates, a local personal property tax, and I think we ought to leave it to the municipalities to collect this form of taxes. He has to pay a tax to the city and he has to pay a license tax to the State; he has to pay local taxes, personal property taxes, and he has to pay the automobile tax when he buys his car; if he has a smash-up and knocks off a fender or breaks a spring, he has to pay Uncle Sam another tax when he replaces these parts; and we are now charging him a Federal license for operating his car. I think it is an outrage, and I do not think we ought to impose it any longer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. If the gentleman wants to have these matters corrected, he ought to go to the several States that are putting the large taxes on these men.

I move that all debate on this subsection and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JEFFERS: Page 175, line 15, after the word "securities" strike out "produce or merchandise."

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Chairman, the imposition of this occupational tax of $50 per year on persons who sell produce or merchandise, such as groceries, meats, grain, and so forth, for others on a commission basis ought not to be continued any longer.

The term "broker" is applied to these little fellows, while as a matter of fact they are really nothing more than salesmen. They sell produce and foodstuffs for others for a small commission and they carry no stock of goods themselves.

You all know the class of men that this affects. A man has a little cubby-hole of an office where he keeps his books and accounts and perhaps he has a telephone in there, but he carries no goods in stock. So, as I say, he is really nothing more than a salesman for others.

In fact, such a man is always in direct competition with salesmen who do not have to pay this Federal tax known as an occupational tax. But the resident salesmen who has the cubby-hole of an office and a telephone is called a broker and upon him is imposed this penalty of $50 per year in the form of a so-called occupational tax.

Now, this is clearly discriminatory, and it appears to me that it is undoubtedly unfair. It is a situation which ought to be corrected at this time.

I am informed that the average net earnings of these so-called brokers in my State is probably less than $2,000 per year. It appears to me that it is not a fair proposition that this class of salesmen are singled out and required to pay this Federal occupational tax, especially in view of the fact that other salesmen with whom these men are in competition are not required to pay it. Of coursé, I am not suggesting that this occupational tax be inflicted upon traveling salesmen at all; but I think it is time now to take it off of these resident salesmen. It seems to me that it would be fair to remove it now from them.

Here are two men, both selling the same lines on a commission basis in direct competition with each other, selling goods to the same trade in the same market, both selling food and produce at the price specified by the shipper, one called a salesman and the other called a broker, and a $50 annual penalty collected by the Government from the latter class but not from the former.

In common fairness I believe this little discriminatory tax certainly ought to come off. Arbitrary taxes of this nature, like excise taxes, commonly termed "nuisance" taxes, constitute what we might properly call the obstructive and vexatious underbrush in the system of taxation, and in beginning the reform or revision of Federal taxation I believe that we ought to pay particular attention now to the clearing away, just as far as we consistently can, of this troublesome underbrush.

Besides the fact that this discriminatory tax is not capable of equitable administration, let me say that the total amount of revenue secured by the Government from the number of these salesmen, from whom the Government does collect this tax, is comparatively small. There are not over 3,000 of these small business people in the country who have to suffer this so-called occupational tax, so it does not affect many people and does not amount to a great amount of revenue after all.

I wish to read, in support of my contention, parts of two letters, which letters I shall insert in the RECORD with these few remarks.

One is from the National Food Brokers' Association, as follows:

NATIONAL FOOD BROKERS' ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Indianapolis, Ind., February 27, 1924.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JEFFERS: The members of the National Food Brokers' Association request and urge an amendment to section 701, paragraph 1, H. R. 6715, to strike out the occupational tax covering foodstuffs brokers.

The occupational tax of $50 which is assessed against food brokers is discriminatory, is not capable of equitable administration, yields a revenue of $185,000 as a maximum, is a war tax which has no place in a peace time bill.

The food broker, who sells produce and merchandise, is in reality the resident sales agent for a number of manufacturers, canners, packers, and other producers of merchandise and foodstuffs which are sold through the wholesale grocery trade. His compensation is a small percentage of the gross amount of the sale, ranging usually from 2 per cent to 3½ per cent. He does not buy or sell for his own account and renders the same service for many manufacturers that their own selling organization would be compelled to render at a much higher cost to the manufacturer, which would naturally be carried on to the consumer. The food broker, therefore, should not be taxed for being in business any more than it is proper to assess a license or tax against a doctor, lawyer, clothier, grocer, butcher, or any other merchant simply because he is a merchant of that class.

Many food brokers, since this tax was assessed, have set up successfully the claim that they are not brokers but manufacturers' sales agents, which, as a matter of fact, they are. Others making no such claim and yet operating in identically the same manner are compelled to pay this tax.

The official or recognized trade register lists 3,655 food, produce, and merchandise brokers in the United States. Not all of these, as explained in the foregoing, pay the tax, so that in the end the gross revenue to the Government is comparatively an inconsequential item.

This tax was first written into the revenue law to apply to food brokers in 1917 as a war-revenue producer, and since the country is now at peace it is unfair to continue to assess this tax against one class of business men who render an essential service in a most economical manner and not assess all classes of business men as such.

Yours respectfully,

NATIONAL FOOD BROKERS' ASSOCIATION,
PAUL FISHBACK, Secretary.

You see that it is pointed out that this so-called occupational tax on these little fellows could not possibly yield more than $185,000 as a maximum, and very likely not that much, from these resident salesmen of foodstuffs, meats, grain, and such produce.

Then the following letter from a gentleman in Alabama, written in August, 1922, gives us the point of view of the citizens who are affected by this $50 occupational tax:

SELMA, ALA., August 3, 1922.

Hon. LAMAR JEFFERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

FRIEND JEFFERS: Representing the merchandise brokers or manufacturers' agents of Alabama, I am instructed to take up with you the unjustness of the license tax being collected from brokers selling groceries, grain, etc., in this State, and ask you to take this matter up with the Internal Revenue Department and see if we can be relieved of this tax.

To begin with, this tax on merchandise brokers is a rank discrimination. There are hundreds of traveling men representing two or more firms on a commission basis, just as we brokers do, and selling in competition with us, who are not taxed as we are. Why?

* * * * * * *

Very few brokers are or have been able to make any money for several years because of the expense of doing business. The Government should not be a party to a discriminatory tax like this. Kindly take this matter up with the proper officials and oblige,

Sincerely yours,

RIVERS F. ROSS.

This may seem, gentlemen, to be but a minor matter, but to these citizens who are affected it is, of course, very important, both from the financial standpoint and as a matter of principle.

This tax is comparable with an excise or nuisance tax; it is clearly discriminatory; it is not equitable in itself and not capable of equitable administration; and I believe it would be nothing more than fair to strike it out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the committee gave this matter very careful consideration. The gentleman from Alabama speaks of it as a small matter. As far as the people he is concerned in it may be a small matter, but the effect of this amendment would be to eliminate a great portion of the tax, amounting to $1,000,000.

Mr. JEFFERS. Oh, no; it could not affect more than about 3,000 people, and they are comparatively small business men with modest incomes. It would not amount to more than $150,000 if they all paid.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has not examined the figures. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JEFFERS: Page 175, line 16, after the word "broker," where that word first appears, strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words: "Provided, That this shall not apply to anyone selling foodstuffs, produce, and merchandise for others on commission basis and not carrying a stock of such goods."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 175, line 23, after the figures "150," insert: "For the purposes of this section a farmer or grower of produce or merchandise and their agents shall not be regarded as brokers under this section in respect to the produce or merchandise produced by him."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the debate on this paragraph is closed, but I ask for two or three minutes to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall be obliged to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LOZIER: Page 175, line 23, after the comma following the words or figures "$5,000" strike out "$150" and the period and insert in lieu thereof the following: "but not more than $10,000, $200; if such value was more than $10,000, but not more than $20,000, $250; if such value was more than $20,000, but not more than $30,000, $300; if such value was more than $30,000, but not more than $40,000, $350; if such value was more than $40,000, but not more than $50,000, $450; if such value was more than $50,000, $500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Debate has been closed on this section.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understood the Chair to say paragraph, and that would mean paragraph (1). The motion of the gentleman from Iowa was to close debate on this paragraph and that does not mean section.

The CHAIRMAN. The section was read as one paragraph and was so treated.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It has been so treated all through the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Well, I simply want to ask the chairman a question for information, and under the rules of this House or any dictionary a paragraph is a paragraph and not a section. I do not care whether it was read all together or a line at a time, the motion was to close debate on a paragraph, and a paragraph is a paragraph and that means paragraph (1).

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Texas says he wants information, and as he needs it badly enough we ought to let him have it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am asking for information from the gentleman from Iowa. I never would approach the gentleman from Ohio if that was my purpose. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will not the gentleman postpone his inquiry until the next paragraph?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But my inquiry applies to this paragraph.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not want to set a precedent, and if I yield to the gentleman now I will have to yield to others.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I really am in need of information as I do not carry it all around with me as the gentleman from Ohio seemingly does. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

PENALTY FOR NONPAYMENT OF SPECIAL TAXES.

SEC. 704. Any person who carries on any business or occupation for which a special tax is imposed by section 700, 701, or 702, without having paid the special tax therein provided, shall, besides being liable for the payment of such special tax, be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROSENBLOOM offers the following amendment: On page 182, after the word "both," line 14, insert the following:

"SECTION 704-A.—TAX ON OIL.

"That on and after the day following the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid, upon the articles described in the following sections, when imported from any foreign country into the United States, or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), the rates of tax which are prescribed in said sections.

"SECTION 1. Petroleum, crude, 35 cents per barrel of 42 gallons; fuel oil, 25 cents per barrel of 42 gallons.

"SEC. 2. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with said section 704-A are hereby repealed."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section or germane to the bill, but, in fact, is an amendment to the tariff law.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Chairman, of course I claim that this is not an amendment to the section. It creates a new section. It is a new item, and it covers no administrative features at all. It is a specific tax. The purpose of the bill before the House is to obtain revenue. It is a special tax under the provisions of the revenue bill and does not seek to amend any particular item, but creates a new item.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the tax is not levied on the article as a commodity, but it is levied upon it because it comes in from other countries, and it is purely a tariff provision.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOWELL). The Chair thinks that the amendment must be germane to the paragraph and to the bill and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE VIII.—STAMP TAXES.

SEC. 800. There shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect of the several bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock and of indebtedness and other documents, instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in Schedule A of this title, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments, matters, or things, or any of them, are written or printed, by any person who makes, signs, issues, sells, removes, consigns, or ships the same, or for whose use or benefit the same are made, signed, issued, sold, removed, consigned, or shipped, the several taxes specified in such schedule. The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of any article upon which a corresponding stamp tax is now imposed by law, be in lieu of such tax.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 191, line 4, strike out the word "There" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "On and after the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act there."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 807. Each collector shall furnish, without prepayment, to any assistant treasurer or designated depositary of the United States, located in the district of such collector, a suitable quantity of adhesive stamps to be kept on sale by such assistant treasurer or designated depositary.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 195, line 20, before the word "each" insert "(a)".

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE A.—STAMP TAXES.

1. Bonds of indebtedness: On all bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness issued by any person, and all instruments, however termed, issued by any corporation with interest coupons or in registered form, known generally as corporate securities, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents: Provided, That every renewal of the foregoing shall be taxed as a new issue: Provided further, That when a bond conditioned for the repayment or payment of money is given in a penal sum greater than the debt secured, the tax shall be based upon the amount secured.

2. Capital stock, issued: On each original issue, whether on organization or reorganization, of certificates of stock, or of profits, or of interest in property or accumulations, by any corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents: Provided, That where a certificate is issued without face value, the tax shall be 5 cents per share, unless the actual value is in excess of $100 per share, in which case the tax shall be 5 cents on each $100 of actual value or fraction thereof, or unless the actual value is less than $100 per share, in which case the tax shall be 1 cent on each $20 of actual value or fraction thereof.

The stamps representing the tax imposed by this subdivision shall be attached to the stock books and not to the certificates issued.

3. Capital stock, sales or transfers: On all sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales or deliveries of, or transfers of legal title to shares or certificates of stock or of profits or of interest in property or accumulations in any corporation, or to rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares or certificates, whether made upon or shown by the books of the corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale, whether entitling the holder in any manner to the benefit of such stock, interest, or rights, or not, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents, and where such shares are without par or face value, the tax shall be 2 cents on the transfer or sale or agreement to sell on each share: Provided, That it is not intended by this title to impose a tax upon an agreement evidencing a deposit of certificates as collateral security for money loaned thereon, which certificates are not actually sold, nor upon the delivery or transfer for such purpose of certificates so deposited, nor upon mere loans of stock nor upon the return of stock so loaned: Provided further, That the tax shall not be imposed upon deliveries or transfers to a broker for sale, nor upon deliveries or transfers by a broker to a customer for whom and upon whose order he has purchased same, but such deliveries or transfers shall be accompanied by a certificate setting forth the facts: Provided further, That in case of sale where the evidence of transfer is shown only by the books of the corporation the stamp shall be placed upon such books; and where the change of ownership is by transfer of the certificate the stamp shall be placed upon the certificate; and in cases of an agreement to sell or where the transfer is by delivery of the certificate assigned in blank there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale, to which the stamp shall be affixed; and every bill or memorandum of sale or agreement to sell before mentioned shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers. Any person liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person, who makes any such sale, or who in pursuance of any such sale delivers any certificate or evidence of the sale of any stock, interest, or right, or bill or memorandum thereof, as herein required, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

4. Produce, sales of, on exchange: Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell (not including so-called transferred or scratch sales), any products or merchandise at, or under the rules or usages of, any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, for future delivery, for each $100 in value of the merchandise covered by said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 1 cent, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent: Provided, That on every sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell as aforesaid there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, to which there shall be affixed a lawful stamp or stamps in value equal to the amount of the tax on such sale: Provided further, That sellers of commodities described herein, having paid the tax provided by this subdivision, may transfer such contracts to a clearing-house corporation or association, and such transfer shall not be deemed to be a sale, or agreement of sale, or an agreement to sell within the provisions of this act, provided that such transfer shall not vest any beneficial interest in such clearing-house association but shall be made for the sole purpose of enabling such clearing-house association to adjust and balance the accounts of the members of such clearing-house association on their several contracts. Every such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale or agreement to sell shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers; and any person liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person, who makes any such sale or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, or who, in pursuance of any such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, delivers any such products or merchandise without a bill, memorandum, or other evidence thereof as herein required, or who delivers such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale, or agreement to sell, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

No bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, in case of cash sales of products of merchandise for immediate or prompt delivery which in good faith are actually intended to be delivered shall be subject to this tax.

This subdivision shall not affect but shall be in addition to the provision of the "United States cotton futures act," approved August 11, 1916, as amended, and "the future trading act," approved August 24, 1921.

5. Drafts or checks (payable otherwise than at sight or on demand) upon their acceptance or delivery within the United States whichever is prior, promisory notes, except bank notes issued for circulation, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents; and for each additional $100, or fractional part thereof, 2 cents.

This subdivision shall not apply to a promissory note secured by the pledge of bonds or obligations of the United States issued after April 24, 1917, or secured by the pledge of a promissory note which itself is secured by the pledge of such bonds or obligations: Provided, That in either case the par value of such bonds or obligations shall be not less than the amount of such note.

6. Conveyances: Deed, instrument, or writing, whereby any lands, tenements, or other realty sold shall be granted, assigned, transferred, or otherwise conveyed to, or vested in, the purchaser or purchasers, or any other person or persons, by his, her, or their direction, when the consideration or value of the interest or property conveyed, exclusive of the value of any lien or encumbrance remaining thereon at the time of sale, exceeds $100 and does not exceed $500, 50 cents; and for each additional $500 or fractional part thereof, 50 cents. This subdivision shall not apply to any instrument or writing given to secure a debt.

7. Entry of any goods, wares, or merchandise at any customhouse, either for consumption or warehousing, not exceeding $100 in value, 25 cents; exceeding $100 and not exceeding $500 in value, 50 cents; exceeding $500 in value, $1.

8. Entry for the withdrawal of any goods or merchandise from customs bonded warehouse, 50 cents.

9. Passage ticket, one way or round trip, for each passenger, sold or issued in the United States for passage by any vessel to a port or place not in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, if costing not exceeding $30, $1; costing more than $30 and not exceeding $60, $3; costing more than $60, $5. This subdivision shall not apply to passage tickets costing $10 or less.

10. Proxy for voting at any election for officers, or meeting for the transaction of business, of any corporation, except religious, educational, charitable, fraternal, or literary societies, or public cemeteries, 10 cents.

11. Power of attorney granting authority to do or perform some act for or in behalf of the grantor, which authority is not otherwise vested in the grantee, 25 cents. This subdivision shall not apply to any papers necessary to be used for the collection of claims from the United States or from any State for pensions, back pay, bounty, or for property lost in the military or naval service, nor to powers of attorney required in bankruptcy cases nor to powers of attorney contained in the application of those who become members of or policyholders in mutual insurance companies doing business on the interinsurance or reciprocal indemnity plan through an attorney in fact.

12. Playing cards: Upon every pack of playing cards containing not more than 54 cards, manufactured or imported, and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, a tax of 8 cents per pack.

13. On each policy of insurance, or certificate, binder, covering note, memorandum, cablegram, letter, or other instrument by whatever name called whereby insurance is made or renewed upon property within the United States (including rents and profits) against peril by sea or on inland waters or in transit on land (including transshipments and storage at termini or way points) or by fire, lightning, tornado, windstorm, bombardment, invasion, insurrection, or riot, issued to or for or in the name of a domestic corporation or partnership or an individual resident of the United States by any foreign corporation or partnership or any individual not a resident of the United States, when such policy or other instrument is not signed or countersigned by an officer or agent of the insurer in a State, Territory, or District of the United States within which such insurer is authorized to do business, a tax of 3 cents on each dollar, or fractional part thereof of the premium charged: Provided, That policies of reinsurance shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subdivision.

Any person to or for whom or in whose name any such policy or other instrument is issued, or any solicitor or broker acting for or on behalf of such person in the procurement of any such policy or other instrument, shall affix the proper stamps to such policy or other instrument, and for failure to affix such stamps with intent to evade the tax shall, in addition to other penalties provided therefor, pay a fine of double the amount of the tax.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COLLIER: Page 201, strike out paragraph (5) embraced in line 16 on page 201 to line 5 on page 202.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I stated in general debate that if no one else offered the amendment I would offer an amendment to strike out the tax on promissory notes. It is very difficult to find out what this tax really amounts to. I tried to find out at the Treasury Department, and I find that the tax on stamps, exclusive of capital-stock transfers, sales of produce, and playing cards, is $44,000,000. The $44,000,000, however, is collected from the tax on bonds, from capital stock issues, from conveyances, from drafts, from checks, from notes, from entries of goods or merchandise for consumption either in a warehouse or for housing in a warehouse or for withdrawals, for certain classes of passenger tickets on vessels, for proxies, for powers of attorney, on all debentures and certificates of indebtedness, so that it is impossible to tell what it is, and if any Member says, as one said to me, that this tax would cause an immense amount of loss in the revenue, he does not know what he is talking about, because I asked Mr. McCoy, who is a very great actuary, in reference to the tax on promissory notes, and he told me that it was impossible to segregate that tax.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Does it make any difference what amount of revenue this would bring into the Government? Does the gentleman believe that the old farmer who goes to the bank and renews his note every 90 days, as all of we farmers have to do, should pay a tax of 2 cents every time he borrows $100, in addition to the 10 per cent discount he has to pay?

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman from Texas with his usual clarity has explained the situation exactly.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I want to state that Mr. McCoy made the statement in the Ways and Means Committee two or three days before we reported the bill—remember I made the motion in the committee to strike it out—that the revenue loss could not be more than $10,000,000.

Mr. COLLIER. We have taken $13,000,000 off the jewelry tax. I supported that. We have taken $11,000,000 off the candy tax. I was glad to do that. We have taken about $10,000,000 off soft drinks, and I supported that proposition. In view of the fact that we have taken $1,185,000 off pool and billiard tables, we certainly ought not to quibble about a matter as important as taxing these promisory notes—taxing the misfortunes of men. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. We are anxious to get through with this bill, and I believe some other Members desire to talk, and I shall not take any more time.

Mr. HASTINGS. Every penny of this tax is paid by the borrower.

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, there is very little to add, I think, to what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] has already stated. I know that in my own case I appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means and urged specifically that the stamp taxes applicable to notes which the borrower must give should be removed. From my viewpoint at least, looking at the tax bills as they have come down to us from the war period, looking at all the methods of raising revenue, it seems to me that the most vicious of any tax that we have ever had upon the statute books is the tax upon the man, be he rich or poor, who has to go to a bank, or to his neighbor, or to some one else, to borrow money. Whether that borrowing be done for the purpose of paying for the necessaries of life or for the purpose of conducting a business, be it large or small, cuts no ice, for, as the colloquy has already shown, this tax is never paid by the banker or by the trust company or by the lender of the money, but is paid by the man who can least afford to do so. In the case of a man who deals with a bank, whether it is a State or national bank, he pays it, of course, not once a year, but three or four or five times a year; every time he renews his paper he has to pay it. Usually the paper can not be extended for more than 90 days at a time, and stamps must be attached to every renewal note. It is a substantial burden upon business as well as upon the borrower.

There are other features in connection with it that are absolutely ridiculous. Under the terms of this law you exempt, for instance, the borrower who gets money from the farm-loan bank from paying a tax on the notes he gives to the farm-loan bank. Under a decision of the Supreme Court, made just a few days ago, the Treasury Department has held that stamps need not be applied on notes given to the rural-credit organizations of the different States of the country. In continuing this tax you are maintaining a discrimination against the fellow who has not gilt-edged security that would be accepted by the Federal farm loan system or by the rural-credit banks of the State, but must go somewhere else to get the money. You are going to tax him and make him put up 2 cents for every $100 that may be secured by his mortgage, while some fellow who deals with an agency of the Federal Government or the State is exempt entirely from the provisions of the act. The amendment proposed ought to be passed unanimously without a dissenting vote. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Government actuary states within the past half hour that the amount of revenue that would be lost to the Government if this amendment prevailed would be $20,000,000.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. I was talking with one of the actuaries this forenoon, and he told me the amount would not be more than $10,000,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the estimate from Mr. McCoy within the past half hour that this amendment would lose $20,000,000 to the Treasury.

Mr. RUBEY. The amount that is paid out through the post offices of the country, as shown by the report, is only $11,000,000 on all these different objects, so that it must necessarily be less than $11,000,000 on the notes.

Mr. HAWLEY. But they get stamps from other sources than from the post office.

Mr. RUBEY. I know; but the banks and other people get most of their stamps from the post offices. And there is no doubt but that the amount of money that the Government gets from this source is considerably less than $10,000,000.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I would like to know where the gentleman from Oregon gets the information that it would be a $30,000,000 loss?

Mr. HAWLEY. I said that Mr. McCoy stated within the past half hour that the loss on this amendment, if carried out, would be $20,000,000.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield for one minute?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. The actuary told me that it would be absolutely impossible to get this information without getting reports from the banks of the country, because this could not possibly be segregated.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. The greater the amount of the tax, the greater the necessity for taking it off, does not the gentleman think, in view of the people who pay it?

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Government revenues were unlimited, if the streams of money pouring into the Treasury were inexhaustible, then we could reduce taxes ad libitum. But in addition to the reductions of excise taxes proposed by the committee, amounting to $108,000,000, we increased that by $23,600,000 in the reductions made in the automobile taxes; and here is a proposition to increase it by a further amount of $20,000,000, or $44,000,000 in all. The Treasury can not stand this drain. I would like to see all the stamp taxes taken away, but it is absolutely impossible. The Government must have the revenue.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Is it not agreed that you have more than made up all that you have lost by other provisions in the bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not agree to any such thing.

Mr. CROWTHER. Did not the Democratic leader announce that his plan would bring $100,000,000 more than the Mellon plan? Does not that give us considerable leeway on excise taxes?

Mr. HAWLEY. I must beg the gentleman's permission and differ with him on that.

Mr. CROWTHER. Nobody differs from him except my colleague and friend Mr. MILLS, and Mr. GARNER says that the Garner plan will raise $100,000,000 more than the Mellon plan.

Mr. HAWLEY. These observations as to what may happen are beside the mark. Here is a proposition to cause a further loss of revenue of $22,000,000 in excess of losses of revenue already made.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. Is it not known that the tax we put on cigarettes, the additional tax on cigarettes alone, will more than take care of the stamp tax on bonds and notes?

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman had heard my able exposition yesterday of that subject, he would know I had come to no such conclusion.

Mr. COLLIER. That was my misfortune.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Oregon. I would like to ask him what change this language makes in existing law with reference to drafts and checks.

Mr. HAWLEY. None.

Mr. WINGO. Have they ever taken up the question—and I understand from a gentleman that he is under the impression this is a new proposition—with reference to this phase of it: What the effect would be if you collected what this statute plainly authorizes, a tax on the deferred credits of every item that goes through the clearing system of the Federal reserve system.

Mr. HAWLEY. That question was not brought up in the committee.

Mr. WINGO. Because every check that goes through the Federal reserve system—millions of them—are not sight credits or demand credits; they are deferred credits of from one to four days. I think the maximum is four days; but, be that as it may, I want to call the attention of the committee to this: I do not care whether it is $20,000,000 or what it is that the Government gets. The great business of this country, the exchanges of commodities, and all exchanges of this country, are done on instruments on which would be imposed a great burden if you carried out the literal wording of that law; if you did that, you would impose a burden upon millions of transactions, impede the orderly transaction of business, and cost the banks and customers of banks in handling exchange transactions connected with the different commodities—manufacturing, wheat, and cotton—untold millions in trouble and expense.

Let us take the handling of wheat going through the process of milling; let us take transactions in connection with millions of feet of lumber which more often than otherwise is billed with the milling-in-transit provision. The Federal reserve banks have held that those are not demand obligations; that they are time obligations. That decision has been upheld not only as to every one of these instruments which are carried as bills of lading with milling in transit for lumber, but milling in transit for other commodities. Take the matter of cotton, where they gather the bills of lading, with compress in transit, at the compress points, and they take all the way from three days to six weeks.

If you agree that the decision of the Federal Reserve Board is right on that class of paper, and that the law officers of the Government are right, that that is time paper and not demand paper, then you are going to have a mare's nest raised by this that is full of possibilities and will harass and annoy those transactions to an extent 5 times your $20,000,000.

Why put this on here? There is not any distinction in principle between a tax on a draft payable at sight and one that is payable five days afterwards, is there? Not a bit. There is no difference in principle between a check that is payable on demand and a check that represents a deferred credit for five days, is there?

And everybody knows that when the proposal to place a tax on bank checks was threshed out you could not get anyone to defend it, and you have no man on this floor who will defend it now. But you have the same vicious principle in this law, and, as I say, it is not worth the $20,000,000 or $10,000,000, or whatever the actuary says you are going to get. As a matter of fact, if you would enforce the provisions of this law, you could get many times $20,000,000. If you enforce it on deferred credits, on checks running from one to four days, you can bring in millions.

Now, someone comes along and insists that be done. Do you suppose a Federal reserve bank wants to have any question about the paper it is handling because a stamp of 1 or 2 cents is not put on it? I just point that out as a question of principle, and the principle is bad, because it is a tax; it is a tax upon exchange instruments, and the theory of every economist is to try to make them as free from any burden as you possibly can and yet make them safe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to ask a question. I notice in this paragraph or subdivision that you have exempted all notes secured by bonds or obligations of the United States issued after April 24, 1917. Was that done on the theory that a stamp tax could not apply to such notes? I would like to ask that question of the gentleman from Oregon or of the chairman of the committee. What was the reason for exempting those notes?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that I understand it was originally done in order to facilitate the borrowing of money for the purpose of buying Government securities, and it has been retained for the purpose of renewing notes of that character.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman now concede that distinction ought not to exist?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that I would have no objection to that being stricken out.

Mr. COLLIER. And I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that that section is embodied in my amendment.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is what I understood.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to say that I have no interest in the provision and it is not a provision to which I have been giving my attention, but, as I understand, it was originally put in to facilitate the borrowing of money for the purchase of Federal securities.

Mr. YOUNG. I will say to the gentleman that that applies to every mortgage given to the Federal farm loan banks.

Mr. McKEOWN. I was just going to say that this is a distinction that ought not to exist. You permit the man with the large money, who has his money in tax-exempt securities, to escape absolutely through a provision for the benefit of the ultra rich, and as the committee says they are in favor of striking that out, the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to strike the whole thing out ought to be sustained. If you are going to reduce taxes, why not give the fellow who is unfortunate a chance in life? He is the man who has to pay this tax. If you go down to the banks, they do not pay the stamp tax, but you pay it; the man who makes the note has to pay it. There ought not to be any objection to striking this out and making it up from some other provision, for instance, taxing mah jong and a few other things like that. In that way we might raise some money and raise it better than we could in this way. I do not want to take up any further time of the committee because the committee wants to get through, but I say that you can tax mah jong and a few of those things, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD] and can make up whatever shortage you may have in the Treasury. I think the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi ought to be sustained, and before I take my seat, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask that the motion to strike out be divided as between section 5 and the subdivision on page 202.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not quite understand. The motion, as the Chair understands, applies to subsection (5).

Mr. McKEOWN. And also to the subdivision over on page 202. The motion to strike out applies to both of them.

Mr. HASTINGS. If my colleague will yield, he could reach that in a parliamentary way by offering that as an amendment to the amendment and then you would be certain to get a separate vote upon it.

Mr. McKEOWN. I was going to ask the Chairman if I could not have a separate vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the proper way to do it would be to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. McKEOWN. Then I offer a motion to strike out from line 23, on page 201, through line 4, on page 202.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers a preferential motion to perfect the section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 202, line 23, strike out all of lines 23 to 25, on page 201, and all of lines 1 to 4, on page 202.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

The question was taken, and on a division [demanded by Mr. YOUNG], there were—ayes 76, nays 10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, how much time has been exhausted, may I ask, on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Sixteen minutes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not wish to preclude my friend from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], who has an amendment to another subsection, but I simply want to state in the time allotted to me that an amendment to strike out the tax on promissory notes was prepared several days ago by my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK], who called the matter to the attention of the Members of the House through a letter giving a lucid explanation of the amendment.

It would be immaterial to me, gentlemen of the House, what amount of revenue this would raise. If it would raise twice the amount estimated by the gentleman from Oregon, about which I think he is incorrect, because I think the gentleman from Arkansas in stating the amount as $10,000,000 is correct, according to the information I have—but it would be immaterial to me as to the amount, because a penalty upon commercial transactions of this character should not remain in this bill. If you have to raise the revenue that this would lose, let us levy it in the way of luxury taxes, and not upon transactions of this character and upon the small business man and farmer, who are forced to borrow money and renew frequently. Place your tax upon those able to bear the burdens, and upon articles of luxury and not those of necessity.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee this question: I understand that a time limit has been placed upon all amendments to this paragraph, and I want to take up for just a few moments paragraph 12, on page 203, on playing cards. The tax there is 8 cents for each package or for each deck, as I understand it. Does that mean each deck?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. Why was that made 8 cents? Why did you not make it 10 cents?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We thought we had put on as much as the traffic would bear.

Mr. RUBEY. How much does this raise?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not the figures before me. Nobody asked for any change, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. RUBEY. I just wanted to know what it raised. It seems to me you could facilitate the collection of this money by making it 10 cents.

Mr. HAWLEY. The amount collected was $3,385,000.

Mr. RUBEY. You would raise pretty nearly another million dollars if you made it 10 cents, and I will move to make that 10 cents when the proper time comes, and I hope the gentleman will help us that much.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me call the attention of my friend to the fact that the farmers use these cards. [Laughter.] We have heard so much about taxing the farmer. Surely he is not going to put a tax on these playing cards so that when a poor farmer goes in to buy a pack of them he will pay a tax which would amount to as much as he would pay on promissory notes in a year.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Would not the gentleman also offer an amendment taxing mah-jong sets?

Mr. RUBEY. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman will have to find out about them.

Mr. RUBEY. Yes; the gentleman will have to tell me about them.

Mr. Chairman, I am strongly in favor of the amendment offered to strike out section 5 and I hope it will carry. When we get through with that I am going to move to change the figure "8" to figure "10," in the paragraph relating to the tax on playing cards, and we will get a little bit more money back to take the place of what we may lose here. It will not be so very much, but something.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I come from an agricultural district and nearly nine-tenths of the people who live in my district are farmers, but when you talk about the farmer paying any very great amount of tax under this provision it is entirely a mistake. A farmer goes in and borrows $100 for 90 days and pays a 2-cent tax, and then he goes out and buys a 5-cent cigar and pays twice as much as he paid on the note, and pays more than enough to last him six months on what he has borrowed.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield? I want to say to the gentleman that our farmers do not smoke cigars, but smoke the old-fashioned Missouri meerschaum—the corn-cob pipe.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is probably better, but I can not say about that. Of course, when a farmer puts a good-sized loan on his farm he has some considerable tax to pay on that, but when it is distributed over a period of five years it does not amount to very much. This tax is the easiest collected of any tax that we have on our statute books. It costs the Government practically nothing to collect it. It gives the borrower, who has to put the stamp on a promisory note, a little trouble to lick the stamp and pay what it costs, but the expense to the small borrower is insignificant. He would not pay, on an average, more than 15 or 20 cents a year at the outside.

It is proposed seriously that we lose at least $10,000,000 revenue and probably more—some gentlemen estimated it at $20,000,000—by taking this tax off. The tax is so small that it does not really seriously affect anybody, and I do not see any good reason why it should be taken off.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I dare say that a large part of the tax is paid by corporations who borrow money by millions in the banks of the large cities. The packers and the grain people borrow large sums of money on 60 and 90 days' time, and I think they pay the most of this tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes, I have no doubt they pay the bulk of the tax, and the farmers pay an insignificant amount.

Mr. WINGO. The money borrowed by the great corporations is not payable on a specific date.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know about that. I never held one of their notes and I don't know that I ever saw one.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Illinois is talking about speculative loans. A note payable on demand is not taxable under this.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A check and draft is one thing and a note is a different thing.

Mr. WINGO. Take a draft payable on demand; you do not tax that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true.

Mr. YOUNG. A mortgage note for $2,500 for five years, the farmer would pay 10 cents a year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I think the amendment ought to be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] has an amendment on another proposition, and the Chair will put the motion now pending on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GREEN of Iowa) there were 82 ayes and 76 noes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. COLLIER and Mr. HAWLEY as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 101 ayes and 89 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee: On page 202, line 12, after the word "exceeds," strike out the language "$100 and does not exceed $500" and insert "$5,000 and does not exceed $5,500."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I make the point of order that the debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. No; there are six minutes left.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the present law and the bill as reported imposes a tax of 50 cents on every $500 or any part thereof in a land transfer. If the amendment proposed by me should be adopted, it would simply commence the tax at $5,000 instead of at $100, or, in other words, it would make exempt from this tax a transfer of land in any amount up to $5,000.

Criticisms have been directed during the consideration of the bill to different items in the bill upon the ground that such constituted an invasion of methods employed by the States to raise revenue. Of all methods employed by States to raise revenue all will agree that the most important and productive is the tax upon land. I presume it is true that in every State in the Union by far the largest portion of the State, county, and municipal taxes are raised by a tax upon land.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does not the gentleman think that the fellow who is fortunate enough to be able to sell land should be willing to pay a little tax?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I believe we should encourage the man who wants to purchase the land for a home in this country. This will relieve the small farm owners and small home owners and the man who wants to purchase a farm or home. A land sale is very burdensome. To begin with, the seller of the land in any amount must procure the services of a lawyer or an abstractor to prepare an abstract. Then he must pay for having a deed drawn and for the acknowledgments of the vendors. Then the purchaser must have the deed recorded and pay for that. He must also pay the county or State transfer tax. So that by the time it is all completed it is an expensive proposition, and especially to the small transfer. All these expenses apply to small land sales as well as to large ones. I think it is an undue burden on land. It is an invasion of the method of all others that is chiefly employed by various local jurisdictions for the purpose of raising revenue.

Intangible property to a large extent escapes taxes, but the lands never escape. The tax assessor and the tax collector can always see the land, and it is always assessed. It is assessed for practically every character of tax imposed by any of the local jurisdictions. It was inserted in the tax law of the Federal Government purely and solely as a war measure, not having been previously there since it was imposed soon after the Civil War, and as it was repealed after the Civil War. I respectfully submit that we have now reached the time, some six years after the late war, when it should now be repealed or at least amended to the extent of exempting the first $5,000 on any land sale. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. There has been no reduction whatever in this item, as the gentleman has stated inferentially.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for that contribution. They have made reductions upon various other matters, including luxuries of various kinds, and yet they have permitted the stamp tax upon land to continue just as it has been all of the time and as it was drafted in the original war revenue act. I respectfully insist on behalf of the great home-owning class, and upon behalf of the great farming class, that they are entitled to this modest relief. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 66, noes 76.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee and Mr. CHINDBLOM to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 203, line 23, strike out the figure "8" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "10."

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, is there any time left for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has been exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RUBEY) there were—ayes 75, noes 58.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraphs be renumbered to correspond with the action of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the paragraphs be renumbered to conform with the action of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ALLGOOD: Page 202, line 24, strike out the words "Canada or," line 25, strike out the word "Mexico," and line 25, change "$30" to "$10."

Page 203, line 1, change, "$30" to "$10," change "$60" to "$30," change "$3" to "$9," change "$60" to "$30," change "$5" to "$15."

Strike out lines 2 and 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 900, all of Title IX, be read through, until the end without prejudice to offering an amendment to any portion of the title.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that section 900 and all of Title IX be read through to the end without prejudice to any amendment which may be offered to any paragraph contained within it. Is there objection?

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard and the clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IX.—BOARD OF TAX APPEALS.

SEC. 900. (a) There is hereby established a board to be known as the Board of Tax Appeals (hereinafter referred to as the "board"), to be composed of such number of members, not less than 7 nor more than 28, as the President from time to time determines necessary. Each member shall be appointed by the President, without regard to the civil service laws but solely on the grounds of fitness to perform the duties of the office, for a term of 10 years, except that in the case of original appointments the President, in order to secure rotation in office, may make appointments for 2, 4, 6, or 8 years and except that a member appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he succeeds. Any member of the board may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office, but for no other reason. Each member shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per annum. A majority of the board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. A vacancy shall not impair the powers nor affect the duties of the board nor of the remaining members. The board shall designate biennially a member to act as chairman. The board may have a judicial seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: On page 205, line 18, strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$7,500."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, during the time that we have been considering this bill with a view to raising revenue and reducing taxes, it occurred to me that there might be some points in the bill where we could reduce expenses. With that thought in mind I started out to compile a few figures relative to the salaries it is proposed to pay to members of this board of tax appeals. I have had in my own mind grave doubt about the wisdom of creating this board, but be that as it may, it is proposed here that the Government pay the members of this board of tax appeals, working, as I understand it under the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a salary equivalent to that which the commissioner receives. The bill proposes to pay them a salary greater than that received by the judges of 42 of the supreme courts, the courts of last resort, of the various States, a salary equal to or more than that paid by 44 of the States of the Union to the judges of the courts of last resort of the several States. Only 4 States in the 48 pay a salary in excess of $10,000. We propose to pay this board a salary of $1,500 more than that received by a judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and $2,500 more per year than that received by a judge of the Federal district court. The bill proposes to pay them a salary greater than that received by 40 of the governors of the States of the Union. There are only eight States that pay their governors more than $10,000 per year. There are two that pay from $7,500 to $10,000 and three that pay $7,500. Thirty-five of the States pay less than this salary. We propose to pay them 33⅓ per cent more salary than is received by a Senator of the United States or a Member of the House of Representatives. It seems to me that it ill becomes us at a time when we propose to economize to so exceed the average salaries paid for positions of a kind and character of equivalent duties and responsibility.

The amendment which I have offered will reduce the salaries of members of this board down to that paid to a Member of this House or to a Senator of the United States. It will reduce it to a small fraction above that paid on the average to all of the judges of the courts of last resort in the 48 States, the average salary being $7,447, as of July 1, 1921. It will save, if seven members are appointed, $17,500 per year. If the full 28 members of this board are appointed, it would save annually $70,000. I submit, gentlemen, without further statement, that it is a saving that an administration pledged to economy, a Congress pledged to economy, can well make. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the House for just a few moments.

The amendment which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] has just proposed is an extremely important one, in my judgment. If you adopt it, the next thing to do is to wipe out all this provision with reference to the board of appeals.

The argument which the gentleman from Nebraska makes is plausible, and in some respects he shows that a comparison can not properly be made between these salaries and those of persons occupying certain other positions of importance and honor. But the gentleman will remember that the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission get $12,000. It is much easier to get a man that is fit for a position on the Interstate Commerce Commission than it is for this board.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In a moment. The members of the Federal Trade Commission get $10,000. That is not a difficult position to fill at all, and there would be no difficulty in selecting men for it. I know a number of men who have served on the Federal Trade Commission who were not worth more than $5,000 or $6,000. The members of the Federal Farm Loan Board get $10,000. There are hosts of people ready to fill positions on the Federal Farm Loan Board and hosts of persons perfectly capable of filling them. You could fill those positions at $5,000 or $6,000 a year. But you can not get proper men to serve on this board for $7,500.

Mr. McKEOWN. The argument the gentleman makes is that these other men get these large salaries. He must admit that they are overpaid.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Some of them are overpaid. I do not think the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are overpaid.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SWING. While it is true that as compared with some outside positions salaries are paid where you have got to get men in competition with private corporations, is it not true that the technical work in this line will necessitate these members of this board being selected from the personnel now in the Treasury Department?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no. It is perfectly easy to get these men outside of the Treasury Department, and I presume they will be largely selected outside of the department. But they will not get them for $7,500 a year when they are now making anywhere from $10,000 to $20,000 outside of the department.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that cases involving hundreds of thousands of dollars will come before this board, and attorneys who will appear before them will get thousands of dollars as fees?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. Cases involving even millions of dollars will come before this board, and counsel in a single case may get as high as $50,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How did you arrive at the precise figure of 28?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is not set precisely at 28.

Mr. MONTAGUE. From 7 to 28. You begin with 7, an odd number, and you finally have 28, an even number. On any board an even number is unfortunate.

Mr. YOUNG. There are nine working at this time, and the extra one would be chairman.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You should always have an odd number on an arbitration or board. If you have an even number or an even division, you will get nowhere.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is true that this board will pass upon tax claims involving millions of dollars, is it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; they will pass upon tax claims involving millions of dollars.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it not also true that the judges of our State courts pass upon claims involving a like amount of millions?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The judges in the State courts sometimes have cases before them involving such sums, but not often; but judges of Federal courts have many such cases. But those judges hold their positions for life, and they are absolutely independent.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I understood the gentleman to say that there are nine members, three on each committee, at present?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I believe that is right.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. What salaries are they paid at this time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are paid from $5,000 to $6,000, and they are going out all the time. They are not able to keep the best men down there. That is the trouble.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. How does the gentleman know that some of these identical men will not be appointed on this board?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one or two questions. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I regret I can not. I want to have order, and then I will complete my remarks.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I will get more time for the gentleman.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. If the gentleman will answer that question, that will be all I ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, may I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The reason why this board is being appointed is because we are unable to keep the proper class of men in the departments at this time on the salaries that are paid down there. That is one of the main reasons why this board is to be appointed, although not the most important reason, but one of the strong reasons. If the gentleman from Nebraska insists upon cutting this salary down to $7,500, then I would recommend that you wipe out this board entirely, to which, so far as I am concerned, I would have no serious objection. But if you are going to have a board of this kind to pass on claims involving millions of dollars, I hope, for heaven's sake, you will get attorneys who are qualified to try those cases.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. What do they pay the men who sit in these conferences with reference to tax matters, where the taxpayer is asked to come here? What do they pay those men?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I could not say.

Mr. YOUNG. Some of them get $7,500, and they can not hold them at that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think anybody gets $7,500.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The men I have in mind do not get anywhere near that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; they do not get more than $3,000 or $4,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And those are the men who really do the real work, and it seems to me you ought to pay men like that something worth while instead of creating additional positions and paying them this sum.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Gentlemen can do away with the board entirely, and, as I have said, I have no serious objection, but if you create the board and want to have one that is worth while, you must have good men on it. The men to whom the gentleman from Minnesota refers do not do the real work; that is passed on further.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this provision in the bill, you will notice, is entirely new; it is a new departure in the method of collecting your internal-revenue taxes, estate taxes, and income taxes.

As originally drawn in the Treasury Department, it was merely, in my opinion, an increase in salaries of those who make up the present arrangement, because it gave the Secretary of the Treasury entire control over the employees. He had the right to fire them when he desired and move them about; if they did not decide cases to suit him he could kick them out and get somebody who would. So the committee, in discussing the matter, determined it would insert an independent board, appointed by the President.

Now, I do not like this board, although I realize something ought to be done to simplify the method by which taxpayers can ascertain how much tax they owe when there is a dispute between them and the Government. But all of that could be done if you had a proper administration under the present law. That is my opinion about it. I expressed that opinion to the committee at the time and I reiterate it here.

However, this amendment should be adopted if you are to continue this board. I want to call your attention to the original proposition and show you the extravagance of the Treasury Department in making up this board. It provided that the members of the board should have $10 a day for expense money and that each employee should have $8 a day expense money.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. It is $7 in the bill.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I understand; but I was referring to the original bill, and I merely mentioned that to illustrate how much consideration the Treasury Department had for the expenses of this Government in making up this bill. Wherever its employees are involved they say they shall be given $10 and $8 expense money, but wherever other employees are involved, employees of the Post Office Department and other departments, they give them $4 a day. That merely illustrates what Mr. Mellon thought was the proper method of conducting the business of this country.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will permit, we do not give the Treasury Department any more than we give other departments.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I know you do not, and very wisely so, but I merely cite this as an illustration showing the extravagance of Mr. Mellon and his associates in making up this bill, wherein they provided $10 for expense money for their employees. Is the gentleman from Illinois in favor of that?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I am not in favor of paying anybody anything we ought not to pay him.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But do not try to get around the problem in that way. Does the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, believe that in this bill we ought to authorize a larger expense account for the traveling clerks of this board than we do for ordinary clerks who travel on business of other departments?

Mr. MADDEN. Not at all.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. You have provided $7 a day, but you do not do that for other departments.

Mr. MADDEN. We are not going to vote for that, are we? [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I wanted to illustrate the extravagance with which they undertook to make up this bill.

Now, $10,000 a year sounds mighty little, but, gentlemen, remember that these men are appointed for 10 years. Just remember that. These gentlemen are appointed for 10 years. You appoint the first one for 2 years, the next for 4, and the next for 6, but this is going on forever, we might say, an indefinite time, and each time a man is appointed he is appointed for 10 years and you can not remove him except for cause. The President can remove him for the causes set out in the bill; so virtually it is a 10-year tenure of office.

Now, I do not know whether anybody in Congress wants to resign and take this job because it pays $2,500 more. I do not presume there is such a man here, because men do not come to this place for the money they get out of it—that is, the right kind of a Congressman, in my opinion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They could not under the law.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But, gentlemen, if you are going to pay the members of this board $10,000 a year you certainly ought to pay the members of the court to which you appeal from that board as much as you pay these members, but the fact is you only pay the members of that appeal court $7,500. In other words, if you are not satisfied with a decision made by this board you take it to the appeal court and you appeal from a $10,000 man to a $7,500 man. I think that is perfectly ridiculous, and I think the sum ought to be not exceeding $7,500 if you are going to create the board at all. [Applause.] It is a very debatable question whether such a board should be created at all, because, I repeat, if you had somebody in the Treasury Department who desired to administer the law as provided in this provision that could be done now. There would be only one other question involved and that would be the question of the Internal Revenue Commissioner himself.

The commissioner would have to decide all questions coming up to him, but he could create this board now. He has unlimited money and has unlimited power and the only provision of the law applicable would be that you would have to go back to the commissioner to decide certain questions, but the commissioner could issue a rule or regulation in which he would tell the country that he was going to approve the decision of the board, no matter how it decided, and that would be the decision of the commissioner, and all he would have to do would be to sign. That is what should be done, in my opinion, but if this board is created they ought to have some respect for the Treasury and the salary ought to be made $7,500 and you ought to limit the expenditure of the people referred to here in their traveling to $4 or $5 a day.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute: On page 205, strike out lines 1 to 24, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: Page 205, beginning with line 1, strike out all of section 900 (a).

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BLANTON. If it is not taken out of my time, gladly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title or paragraph——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter and the gentleman ought not to limit it. This is one of the most important matters in the bill, and the membership ought to be heard on it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are other amendments to be offered to this paragraph. I purpose to offer one on line 7——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The adoption of this request will not prevent that.

The CHAIRMAN. Any amendment can be offered; it simply closes debate.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. But I want to be heard on my amendment. If I can have five minutes to argue the amendment it will be satisfactory.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I suggest to the gentleman that having an amendment, of course he would have preference, except there are probably two or three members of the committee who would want to be heard.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I want to know that I will have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that, so far as the amendment is concerned, the Chair understands it to be the right thing to recognize the gentlemen having bona fide amendments, giving preference, of course, to the members of the committee. The Chair will bear the gentleman in mind; and if he can recognize him within those limitations during the 30 minutes, he will do so.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. If it pleases the Chair, just a moment on that. The suggestion sounds entirely fair, but I do not know what will be the attitude of the members of the committee. I purpose to offer an amendment which will make members of the appeal board subject to the advice and consent of the Senate. I think this matter is of sufficient importance that I ought to be permitted to have five minutes in which to explain it. If I can have five minutes for that purpose, it will be satisfactory, but I do not want to admit myself out of court.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. DENISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BLANTON. If it is not taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman cares to yield, he can do so, but he can not be taken off the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. If it is not taken out of my time, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska is a perfecting amendment, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield for that purpose. I already have the floor.

Mr. DENISON. Then I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. It is too late. I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

Mr. DENISON. I think the perfecting amendment ought to be disposed of before the amendment to strike out.

Mr. BLANTON. I have been recognized, and I will not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to appeal to those of my colleagues here who are in favor of stopping the establishment of these new, expensive boards and bureaus that are becoming so prevalent in Washington. Here is a chance to stop one of them. This is a provision to create a board of 28 members, to draw $10,000 per year for a term of 10 years. You may say that it provides for only from 7 to 28, but it will be 28, and you know it as well as I do. Just as sure as I am standing here there will be 28 members of this board appointed by the President for a term of 10 years, drawing a salary of $10,000 a year each, or $2,500 a year more than a Congressman or a Senator, and drawing $2,500 a year more than a Federal judge who tries these cases in their finality. Now is the time to stop this. You have the opportunity here to stop it. This is the time and the place and the occasion to stop it if you want to stop it. It is just a question of what you want to do. I am not going to vote to establish another new board or bureau. [Applause.] I am going to vote, so far as my one vote is concerned, against every new board and every new bureau proposed. The time has come to stop it.

Your President—even a Republican President—here the other day called the attention of the country to the fact that this wasteful appropriation of public money must stop; that these added expenses of the Government must stop. Was he talking merely for political effect? Government expenses are accumulating fast year after year, and something must be done to stop it. It won't stop unless we stop it here. These unnecessary bureaus are brought about and constituted and created in just such bills as the one you have before you now and under just such provocation. Some administration secretary demands it, and Congress passes it. We are given a few minutes only to consider it before we must vote on it. And of course, it always passes. The committee is in favor of it and there are not enough of us organized to beat it. The committee summons its cohorts and out-votes us. Such new creations are put in bills of this kind by the committee. In one fell swoop, it provides 28 new $10,000 jobs, better than our own, because they are appointed for 10 years. The committee fights for it and fights against every man who opposes it. The committee passes it, it becomes law, and the money to pay the bill is then taken out of the people's Treasury and it has to be made up in taxes taken from your constituents and mine, and I appeal to my colleagues to stop it now. This is to be another extravagant, expensive board. It means a lot of extra taxes to be taken out of the people's pockets. It means a lot of extra waste and expense. We can handle this proposition without creating these 28 new $10,000 job holders. I will tell you what will happen in connection with it. You will note from the provisions of the bill that this board of twenty-eight $10,000 per year members may sit all over the United States, and rent quarters, and in addition to having their transportation paid, shall receive $10 per day extra for their subsistence, and that all of their employees are to receive their transportation, and in addition to their salaries are to receive $7 per day extra for their subsistence. These are to be 28 unusually swell jobs that this committee is creating. And it is going to be a greater scandal to the Nation than the expensive Shipping Board, which at one time was paying out for rented buildings alone $558,000 per year, until we forced it to occupy vacant space existing in Government-owned buildings more than sufficient to house it. Note subparagraph (g):

(g) The Secretary shall furnish the board with such clerical assistance, quarters, stationery, furniture, office equipment, and other supplies as may be necessary for the efficient execution of the functions vested in it by this section.

Why does the committee give this unlimited, unrestricted power to the Secretary of the Treasury? He could appoint a whole army of employees, and like the Shipping Board does, pay them salaries ranging up to $20,000 per year, under the terms of this Mellon bill reported by the committee to us for passage. And you, colleagues, are doing it with your eyes open. It is by your vote that this unlimited power is to be given. Can you properly explain your action to your constituents? I can not, if I vote for such ridiculous propositions, and I will not vote for it. When you create this board of 28 men drawing $10,000 a year apiece for 10-year terms, the Secretary of the Treasury is going to furnish every one of them with a high-priced secretary. You know that as well as I do. He is going to furnish every one of them with a high-priced stenographer. You know that as well as I do. And he will furnish each one of them with a special janitor, and a special messenger, and a fellow to sit out in front of the door to tell people that they will have to wait their turn. You are going to have a whole army of extra employees on the Federal pay roll as a natural sequence to this piece of legislation. I appeal to you, colleagues, to stand up and stop it, and let us strike out this unneeded board. I appeal to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] not to allow this thing to go through. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who, in some instances has made a fight for retrenchment. I say now, Mr. MADDEN, come on and help defeat this proposition and save the people's money. What are you going to do about it, I ask the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW]. What are you going to do about the petition of 350,000 farmers that you brought in here the other day and which occupied so much floor space, demanding that we retrench expenses? What are you going to do concerning their demand that your administration stop this unnecessary expense and stop raising salaries? Are you going to ignore them? Are you going to let these 28 men go on the pay roll by establishing by this bill 28 new offices at $10,000 each, appointed for 10-year terms? I appeal to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], the leader of the House, to stop it. He ought to do it in behalf of the taxpayers of the country.

If this new board were needed it would be another matter; but it is not needed. Look at the great army of special high-salaried employees you have permitted the Attorney General to keep on the pay roll down in the Department of Justice, and nothing has been accomplished by it. Whenever you want a criminal prosecuted you have to pass a special resolution appropriating an additional $100,000 to employ special attorneys to do it.

The people will not get any better service or any quicker adjudication of their tax matters after you create this board. It has to do only with appeals. And appeals are now handled in a most efficient manner when we push them to action. And they would have to be pushed to action before this board. Its creation will not expedite the final decision in a single case.

Why, only a few days ago one of my constituents was over-assessed nearly $20,000, and they were threatening to levy upon his property to collect it, having decided his appeal against him. He came up here, obtained a hearing immediately, placed his case and his books before the department, and his claim was allowed without his having to get an attorney, and he saved nearly $20,000.

The press states that President Coolidge is demanding retrenchment, while Secretary Mellon is demanding this extravagant expansion. I imagine that our constituents at home are going to hold each one of us responsible for just what each one of us does with our vote, and we can not excuse ourselves by saying that Secretary Mellon demanded it. We are responsible not to Mr. Secretary Mellon but to our people. And I am going to vote as I know the people of my district and of the United States demand—for retrenchment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, of course if this tribunal is not needed I do not want the section adopted at all. I think if you will study it you will see that it is needed. This section is put into this bill entirely from the standpoint of the taxpayer. We all know what it means when you go up against one who is judge and jury and sheriff. When you present an appeal in the Treasury Department you go to these men, who are splendid men, but it happens to be their duty not only to be judge but to be attorney for the Government. There is no authorization in law now whereby the Government can be represented by the Attorney General's Department. So when you go there now the man whom you appear before is not only acting as judge but acting as prosecutor for the Government of the United States. When a taxpayer gets an adverse decision he is not satisfied with it, and if he is dissatisfied he must go into the district court of the United States or the Court of Claims; that is to say, bring action against the Government of the United States in either of those courts.

Now, you are not by this bill creating a new board, as some one said. We have appeal boards down at the Treasury now. What we are proposing is to make a better board, make better procedure, protect the taxpayer, and give him a chance to have his rights passed upon inexpensively, quickly, and properly. You will find another section following this where provision is made for these members to be divided up into boards of three to visit all the States, and it will be possible for the small taxpayer to present his matters in his own State, inexpensively to a board made up of real judges, independent of the Treasury Department, and not attorneys for the United States Government.

Mr. CROSSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. Will you have the assurance that you will get rid of this temporary board that you have now?

Mr. YOUNG. I think the present members are all right. It is not that I want to get rid of them. It is rather that their duties shall be changed in such a way that they shall not be required to act in a dual capacity—that is, both as judge and attorney for the Government. They should only function as judges.

Mr. CROSSER. But you do not want both boards.

Mr. YOUNG. No; they will not continue the two sets of boards. It is said that we are creating too many members of the board. It happens that there are now 27 men doing this kind of work, and when cases come before them they are largely informal, largely ex parte. The Government is not represented by attorneys, but when you get this new provision with the Attorney General's Department represented, both sides represented, it will take more time. The proceedings will necessarily be more formal, and the position of the taxpayers will be immensely improved. The board will be independent, free from influence by Treasury officials, thus making possible a thoroughly impartial trial. There will be speedy justice, and the cost of litigation will be greatly reduced.

The decision we should first reach is, Is it really necessary and proper on the part of the taxpayers? My correspondence shows me that the small tradesman can not afford to come to Washington. He can not afford high-priced attorneys and go so far away from home to have his rights determined, and even if he does, when he gets here, if the decision is adverse he naturally feels as though he had not had his day in court, which every American has a right to.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Under the present law would the Secretary have the right to hold hearings in Ohio or Indiana?

Mr. YOUNG. It is their duty to hold hearings in all the States and give an opportunity to each man to be heard.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I am speaking about the present law. Would he have the right to hold hearings in Ohio and Indiana?

Mr. YOUNG. He might.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman says the small taxpayer could not come to Washington. Can not he get his Congressman to handle it? I handle one every week. We have this board of appeals down there in this department to-day.

Mr. YOUNG. Is the gentleman entirely satisfied with it?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I have been satisfied with the treatment received in every instance at the hands of those boards which they have in the departments now.

Mr. YOUNG. If every man in the gentleman's district understood that he was willing to do that, he would not be able to do anything else. He may be able to take care of a few cases that we have now, but the ordinary taxpayer now is in a position where he can not have his day in court without its costing him altogether too much. Besides, many Congressmen are not lawyers, and those who are not lawyers are not able to render a service of much value before a board of law review.

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. WURZBACH. If the new board should be created, what would become of the existing board which is now functioning?

Mr. YOUNG. That would be displaced. It is simply an unofficial organization set up by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it can and will be superseded by the provisions of this bill if it is enacted into law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Several Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] has offered an amendment which is really a perfecting amendment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] offered an amendment, and while no point of order was raised to it at the time, it is not really a substitute, but is a separate amendment to strike out the section. In view of the parliamentary situation which is now arising, knowing as he does that other perfecting amendments are to be offered, the Chair thinks that the Simmons amendment ought to be now passed upon by the committee. It seems to the Chair that the amendment to strike out the section would have to wait until the perfecting amendments are passed upon.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I think that the action of the committee on this question of salary will depend very largely upon our conception and understanding of the duties and labors to be performed by this board of tax appeals. This board is to take the place of the present committee on appeals and review in the Treasury Department. That consists of 24 members, who are appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and it has really no legal status. They are merely advisers to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. They report their action to him. Their action becomes the action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue because under the law he is the only one who can take any action and decide questions arising in the bureau. There are at present 24 members of this committee on appeals and review. There is a chairman who gets a salary of $7,500 a year. About 10 of the other members get $6,000 each, but the remaining 12 or 13 members get between $4,500 and $6,000 annually. The turnover in the membership of this committee on appeals and review is about 100 per cent per annum. That is to say, there is a complete change in the membership once a year. The members are taken out of the department by business interests who desire their services and who offer them very large rewards if they enter their employment.

What is the present situation when you get a hearing before this committee on appeals and review? You appear before a body of three men. I might say that the present committee is divided into divisions of three men each. It is proposed that the new board shall consist of 28 members, with one chairman, who shall have general supervisory administrative authority over the entire board, and nine divisions of three each, who shall sit in the various parts of the country and listen to the cases brought to them for review. They will sit on the Pacific coast, on the Gulf coast, in the Northwest, in the Southwest, and so on, as well as in the District of Columbia.

When you appear now before one of these divisions of the committee on appeals and review you find yourself in the presence of a set of gentlemen who are, first, as representing the Treasury Department, selected for the purpose of collecting taxes, for the purpose of getting all the taxes they can possibly lay against the taxpayer. They are the party in interest; they are the plaintiff and the prosecutor; they are the court and the jury. When they have rendered their decision, they are the beneficiaries, the judgment or decree creditor, and they are the sheriff and the marshal making the execution and enforcing the collection; and what show has the taxpayer? You might say that the members of the committee ought to be independent of their relations with the department. I am sure they are as fair to the taxpayer as they can be, but they know that their action will determine how much revenue the Government will get. They also know, beyond that, that if the taxpayer wins, the Government has lost forever; that there is no judicial review that can be taken in favor of the Government; but that a judicial review may be had against the Government and in favor of the taxpayer. It seems to me that the machinery as now set up by the law which we have enacted actually gives the taxpayer the worst of it at every turn of the road.

There has, of course, been a great deal of complaint. For instance, it was said to us—it was told us in the hearings—that the men upon these divisions very naturally are ambitious in their success in collecting taxes for the Government, and their efficiency in the department is more or less determined by their success in deciding against the taxpayer and in favor of the Government. Therefore we have here an organization which in no sense stands independent of the department which assesses and collects the taxes. It is proposed now that this Board of Tax Appeals shall sit in various parts of the country, that they shall be entirely independent of the Treasury Department, and be appointed by President.

They will not seek to curry favor with any department in the amount of taxes which they assess against the taxpayer. They will be there representing both sides. They will render impartial decisions, and both the Government and the taxpayer can seek judicial review from the decisions of this board of tax appeals. I have a statement in the remarks which I made on the 18th of this month with reference to the present system in the department and the proposed new system. It is on page 2684 of the RECORD.

Gentlemen have referred to the salaries that are being paid various officers in the Government at the present time. I am of opinion that all of our Federal officers are underpaid. You tell me that a judge in the Federal court gets $7,500 a year, and I tell you that a judge in the circuit court in Chicago gets $15,000 a year. Our mayor gets $18,000. The Federal Government underpays all of its employees, from the Members of both Houses of Congress up or down, as you may have it. But that is no reason why we should not pay every man adequately when we are establishing a new department. That is no reason why we should continue any unfair treatment of officers of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it in order for me to request at this time a vote on my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska. The Chair was just going to put it.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LARSEN of Georgia: Page 205, line 7, after the word "President," insert the words "with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we are establishing, or about to establish, a very important division of this Government. This board will be composed of men who will pass upon matters very important to citizens of the country. They should not be subject to the criticism that they have been selected on account of political favoritism or on account of their being for or against either party.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will my friend yield?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That matter was discussed very carefully by the committee. I think the committee spent nearly a day all together on that point, and the committee with almost complete unanimity agreed that if we permitted this matter to go over to the Senate and have nominations of these appointments confirmed there, we would make of this board a political football, and we had better not have it at all, and I would prefer to have that done.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I am sorry the gentleman takes that position. The Senate is certainly closer to the people than the President is and can be depended upon, in my judgment, to see that those selected on the board will represent the people fairly. They can do so better than the President of the United States can, not because Senators are more honorable but because they know the conditions in the various sections of the country better. The President of the United States might, in good faith, select a man from Ohio, from New York, or any other section upon information which he believes reliable and yet make a fearful mistake. No one knows who the President will appoint until he has made the selection. The President only hears good things of him, but when the public learns of the appointment and the Senate has the opportunity to confirm, both sides can be heard and a bad appointment may be averted.

It is customary for all of our important appointees under the Government to be confirmed by the Senate. Our judges are confirmed by the Senate. Who would say, that by reason of this fact, they had been put into the political arena or they were thrown into the politics of the country? No one would charge that, not even the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would charge that in a good many cases if the rules of the House would permit, but unfortunately I am not permitted.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I will ask the gentleman this question: Do you know of a single, solitary judge on the United States district court bench or on the bench of any court of the United States that you think has rendered a political opinion? If you do, it is your duty as a Member of this Congress to impeach him.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not refer to that. It is the pulling and hauling over there for the support of a certain Senator here or there of some one from a particular district, instead of a consideration of the merits of the appointment.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. The important thing that I want to impress upon the gentleman from Iowa and this House is that if a man, subject to the confirmation of the Senate, be appointed from a State, any improper influence causing the appointment can be exposed and an undesirable appointment perhaps defeated. Confirmation simply gives an opportunity for the public to be heard.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. In other words, your amendment does not propose to give the Senate the power of selection, but merely the right of rejection?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Yes; merely the right to prevent any improper selection, and to see that no one is selected simply because he is favored by the President or by some special interest desiring representation on the board for impure motives.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. STENGLE. The provision requires that these men shall be selected solely on account of fitness for the duties of the office. I will ask you if you think the Senate would play politics with that kind of a requirement?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I think not. I think the Senate is an honorable body and will respect the language of the law as far as possible. I also think the President of the United States or any President we are likely to have would do the same thing. The point I make is not that the President would be dishonest in the matter, but that he is not in a position to get such information as the Senate can get. If appointments are confirmed by the Senate, most likely men will be appointed to these important positions who are not subject to ulterior influences. In view of recent exposures of men in high places we can not be too careful.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not take the position of opposition to the gentleman's amendment myself. I think it would be just as well without it, but I do not think that would destroy its usefulness.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 84.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. CHINDBLOM and Mr. LARSEN of Georgia.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 95.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 205, line 18, after the word "annum," insert: "No member of the board shall be permitted to practice before said board or any official of the Treasury Department, or be connected, directly or indirectly, with any person or any firm of lawyers, solicitors, accountants, or agents practicing before said board or any official of the Treasury Department on behalf of taxpayers for a period of two years after his term of office terminates or from the time such member resigns or otherwise leaves the service of the Government."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if a member of the board did anything of that kind he would be subject to removal by the President.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But he is out of the service. This is two years after he leaves the service.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not understand the amendment.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. LOZIER. By what means would the gentleman enforce that provision? There is no penalty prescribed, and how would the gentleman enforce it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He simply can not practice before the board. Now, gentlemen, I believe every Member here knows that since the enactment of an income-tax law we have created a new profession, that of tax experts, and unless you safeguard the Government against former employees of the Department of the Treasury you are going to continue a condition, which has already started, where employees of the Treasury Department, a short time after getting a knowledge of pending matters before the department, resign, turn around, and take retainers—or accept cases on contingent fees, if you please—in connection with the very claims they have had before them and before their own department. [Applause.]

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I want to ask the gentleman what he would do in the case of young men who are hired to check over income-tax statements in different parts of the country and before whom taxpayers are summoned as representing the Treasury Department, and then after a little while they are let out by the Treasury Department because they do not need them?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But this amendment only applies to members of this board.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. There was so much confusion that I did not catch the gentleman's amendment. Does the gentleman's amendment go far enough to bar from appointment to this board Members of the House and Senate for two years after the terms for which they are elected, so as to prevent lame ducks from practicing before this board or the Treasury Department?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I have not covered it that far. I had consideration for the gentleman from Arkansas and other gentlemen here; I did not want to bar them.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think it would injure the chances of the passage of the amendment if it were to provide that lame ducks could not get on the board, some of whom are now very expectant?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, I believe this is so important that we should not burden the amendment with anything not germane and risk the amendment on a point of order. The institution of lame ducks has existed in this country a long time and, in all likelihood, will exist for a long time to come.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Would it be proper to add an amendment which would preclude the Secretary of the Treasuary from appearing before this board of the Treasury Department?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am working on a bill which will cover all such cases, and I would ask the gentleman to help me get something of that kind through the House.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. But the gentleman thinks that would be the same proposition?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; we will eventually come to that. Now, gentlemen, I do not desire to take any more of your time but will ask for a vote and hope you will approve of my amendment.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think that as long as he is dealing with Treasury Department officials, and in view of the recent disclosures as to the former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, admitting a retainer of something like $150,000 or $200,000, growing out of a Treasury Department transaction which was pending when he held the office, that the gentleman's amendment should include the head of that department?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But if I attempted to do that someone would make a point of order against it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; they would not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not want to take that chance.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. After the words "member of the board," insert "or any Government employee in the Treasury Department." That will cover those whom the gentleman from Minnesota seems so anxious to reach.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; the term "Government employee" does not take in the head of the department.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I thought he was an employee of the Government. Then I will modify it—"or any official or Government employee in the Treasury Department." That will surely cover the case.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That will take in the head of the department.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, will the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; and I should like to make it retroactive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: After the word "board," in the first line of the LaGuardia amendment, insert the words "or any official or Government employee in the Treasury Department."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, and also it attempts the regulation of proceedings in the Department of the Treasury already covered by special statute. I am not making the point of order against the LaGuardia amendment, but against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Iowa gets through I want to make a point of order against his point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is clearly not in order and is not germane to the bill at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman from Iowa admit that if we are going into this matter at all we should apply it to the head of the department?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order pending.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to make a point of order against the gentleman's point of order. I make the point of order against the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa that it comes too late. The LaGuardia amendment, being one out of order, having been offered, this is in order to the LaGuardia amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not a point of order against the original amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. No; because a point of order against the LaGuardia amendment would have been in order if it had been made; hence no point of order will lie against an amendment to it. Further, debate had ensued between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] and myself before the point of order was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will dispose of the matter unless some gentleman cares to be heard.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that the point of order was made immediately after the amendment had been reported, and the gentleman from Texas was out of order in his colloquy with the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas briefly on the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard only on the point of order of the gentleman from Iowa. The point of order is not well taken, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that the amendment to the amendment is germane to every feature of the proposition, and to the bill. This whole board is a part and parcel of the Treasury Department. If the Chair will look at the subsequent subparagraphs and especially if he will look at subparagraph (g) on the next page, the Chair will see that the Secretary of the Treasury or the Treasury Department is to furnish this board with all employees, all the supplies, all of the equipment they want and everything else they want out of the Public Treasury. This shows this board is a part and parcel of the Treasury Department of the United States. The Bureau of Internal Revenue, if the Chair pleases, is a part of the Treasury Department. It is under the Treasury Department and many of the employees of the Treasury Department will serve this board. The collection of income taxes is made through the Treasury Department, through one of its bureaus, and this applies in perfect order to any of the officials or employees of the Treasury Department, and I submit that the amendment is in order and germane to the purposes of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman unless he desires to be heard. The Chair is ready to rule. Heretofore the gentleman from Texas has offered an amendment, which at that time was discussed, and which the Chair held would be germane when we arrived at the proper part of the bill, which the Chair thought at that time would be Title X. The gentleman now offers an amendment to an amendment. In order to ascertain whether or not it is germane to the amendment to which it is offered, one must look to the amendment and not to the bill. Now, what is the amendment? The amendment is that no member of the board shall be permitted to practice, and so forth. To that the gentleman from Texas seeks to add "or any official or Government employee of the Treasury Department," thereby interjecting an entirely different class of people from those mentioned in the amendment, namely, the board. Therefore it is not germane to the amendment, although it might be germane to the bill if offered as a separate proposition. The point of order is sustained.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I be indulged for a moment, in order to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] a question? The committee is evidently in no humor to legislate this evening——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee is not legislating, in my judgment, and I doubt whether there would be any difference in the morning.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And if the gentleman from Iowa undertakes to hold them here, the gentleman will not accomplish anything, and may have some very undesirable situations arise, and I would suggest to him that the better policy would be to adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask for a vote on my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the gentleman's opinion, how long, so far as he can tell from amendments proposed to be offered from his side, will it take to come to a final vote on this bill?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will simply call the attention of the gentleman and the House to the fact that when you pass Title IX, which goes down to page 208 of the bill, the balance of the bill, down to page 238, is entirely administrative matter, and I do not suppose there will be more than one or two amendments, probably, offered. It is purely administrative. There will, in all probability, be very few amendments offered.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. In just a moment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to suggest that it is the same as the existing law.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; it is reenacting the present law. When you get down to page 238, then you have the provision for the 25 per cent matter, and we ought to dispose of that in an hour or in 30 minutes. I understand it is the gentleman's desire that we meet at 11 o'clock; and while I think you are overworking us a little if we are to get through to-morrow, I would suggest to the gentleman that we adjourn now and meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow and undertake to dispose of these things to-morrow, and dispose of the entire bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would it be possible to agree now as to how much time would be cousumed upon this entire question of the board?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do not think so, because there are some provisions here which I think ought to have consideration. For instance, in section 8 you have the matter of an allowance of $7 a day, and I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] wants it to go through in that shape.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That will not take very much time. We could dispose of that in five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that I am only speaking of the length of the debate. Could we, for instance, now agree that there shall not be to exceed 30 minutes more debate on this question relating to the board? Of course, amendments may be offered.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. As I understand, the gentleman is referring now to Title IX.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; and then could we agree to read all the administrative provisions as one paragraph and then thereafter could we agree as to the length of time for debate on the question of the relief of taxes for 1923?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. While I have no objection, I can not make an agreement, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, because I do not know what the gentlemen have in their minds. So far as I am concerned, I have no amendment to offer until we get to the last section.

Mr. McKEOWN. I have only one amendment and it is on the desk now.

Mr. CROSSER. I want about five minutes.

Mr. CRISP. I would like to say to my friend that I have one amendment which I desire to offer to the administrative features which might take five of ten minutes, possibly.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have the regular order——

Mr. CRISP. And then I have an amendment to the last provision of the bill. So far as I am concerned, those are the only two amendments I desire to offer. I desire to offer an amendment, I will be frank with the gentleman, to strike out the last section.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think we will save a great deal of time if we can come to some agreement.

Mr. TILSON. Would it not be better to dispose of the pending matter now?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have no objection to disposing of the pending amendment, but you can not legislate effectively at 6 o'clock on important matters in the frame of mind that the committee is now in. And I do not care what bill it is.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think that we ought to decide this matter pending now? If the committee votes in the affirmative to strike the whole provision out that will end it.

The CHAIRMAN. There are six minutes remaining.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I have a perfecting amendment on the desk that I would like to have reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 205, line 4, after the word "of," strike out "such number," and all of line 5, and insert "nine members"; in line 9, after the word "of," strike out "ten" and insert "six"; and in line 12, after the word "six," strike out "or eight," and before the word "six" insert "or."

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, this proposition would create a board of nine members instead of leaving it from 7 to 27. The judges of the Supreme Court number nine. The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I believe, are 12 in number, and they are one of the hardest-worked bodies in the country. Why not make this a board of nine members and fix the term of years at 6 years instead of 10, and then have them appointed in series—2, 4, and 6 years? There is no use for us to say that we will strike it all out, because we know there is a necessity for a board somewhere to give the taxpayers of this country some relief. Why not fix it at nine; that is large enough. It will consist of three divisions of three members each, making their terms of office 6 years instead of 10. There is no necessity for 10 years. Then you have a number that, if Congress finds later it is necessary to increase the number, they can increase it. I think that would be a fair solution of the question. Nine judges of the Supreme Court conduct the great business of this country in the courts, and nine members of this board ought to be appointed; and that is enough.

Mr. YOUNG. There are now 24 men down there working in this department and we now have the estate tax added.

Mr. McKEOWN. This is appeal work, and they ought to put these appeals through by preparing a procedure so it will not be necessary to have 28 men. Try 9 men and see if they can not take care of it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman want to deprive the people of the country of a board so that they can travel throughout the country and hear these appeals?

Mr. McKEOWN. I want the board created so it can function and give relief to the people, but I do not believe in giving a board of 27 and send them out all over the United States. Then you would not have any precedents, for you would have one case in Chicago decided one way, one in San Francisco another, one in New York another.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The purpose of the chairman is to coordinate so that there will be a uniformity in the decisions.

Mr. McKEOWN. There ought to be nine members, and that would represent the nine circuits of the United States which are now represented by nine judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That would take 27 men.

Mr. McKEOWN. No; one man to each circuit like there is to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McKEOWN) there were 68 ayes and 102 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Can we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 205, line 2, strike out section 900 (a).

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were 70 ayes and 109 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. [After counting.] Fifteen Members have risen; not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

(c) The chairman may from time to time divide the board into divisions and assign the members thereto and designate a chief thereof. If a division, as a result of a vacancy or the absence or inability of a member assigned thereto to serve thereon, is composed of less than three members, the chairman may assign other members thereto, or he may direct the division to proceed with the transaction of business. A division shall hear and determine appeals filed with the board and assigned to such division by the chairman. Upon the expiration of 30 days after a decision by a division, such decision, and the findings of fact made in connection therewith, shall become the final decision and findings of the board, unless within such period the chairman has directed that such decision shall be reviewed by the board.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUDSON: Page 206, line 3, strike out all of paragraph (b).

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, the day before yesterday in this committee I sought recognition of the Chair to address the Committee of the Whole upon the amendment then pending, known as the automobile tax amendment. Owing to the lateness of the hour, I was willing to forego my remarks before the committee on that matter, as did my colleague from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD]. I wanted to support the amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, at that time. I wanted to do so because of the careful thought and time that he has devoted to the matter in the Committee on Ways and Means. I was not possessed of an inordinate desire to have my name appear in the headlines of the newspapers, and neither was my distinguished colleague, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, who, having presented his reasons for the amendment to the Committee of the Whole in a logical, concise manner, was willing to yield the floor in order that a vote might be taken. I was in favor of the reduction of the automobile tax because it has no legitimate place in an excise measure, though I realize, of course, the need of revenue. I rise now to bring to the attention of the committee the fact that my colleague, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, has spent much time and great care in the Committee on Ways and Means in order to bring before the committee and the country an amendment which will produce revenue and yet adequately protect those who are vitally interested.

The theory of the excise tax has been that it was a tax upon luxuries. Everyone to-day conversant with the use of the automobile and the automobile truck well know that a tax placed upon them on that theory is false and without foundation. The automobile has become a business necessity to practically every commercial industry and to every farmer and every home owner. It has proven a great blessing to humanity in making possible the residence outside of our congested cities of the workmen in our places of industry.

Through the ownership of an automobile men can live 5, 10, 15 miles from their places of employment, where their families can be reared in the open countryside and where with an acre of ground the laborer can enjoy the free and open life of rural surroundings. This removal from the congested centers has meant a blessing to thousands upon thousands of our population, who are now living in a degree of freedom that was impossible before the advent of the automobile.

In addition to its blessing as a means of transportation it has become a blessing in the fact that it enables entire families to take their outings together and thus again increase the health and welfare of our people.

While we believe most heartily that the entire excise tax provided in this section of the bill should be removed, not simply removed upon a class of trucks and a reduction of the tax on parts, but the entire tax upon the automobile, of whatever kind, and from the accessories of all kinds. But we realize the necessities of the Government for revenue and that such legislation would mean the loss of one hundred and forty to one hundred and sixty millions of dollars of revenue, perhaps a reduction greater than the needs of government can stand at this time, if we reduce the percentage on the income taxes. Therefore, at this time I am glad to support the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, which exempts from taxation trucks and automobile wagons and chassis whose price does not exceed $1,000. This will relieve the average farmer and small business man of the imposition of a Federal tax upon the necessity of his business, but does not relieve, at this time, the large commercial truck. The gentleman's amendment further reduces the tax on parts and accessories one-half, which in its turn will be a great relief, especially to the great mass of automobile owners, in the upkeep of their cars and trucks.

I think the time will soon come when we can see our way clear to remove the tax upon the entire automobile industry. There is no just reason why the automobile industry should be selected as above all other lines of industry upon which to place a Federal tax. The imposition of the tax was due to war conditions and possibly was justified at that time. In times of peace there is no real justification for it, and I only vote for this amendment, which still leaves a tax upon a large part of the industry, because of the necessity for revenue at this time.

I trust the amendment offered by my colleague will receive unanimous support at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) The members and employees assigned to the board, in addition to their compensation, shall receive their necessary traveling expenses and actual expenses incurred for subsistence while traveling on duty and away from their designated stations, in an amount not to exceed $10 per day in the case of members and $7 per day in the case of employees. The expenditures of the board, including the expenditures for salaries, expenses of transportation and for maintenance, witness fees, rent (where suitable quarters are not available), printing and binding, and contingent and miscellaneous expenses shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the board and signed by the chairman, out of any appropriation available for the collection of internal-revenue taxes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if some gentleman is not going to offer an amendment in respect to this expenditure of $7 a day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: Page 208, line 3, strike out "$10" and insert in lieu thereof "$7."

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6715 and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution to provide an appropriation for the prosecution of suits to cancel certain leases, and for other purposes.

TAX ON CIGARETTES.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks I insert the following telegram from the Burley Tobacco Growers' Association:

LEXINGTON, KY., February 28, 1924.

MAURICE H. THATCHER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Increase tax of $1 per thousand on cigarettes voted into revenue bill House of Representatives yesterday will seriously injure the interests of all farmers growing tobacco in your State. Government now collecting tax $1 per pound on tobacco farmer gets 40 cents for. Tax on tobacco has increased 200 per cent since 1914, and over 100,000 farmer members of this association urge you to vote against any further tax increase on tobacco, which is their biggest money crop, believing it will materially curtail consumption and be ruinous to farmers who produce it.

BURLEY TOBACCO GROWERS' COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION,
By JAMES C. STONE, President and General Manager.

GRANTING OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE TO EDITH BOLLING WILSON.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2583) granting a franking privilege to Edith Bolling Wilson and to consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2583) granting a franking privilege to Edith Bolling Wilson and consider the same at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that my position on this matter was misquoted in the press, and I would like to have two minutes in which to explain my attitude. Will the gentleman grant me that time?

Mr. GRIEST. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all mail matter sent by the post by Edith Bolling Wilson, widow of the late Woodrow Wilson, under her written autograph signature, be conveyed free of postage during her natural life.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical in language and purport with a bill considered by the Post Office Committee of the House and favorably reported. It is in accordance with all of the precedents since the beginning of our Government, from the time of Mrs. Washington to the case of Mrs. Harding. The only manner in which it is not a precedent is the sad circumstance that two cases of this kind should come before one Congress. I hope the measure will pass without further delay.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIEST. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatever to this particular resolution granting merely the franking privilege. It is a proper one and ought to pass, and it will cost a very nominal amount. What I do object to is the attempt that will be made a little later on to establish as a permanent practice of our Government the payment of a pension of $5,000 per year for life to the widows of Presidents. I think it is a bad practice. It should not be established as a permanent right. It is against the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, which puts on an equality every widow of our land, and presumes that they shall be granted equal rights. If we pay a rich widow of a President $5,000 a year as long as she lives, just because she is the widow of a President, when we do not pay it to the widow of any other American citizen, it is making a very unfair distinction not warranted by the Constitution in favor of one and against the other that should never exist in this Republic.

That is my position with respect to these special privilege resolutions.

There is now pending a bill, already passed by another body, to pay the widow of a President $5,000 a year for life. If she needed it, it might present a different question, but she is well off financially; she has much of this world's goods that will permit her to continue to live in luxury for the rest of her life. I shall object to that bill, and I shall object, so long as I am a Member of this House, to every similar bill that seeks to pay a pension of $5,000 a year for life to a widow who is worth at least a half million of dollars. I have consistently opposed every such measure since I have been in Congress.

Mr. GRIEST. There is no pension involved in this.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand, but there will be another bill later on proposing a pension of $5,000 per year for life.

When this franking resolution was called up late the other evening I objected to it being considered then, as the late hour did not permit of my making this statement, and I thought that it should be made by some one when such resolution was passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar House bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5078, the Interior Department appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Interior Department appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. McKEOWN. I shall object for the present.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—STEAMSHIP "BARON BERWICK."

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report concerning a claim against the United States presented by the British Government for damages sustained by the British steamship Baron Berwick as a result of a collision in Quiberon Bay, France, on August 22, 1918, between that vessel and the United States steamship Iroquois (now Freedom) and a further collision in Roscanvel Bay, France, on October 5, 1918, of the United States destroyer Truxton with the Baron Berwick. The report requests that the recommendation of the Secretary of War and of the Secretary of the Navy as indicated therein be adopted and that the Congress authorize the appropriation of the sum necessary to pay the indemnity offered by the representative of the American Expeditionary Forces.

I recommend that, in order to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, the Congress, as an act of grace and without reference to the legal liability of the United States in the premises, authorize an appropriation of an amount which will be equivalent to £6,200.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1924.

AMENDMENT TO THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an amendment which I expect to offer to the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an amendment which he expects to offer to the revenue bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the amendment referred to:

Mr. LONGWORTH offers the following substitute for the Garner amendment to sections 210 and 211 and subdivision (c) of section 216:

"On page 29 strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 to 18, inclusive, on page 30, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 210. (a) In lieu of the tax imposed by section 210 of the revenue act of 1921, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual (except as provided in subdivision (b) of this section) a normal tax of 6 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216, except that in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such excess amount shall be 2 per cent and upon the next $4,000 of such excess amount shall be 5 per cent;

"(b) In lieu of the tax imposed by subdivision (a), there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every nonresident alien individual, a resident of a contiguous country, a normal tax equal to the sum of the following:

"(1) Two per cent of the amount by which the part of the net income attributable to wages, salaries, professional fees, or other amounts received as compensation for personal services actually performed in the United States exceeds the credits provided in subdivisions (d) and (e) of section 216; but the amount taxable at such 2 per cent rate shall not exceed $4,000;

"(2) Five per cent of the amount by which such part of the net income exceeds the sum of (A) the credits provided in subdivisions (d) and (e) of section 216, plus (B) $4,000; but the amount taxable at such 5 per cent rate shall not exceed $4,000; and

"(3) Six per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the sum of (A) the amount taxed under paragraphs (1) and (2), plus (B) the credits provided in section 216."

Also strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, on page 30; lines 1 to 24, inclusive, page 31; and lines 1 to 26, inclusive, page 32, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 211. (a) In lieu of the tax imposed by section 211 of the revenue act of 1921, but in addition to the normal tax imposed by section 210 of this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a surtax equal to three-fourths of the sum of the following:

"Two per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $10,000 and does not exceed $12,000;

"Three per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $12,000 and does not exceed $14,000;

"Four per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $14,000 and does not exceed $16,000;

"Five per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $16,000 and does not exceed $18,000;

"Six per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $18,000 and does not exceed $20,000;

"Eight per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $22,000;

"Nine per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $22,000 and does not exceed $24,000;

"Ten per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $24,000 and does not exceed $26,000;

"Eleven per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $26,000 and does not exceed $28,000;

"Twelve per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $28,000 and does not exceed $30,000;

"Thirteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $30,000 and does not exceed $32,000;

"Fifteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $32,000 and does not exceed $36,000;

"Sixteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $36,000 and does not exceed $38,000;

"Seventeen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $38,000 and does not exceed $40,000;

"Eighteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $40,000 and does not exceed $42,000;

"Nineteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $42,000 and does not exceed $44,000;

"Twenty per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $44,000 and does not exceed $46,000;

"Twenty-one per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $46,000 and does not exceed $48,000;

"Twenty-two per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $48,000 and does not exceed $50,000;

"Twenty-three per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $52,000;

"Twenty-four per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $52,000 and does not exceed $54,000;

"Twenty-five per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $54,000 and does not exceed $56,000;

"Twenty-six per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $56,000 and does not exceed $58,000;

"Twenty-seven per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $58,000 and does not exceed $60,000;

"Twenty-eight per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $60,000 and does not exceed $62,000;

"Twenty-nine per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $62,000 and does not exceed $64,000;

"Thirty per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $64,000 and does not exceed $66,000;

"Thirty-one per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $66,000 and does not exceed $68,000;

"Thirty-two per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $68,000 and does not exceed $70,000;

"Thirty-three per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $70,000 and does not exceed $72,000;

"Thirty-four per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $72,000 and does not exceed $74,000;

"Thirty-five per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $74,000 and does not exceed $76,000;

"Thirty-six per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $76,000 and does not exceed $78,000;

"Thirty-seven per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $78,000 and does not exceed $80,000;

"Thirty-eight per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $80,000 and does not exceed $82,000;

"Thirty-nine per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $82,000 and does not exceed $84,000;

"Forty per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $84,000 and does not exceed $86,000;

"Forty-one per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $86,000 and does not exceed $88,000;

"Forty-two per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $88,000 and does not exceed $90,000;

"Forty-three per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $90,000 and does not exceed $92,000;

"Forty-four per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $92,000 and does not exceed $94,000;

"Forty-five per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $94,000 and does not exceed $96,000;

"Forty-six per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $96,000 and does not exceed $98,000;

"Forty-seven per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $98,000 and does not exceed $100,000;

"Forty-eight per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

"Forty-nine per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $200,000;

"Fifty per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $200,000."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was to print for information an amendment to the revenue bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. On a motion to recommit, or how?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It will be offered in a proper parliamentary way.

AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by remarks in the RECORD in connection with the bill H. R. 3206 to amend the Federal reserve act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in connection with a bill to amend the Federal reserve act. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to a letter of Hon. D. R. Crissinger, governor Federal Reserve Board, inserted in the RECORD of February 26 by Mr. WINGO, I beg to say that you will note in this letter and accompanying statement that Mr. Crissinger speaks only in terms of net earnings. Members of Congress are entitled to know about gross earnings and how they are spent.

During 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921 Mr. Crissinger states that 2 per cent could have been paid member banks, but according to his statement it would have been impossible during 1922 and 1923.

In the first week of May, 1922, the loans and discounts of the New York Federal Reserve Bank amounted to $89,956,248, while the building occupied by it cost about $25,000,000. On the same date the loans and discounts of the National City Bank of New York amounted to $506,840,494 and its bank building $6,060,000. On the same date the loans and discounts of the National Bank of Commerce of New York amounted to $259,165,930 and its bank building $4,000,000.

It makes some difference how money is spent in expensive buildings, does it not? National banks have to pay from 4 to 5 per cent on savings accounts to their customers, and reserve city banks pay 2 per cent on all balances carried by their customer banks, therefore they have to so spend and expend to meet their expenses and pay a dividend to their stockholders; while the system, managed absolutely by a board over which there is no check at all as to how much it will spend and expend, but with a capital and surplus of $330,000,000, costing it about 2 per cent, and with an additional $2,000,000,000 furnished by member banks as reserve balances free of charge—not costing the system a penny—says it can not pay 2 per cent on balances.

While banks are daily going bankrupt and while agriculture is dragging on its belly with nowhere to go, let us see what this high-handed, unrestricted bunch is doing with profits made out of member banks. They have spent to date $150,000,000 for buildings and fixtures and have paid into the Federal Government $140,000,000 as franchise tax to date. In 1917 the entire salary and wages account of the New York Federal Reserve Bank was $970,580, and its total loans and discounts were $399,078,000, which shows $1 of expense to every $413 of loans and discounts. On January 25, 1922, the salary and wages account of the same New York Federal Reserve Bank was $4,988,703, with loans and discounts of $146,526,938, or $1 of expense to every $29 of loans and discounts. In 1917 the loans and discounts as above stated, in amount $399,078,000, were administered by 12 officers only, while in 1921 40 officers administered loans of $146,526,938. In other words, 28 more officers are employed to administer loans and discounts that had shrunken more than 60 per cent, or an increase of more than 200 per cent in officers to look after a business showing a 60 per cent decrease in loans and discounts.

The salaries of these 40 officers amounted to more than that of the President and Vice President of the United States, half of the Senators, and the governors of 12 States. Why should you worry when these salaries are coming out of the profits of hard-earned money furnished by member banks that have to "come across" under the law without any say-so as to how it should be spent?

The manager of the foreign department of the New York Federal Reserve Bank entered the service at an annual salary of $1,080, while in 1922 he received $7,500.

The manager at large—whatever that might be—entered the service at an annual salary of $1,500, while in 1922 he received $10,000.

The manager of the supply department entered the service at a salary of $1,000 annually, and in 1922 he received an increase of 500 per cent, viz, a salary of $6,000.

The deputy governor entered the service at an annual salary of $4,200, while in 1922 he received an increase to $22,000—423 per cent.

The controller of administration entered the service at a salary of $2,400, while in 1922 he received a salary of $12,500—an increase of 420 per cent.

The manager of the check department entered the service at a salary of $1,500 annually, while in 1922 he received a salary of $7,200—an increase of 380 per cent.

A Mr. Matterson entered the service at a salary of $2,400 annually, while in 1922 he received a salary of $10,000—an increase of 316 per cent.

The controller of cash entered the service at a salary of $3,000, while in 1922 he received one of $12,000—an increase of 300 per cent.

The manager of discount department entered the service at a salary of $1,500, while in 1922 he received a salary of $5,000.

The controller at large (whatever that is) entered the service at a salary of $4,000, while in 1922 he received a salary of $15,000.

The manager of personal service department entered the service at a salary of $2,250, while in 1922 he received a salary of $7,200.

The manager of Government-bond department entered the service at a salary of $1,800, and in 1922 he received a salary of $5,500.

A Mr. Hendricks entered the service at a salary of $6,000, and in 1922 he received a salary of $18,000.

The governor of New York Federal Reserve Bank has had his salary increased from $30,000 to $50,000.

I shall not take the space or time to give an account of other Federal reserve banks, but you will find that they are all lined up in like fashion.

Let us take a look at the expense account of the 12 Federal reserve banks in 1921. This account amounted to $36,006,065. New York, with an expense account of $8,167,780, headed the list, while Minneapolis, with an expense account of $1,325,867, tailed the list. Federal reserve officers were paid salaries of $2,385,994 at the expense of member banks, while clerk hire amounted to $15,201,393, and "special officers and watchmen" were paid $789,879, also at the expense of member banks. All other expenses, whatever they may have been, amounted to $1,102,984.

It cost member banks $7,500 for Federal reserve governers to "confer"; $4,448 for Federal reserve agents to "confer"—some conferences. This should bring to your memory the conference of the advisory countil of May 18, 1920, when it, behind closed doors, advised the deflation policy.

It cost member banks $168,556 to hold director's meetings while 173 out of 254 lived in the same town where the bank or its branch is located. Traveling expenses cost member banks $357,962—some travelers.

All of these items are subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board located at Washington, over which there is no check whatsoever.

Gentlemen, you may not be bankers, but with the following figures, or if you were personally responsible to the stockholders, do not you think that you could pay member banks something for the use of this gigantic sum?

In round numbers, capital furnished by members amount to	$110,000,000
Surplus made out of members' capital and balances	220,000,000
Reserve balances and other balances carried by members and the Government without cost to the system	1,900,000,000
Total	2,230,000,000

(On which the system pays members 6 per cent on the $110,000,000 only. In the meantime it charges 4½ per cent for loans made to member banks.)

The Government furnished $83,000,000 in setting up the system, while the Government has received from the system an amount, in round numbers, amounting to $140,000,000 in franchise taxes to date. In the meantime, Mr. Crissinger states, that in acting as fiscal agent for the Government, an expense equal to 26 per cent of its total operating expenses is incurred to the system. While the system operates for the Government at a cost of 26 per cent of its total expense, yet it does not receive one penny from the Government, but instead continues to pay into the Federal Treasury millions of dollars made of member banks' money. You should also bear in mind that the surpluses created from time to time, and the buildings, sites, and fixtures, while made out of the profits of the funds furnished by member banks, belong to the Government, and thus can not be divided with members in case of liquidation. Another reason why the system can not pay 2 per cent is that, not being satisfied with placing millions of dollars in buildings, sites, and fixtures which belong to the Government, it has further agreed that all of these items can be liquidated from year to year out of profits which are now being made and which should go to member banks. How many country banks are making enough money these days to enable them to charge off any part of the items carried as buildings, real estate, and fixtures? These banks serving as best they can, under the absolute control of the system, would be very glad indeed to make some profits, so as to charge off bad debts which accumulated during 1920 and 1921, when the system put on its pet scheme of deflation.

The Federal reserve act is all right as originally passed and as originally planned to function. The great trouble is with the regulations formulated by the system in administering the act, which regulations created new departments, additional functions, and so forth, which are throttling country banks. What are they? One is the taking away from member banks their incomes from exchange, which is but a reasonable wage for service. The system even tried to force State banks into membership by requiring them to collect on a par basis, which they refused to do, and were sustained in the courts. The system further refuses to give member banks immediate credit for their remittances. In the meantime, if the requisite reserve of any member bank falls just one day below the required amount under the law, it penalizes them from 6 to 12 per cent, while at the same time it takes from two to eight days to give that same member bank credit for its remittance. Country banks have to give immediate credit to their customers for all deposits, and all such deposits are therefore subject to immediate check on the part of customers, while with the treatment handed country banks by the system it is sometimes hard for them to make ends meet and keep their doors open. Oh, yes, this is all right for the large banks, which get their collections free through the system on every nook and corner of the earth, and it is all right with them to have their credits held up from two to eight days, for they are well able to stand for it. If it is the intention, as stated by some, that country banks should be weeded out, and if this is a part of the program, why such a hard and slow process?

What are some of the things that country banks are asking for? Give them back their exchange, their living wage for serving large city banks in collecting for them. Give them immediate credit for their remittances, subject to their check, in order that they may be able to carry on in a satisfactory manner in serving their customers and the system also.

Again, if the system, as well as the large city banks—that is, those located in reserve and central reserve cities, who by the way get all of the accommodations that are supposed to be rendered to all members, does not want to cut out all extravagance and thereby pay members 2 per cent, let the Congress pass an amendment that I am now offering to reduce reserve balances carried by country banks from 7 per cent on demand deposits to 5 per cent, and from 3 per cent on time deposits to 2 per cent. In effect this would be thus: A country member bank with $50,000 demand deposits and $50,000 time deposits would have to carry under the present law a balance of $5,000 with the system, while under the above-proposed amendment it would have to carry only $3,500, thus releasing $1,500 to be used for loans which, at 7 per cent, would bring in $105. To pass my amendment (H. R. 3206) this same member bank would receive 2 per cent on its balance of $5,000, which would bring in $100. This, you see, would answer the same purpose, while at the same time the system would not be forced to do things which it claims my amendment would force it to do.

Now, you say, can Federal reserve banks do this? During the war and panic they operated on smaller balances than they now have, and with all their demands, both from members and the Government, they got through in fine shape. Now, with around two billions of balances furnished by members the demand for loans from members is so slack that they do not have to wait on my amendment to force them into the open market in competition with members. They now have about $800,000,000 invested in the open market out of balances carried by member banks which they have to use because the cash is in their coffers and they have nowhere else to turn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KOPP, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the balance of the week, on account of illness.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW 11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if we are likely to get through this bill this week?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I see no reason why we should not get through to-morrow. When we have disposed of this pending motion, which will not take more than five minutes, I think we should not be long in getting through with the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Under the circumstances, it seems to me, when we are very desirous to continue hearings on an important matter until 12 o'clock, we ought to have that opportunity.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the motion to print something in the RECORD by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] carrying the parliamentary situation under which he is going to offer it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; that is carried here.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would not the gentleman be willing to put that in the RECORD?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is it the purpose of the committee to get through with this bill to-morrow?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; that is the purpose if we can meet to-morrow at 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

LAW ENFORCEMENT.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter which I wrote to the editor of the Washington Post on February 7, and an editorial from the Evening Star of the same date.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting in the RECORD a letter addressed by him to the editor of the Washington Post and an editorial from the Evening Star. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I could not hear what the gentleman was trying to insert in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. A letter which he wrote to the editor of the Washington Post and an editorial from the Washington Evening Star.

Mr. RANKIN. On what subject?

Mr. HUDSON. On law enforcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted, I insert a letter addressed by me to the editor of the Washington Post, and an editorial from the Evening Star, as follows:

FEBRUARY 27, 1924.

Mr. EDWARD B. MCLEAN,
Editor the Washington Post,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The editorials of the Washington Post, usually so fair and clean and sound in their findings, and because of that I am greatly disturbed by the tone and inferences of your editorial of this morning entitled "Investigate prohibition enforcement." Possibly the mania exhibited by Congress to investigate everything and everybody under the sun has some way invaded your editorial sanctum.

The most unfortunate incident of the serious injury to Senator GREENE is indeed deeply regrettable. Indeed it is, and should be most thoroughly investigated, and anyone found guilty of any carelessness or wantonness should be adequately punished. But why the cry about prohibition enforcement as a source of unlawful endeavor and unholy zeal on the part of legally appointed enforcement officers? In the present case it is the testimony, I understand, of the police officers with the prohibition enforcement officers that the fleeing crooks were those who fired the first shots. What about the free use of firearms by crooks of all descriptions. Has no innocent bystander or pedestrian been injured by the reckless shots of burglars, thieves, robbers, etc.? Now, as a fact, does not the prohibition enforcement department make a pretty good record when you consider the fact that in the life of the department 8,000 different men at different times have been employed, and the charge of dereliction of any kind brought against them has been less than 1 per cent, or 80 out of 8,000? Is not this a record that shows discretion and cool judgment when you consider the obstacles that they are constantly meeting in the proper enforcement of law? Much of their dealings have to do with the vicious and depraved class of criminals to whom life is very cheap, as evidenced by the 35 that have given their lives while on duty for the enforcement of law.

"Corruption charged and proven" has tended to weaken the people in their support of enforcement and the cause of prohibition. My dear editor, the fact that enforcement officers have been guilty of corruption is not unique to the presence of national prohibition with the prohibition enforcement department. Members of police commissions, chiefs of police, and other police officers all down the line have been found guilty of corruption and betrayal of trust from time to time in every city of the land. You speak of the right to use the highways without imperilment, and I most heartily agree with you. But what about the intoxicated motorist that drives down our streets and highways, imperiling the lives of hundreds of pedestrians and equally hundreds of motorists?

Yours sincerely,

[From the Evening Star, Wednesday, February 27, 1924.]

INQUIRY INTO THE GREENE SHOOTING.

Two resolutions are pending before the Senate relating to the shooting of Senator GREENE in a bootleg pursuit in this city. One, introduced by the Senator from New Jersey, Mr. EDWARDS, who is an avowed and enthusiastic "wet," is in its preamble and specific text a general criticism of the whole prohibition enforcement service, and, in effect, an argument against prohibition in practice. The other, introduced by Senator GREENE'S colleague, Mr. DALE, has direct bearing simply upon the deplorable affair in point, and directs an investigation of this case and of such practices of the enforcement forces that may endanger innocent lives.

It is to be hoped that the Senate will, of these two resolutions, adopt that of Senator DALE, which is aimed at the clearing of the facts in this particular case, and has no purpose to belittle or check the proper enforcement of the prohibition act.

The lamentable tragedy which has so nearly cost Senator GREENE'S life has no bearing upon the merits of prohibition. It is one of the incidents of enforcement, an accident due, it may be, to overzealousness on the part of an enforcement agent. Yet it has been seized upon by the foes of prohibition as an argument for a slackening of enforcement procedure, indeed for the modification of the enforcement act, and even for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The fact that a citizen was shot by a stray bullet in the pursuit of a fleeing lawbreaker has nothing to do with the merits of the law which has been broken. If a burglar is pursued as he leaves the house which he has entered with felonious purpose, is fired upon by the householder or by the policeman, and an innocent bystander is wounded, perhaps killed, there is no warrant whatever for a demand for a repeal of the law against burglary. Should a man eminent in public life be such a victim, as in this case, no one would ever propose that the pursuit of burglars should be prohibited as too dangerous for the public safety. No one would demand an investigation of the whole practice of burglar pursuit.

Unquestionably the enforcement of the prohibition act is difficult. It has been attended with many scandals, with some betrayals of their trust by enforcement officers. The law has been flagrantly violated by people in high places as in lower stations of life. A deliberate attempt has been made to bring it into ridicule and to break down the processes of enforcement. The seizure of this unhappy affair is now sought by avowed enemies of prohibition to bring about an investigation which can serve no end save to permit the marshaling of all the faults and failures of the law without a showing of its overwhelming successes and beneficial effects.

No supporter of prohibition can or will object to an inquiry into the shooting of Senator GREENE and the dangers attendant upon vigorous law enforcement with a view to finding a safer and even more effective means of carrying the law fully into effect.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, in accordance with the order previously made, until to-morrow, Friday, February 29, 1924, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 29, 1924.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we bless Thee for the continuance of Thy grace unto us and for all the mercies with which Thou dost crown our days. We humbly beseech of Thee to direct our ways this day. May we find ourselves glad to do Thy will, always seeking not only the welfare of others but the glory of Thy great name, and may the example of Him who went about doing good be to us an inspiration and guidance continually. We ask in the name of Jesus. Amen.

LEASES OF NAVAL OIL LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in further response to Senate Resolution 147, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 29, 1924.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In further response to Senate Resolution 147, dated February 7, 1924, I have the honor to transmit herewith photostat copies, in triplicate, of papers in the Bureau of Mines covering the period from April 21, 1922, to February 7, 1924, inclusive.

Each copy comprises two parts; the first comprises three folders relating, respectively, to leases in naval petroleum reserve No. 2, numbered N. R. 21, N. R. 22, and N. R. 23. In each folder is a copy of the lease and the correspondence relating thereto. The second division of this information comprises 36 folders from our general correspondence files. Each folder covers a particular subject or phase, described on the first sheet of the folder.

Referring to the letter from the Secretary of the Senate, dated February 8, 1924, paragraph (d), which reads as follows: "* * * and all contracts for drilling wells on naval oil reserves, date and terms of same, reasons therefor, and the number and date of the drilling of wells on private lands adjacent to oil reserves"; it is believed that the information requested in the first part of the above paragraph will be found in the accompanying papers and those previously submitted to the committee.

The Bureau of Mines does not have information as to the dates of the drilling of wells on private lands adjacent to oil reserves.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution unanimously adopted by members of the congregations of the Congregational and Baptist Churches of New Ipswich, N. H., favoring an amendment to the Constitution regulating child labor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ERNST presented a petition of the committee on immigration of the National Society, Sons of the American Revolution, in the State of Kentucky, favoring the passage of legislation restricting immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution adopted by members of Missouri Valley Local, No. 387, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, in the State of North Dakota, favoring the enactment of legislation granting adjusted compensation to veterans of the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petitions of W. N. Burington and 61 other citizens of Wheelock, of E. Bylin and 60 other citizens of Tioga, of J. M. Vorachet and 26 other citizens of Conway, and of F. A. Foley and 17 other citizens of Rolla, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for an increased tariff duty on wheat and the repeal of the drawback provision and the milling-in-bond privilege of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act of 1922, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petitions of Andrew Tinglestad and 84 other citizens of St. John, of H. E. Rutter and 57 other citizens of Michigan, and of E. S. Stone and 61 other citizens of Leeds, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the repeal or reduction of the so-called nuisance and war taxes, especially the tax on industrial alcohol, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petitions of E. Stubson and 43 other citizens of Warwick, of Charles Johnson and 12 other citizens of Reynolds, of W. P. Hetter and 18 other citizens of Esmond, and of H. A. Lansrud and 38 other citizens of Helmdahl, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of the so-called Norris-Sinclair bill, providing aid to agriculture, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented the following joint memorials of the Legislature of Montana, which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of senate joint memorial 1, enacted by the extraordinary session of the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by Joseph M. Dixon, governor of said State, on the 2d day of February, 1924.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 5th day of February, A. D. 1924.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.
By CLIFFORD L. WALKER,
Deputy.

Senate joint memorial 1, introduced by Greening.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Montana on February 26, 1921, by legislative enactment accepted the provisions of the act of Congress of June 4, 1920, granting to the State of Montana certain lands on the Crow Indian Reservation on condition that the Crow Indian children may be permitted to attend the public schools of said State on an equality with white children; and

Whereas such public schools admitted said Crow Indian children in September, 1921, without any additional income to meet the necessary expense incident thereto except that derived from a proportional apportionment of income from the State fund amounting to $5 or $6 per child, or about 5 per cent of the per capita cost of instruction; and

Whereas school facilities for both white and Indian children in the region affected have been gravely curtailed and a heavy burden of additional taxation has been imposed upon the taxpayers by this governmental action; and

Whereas such injustice and injury to the residents of that section was unintentional and is due to the fact that the additional income contemplated has to date amounted to nothing whatsoever and may not be expected for some years either to the local districts upon which the sudden and disproportionate burden is imposed or to the State as a whole: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Montana, That the Congress of the United States be respectfully memorialized to grant to the Indian Bureau authority to pay tuition to the school districts affected in conformity with the general practice of paying tuition for the children of noncitizen Indians of other tribes in Montana and elsewhere until the entire load can be equitably thrown upon the said districts without injustice and injury to the Indian and white children resident therein; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President, the Secretary of the Interior, and to the United States Senators and Members of Congress.

NELSON STORY, JR.,
President of the Senate.
CALVIN CRUMBAKER,
Speaker of the House.

Approved, February 2, 1924.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of an act entitled "A memorial to the Congress of the United States asking for appropriations to continue construction work on the Flathead irrigation project and on all the other Federal irrigation projects in the State of Montana," and enacted by the eighteenth extra session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana and approved by Joseph M. Dixon, governor of said State, on the 2d day of February, 1924.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 5th day of February, A. D. 1924.

[SEAL.]

C. T. STEWART,
Secretary of State.
By CLIFFORD L. WALKER,
Deputy.

House joint memorial 1, introduced by Brandjord, to the Congress of the United States, asking for appropriations to continue construction work on the Flathead irrigation project and on all the other Federal irrigation projects in the State of Montana.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

SECTION 1. We, the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, assembled in special session, the house and senate concurring, do hereby respectfully call your attention to the following facts relating to Federal irrigation projects in this State:

"1. Good faith on the part of the Federal Government toward each and all of the thousands of settlers who have homesteaded on the Flathead project, who have paid the Government for the land, established homes thereon, and patiently waited for irrigation water for 10 years or longer, demands a speedy completion of the project. The slow progress of construction on this project, due to irregular and insufficient appropriations, coupled with the dire distress besetting agriculture in the Northwest, has starved away from the project hundreds of the original homesteaders, and so impoverished others that they are now unable to make the fullest use of irrigation; but surely these sad circumstances, largely due to neglect on the part of the Government, do not justify the Government in further delay in furnishing water for all remaining settlers, who must have it in order to make a living. Good faith with these settlers demands continuous construction.

"2. The Indian Service and the Bureau of Reclamation have recommended an appropriation of $300,000 for this project for the 1925 fiscal year, and the program of construction they have agreed upon includes laterals for 7,000 acres for which no irrigation water is now available. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 10, 1924, top of page 805.) Hundreds of people reside on this area.

"3. In spite of the difficulties besetting settlers on this project, they show a splendid record in the payment of water charges. Up to January 4, 1924, the white settlers on the project have paid a total of $124,800 in water rentals. (See statement of Chief Clerk of Reclamation Service in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, same date and page as above cited.) This shows that they use water and pay for it.

"4. Spasmodic prosecution of reclamation works inevitably results in greatly increased cost, involving waste of Government funds and additional burdens on agriculture. Economy demands continuous construction. (See argument of the Hon. L. C. CRAMTON on this point, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 10, 1924, page 802.)

"5. While irrigation projects do not, as a rule, bring immediate and direct returns to the Government, they enlarge the productive area of the country, add to its permanent resources, and increase the strength and greatness of the whole Union. The building of irrigation projects is the building of empires."

SEC. 2. In view of these considerations, we, the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby respectfully petition that the Congress of the United States do appropriate for the Flathead irrigation project for the 1925 fiscal year not less than $300,000, being the sum recommended by the Indian Service and the Bureau of Reclamation, so that continuous and economical construction may be insured. We also pray that sufficient appropriations be made for all other Federal projects in Montana to insure continuous construction, and that no appropriation for these projects be reduced below the amounts allowed by the Bureau of the Budget.

SEC. 3. It is hereby directed that the secretary of state of the State of Montana transmit certified copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

CALVIN CRUMBAKER,
Speaker of the House.
W. S. HALEY,
President pro tempore.

Approved, February 2, 1924.

PUBLICITY OF CERTAIN INCOME-TAX RETURNS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution (S. Res. 180) coming over from the preceding day, which will be read.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday make it necessary that we shall proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 157?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the conclusion of routine morning business. Resolutions coming over from a previous day come under the head of routine morning business.

Mr. HARRISON. I was under the impression that morning business was closed after concurrent or other resolutions were submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will turn to Rule VII he will discover that morning business is closed after resolutions coming over from a previous day are disposed of.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to submit a suggestion respecting the resolution as a result of consultation with the author of the resolution, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and others who are interested in the subject. There are some recitals in the preamble to the resolution that raise issues of fact. It is suggested that the preamble be stricken out and that the resolution be agreed to without the preamble, if that be agreeable to the author of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The author of the resolution would have the right to perfect his resolution.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have no objection to the preamble of the resolution being stricken out, if the resolution itself may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The preamble would have to be dealt with after action upon the resolution itself.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the Secretary read the resolution proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 180) submitted yesterday by Mr. McKELLAR, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to turn over to the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, as by law he is authorized to do, the income-tax returns filed by the said H. F. Sinclair, the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co., the Mammoth Oil Co., the Hyva Corporation, the Selah Corporation, E. L. Doheny, E. L. Doheny, jr., the Mexican Petroleum Co., the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., and A. B. Fall, together with all files, claims, papers, settlements, reports, formal and informal, adjustments, memoranda, or refunds, and all other files and data attached thereto or connected therewith, in the years for which said leases were consummated and for the years prior and subsequent thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to submit in his own behalf certain amendments to the resolution, which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 5, after the word "do," it is proposed to strike out the word "the" and to insert the word "all."

Mr. McKELLAR. That amendment is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The author of the resolution accepts that amendment, and, in the absence of objection, it is agreed to. The next amendment proposed to the resolution by the present occupant of the chair will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 8, after the word "junior," it is proposed to insert the words "the Securities Investment Co."

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The author of the resolution accepts the amendment, and, in the absence of objection, it is agreed to. The next amendment proposed to the resolution by the present occupant of the chair will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 13, after the word "therewith," it is proposed to strike out the following words: "in the years for which said leases were consummated and for the years prior and subsequent thereto."

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that the word "all" will include all tax returns which the committee may desire, and for that reason I shall not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the purpose of the Chair in offering the amendment. The author of the resolution accepts the amendment and, in the absence of objection, it is agreed to. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee as amended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I understand that the preamble to the resolution is withdrawn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is to be withdrawn after the resolution has been acted on.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to withdrawing the preamble.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But I understood that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] suggested that the preamble be withdrawn before the Senate acts upon the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can not be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I believe that would be against the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. That may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the preamble be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the withdrawal of the preamble to the resolution prior to acting upon the resolution itself. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is upon agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to turn over to the Public Lands and Surveys Committee of the Senate, as by law he is authorized to do, all income-tax returns filed by H. F. Sinclair, the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co., the Mammoth Oil Co., the Hyva Corporation, the Selah Corporation, E. L. Doheny, E. L. Doheny, jr., the Securities Investment Co., the Mexican Petroleum Co., the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., and A. B. Fall, together with all files, claims, papers, settlements, reports, formal and informal, adjustments, memoranda, or refunds, and all other files and data attached thereto or connected therewith.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DAUGHERTY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed; and under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on yesterday the Chair lays before the Senate Senate Resolution 157, which the Secretary will read.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 157) submitted by Mr. WHEELER on the 13th instant, as modified by him on the 19th instant, as follows:

Whereas the Federal Trade Commission has conducted investigations of alleged violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Clayton Act against monopolies and unlawful restraints of trade and has transmitted to the Attorney General the record of more than 50 such investigations, indicating a violation of said acts, for the initiation of such proceedings for the enforcement of the law as the Attorney General may be advised to make; and

Whereas the Attorney General has taken no action upon said records transmitted to him by the Federal Trade Commission for the purpose of securing indictments against the parties named therein and has brought no proceedings for the prevention of such violations, by injunction or otherwise, except in two cases; and

Whereas the evidence presented several months ago before the special committee of the Senate investigating the United States Veterans' Bureau disclosed acts of negligence and corruption on the part of officials of the United States Veterans' Bureau and others, and no action has been taken by the Department of Justice to prosecute the officials and persons alleged to have acted illegally and corruptly; and

Whereas several weeks have transpired since the evidence was presented and disclosures were made before the Public Lands and Surveys Committee of the Senate charging past and present public officials of the Government and others with conspiracies to defraud the Government, violations of law, and corrupt practices, and no prosecutions have been undertaken; and

Whereas no action has been taken by the Department of Justice in prosecuting to a conclusion the so-called war-fraud cases; and

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators consisting of Senators BROOKHART, McLEAN, JONES of Washington, WHEELER, and ASHURST be authorized and directed to investigate the circumstances and facts, and report the same to the Senate, concerning the failure of Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General of the United States, to properly prosecute violators of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Clayton Act against monopolies and unlawful restraint of trade; the neglect and failure of the said Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General of the United States, to arrest and prosecute Albert B. Fall, Harry F. Sinclair, E. L. Doheny, C. R. Forbes, and their coconspirators in defrauding the Government, as well as the neglect and failure of the said Attorney General to arrest and prosecute many others for violations of Federal statutes; and his failure to properly, efficiently, and promptly prosecute and defend all manner of civil and criminal actions wherein the Government of the United States is interested as a party plaintiff or defendant. And said committee is further directed to inquire into, investigate, and report to the Senate the activities of the said Harry M. Daugherty, Attorney General, and any of his assistants in the Department of Justice which would in any manner tend to impair their efficiency or influence as representatives of the Government of the United States.

Resolved further, That in pursuance of the purposes of this resolution said committee, or any member thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-eighth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths and to employ stenographic assistance at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words; to report such hearings as may be had in connection herewith, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, at the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] I desire to modify the resolution as follows: Beginning on line 2 on page 2 I desire to strike out the words "Senators BROOKHART, McLEAN, JONES of Washington, WHEELER, and ASHURST" and to insert in place thereof "three members of the majority and two members of the minority."

I desire further to modify the resolution, after the words "United States" in line 13, page 3, by adding the following words:

The said committee above referred to and the chairman thereof shall be elected by the Senate of the United States.

I will suggest to the Members of the Senate that the purpose of so modifying the resolution is in order that the members of the committee shall be elected from the floor of the Senate instead of being named in the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution——

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Montana has a right to modify his own resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to put the question on the resolution as modified.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senate the Secretary will state the modifications of the resolution proposed by its author.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "Senators BROOKHART, McLEAN, JONES of Washington, WHEELER, and ASHURST" and to insert the words "three members of the majority and two members of the minority"; and after the words "United States" on line 13, page 3, to insert:

The said committee above referred to and the chairman thereof shall be elected by the Senate of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified by its author.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment to that portion of the resolution which has just been modified by the Senator from Montana. I am not sure whether under the new modification I have placed the amendment correctly, because I have no copy of the modification before me, but I offer the amendment to the resolution as it stood, and the secretary can easily place it in the modified form of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the words "consisting of" and then, as modified, the Senator from Massachusetts would strike out the words "three members of the majority and two members of the minority," and insert "be appointed by the Chair, and that said committee shall."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire if the amendment has been correctly stated.

Mr. LODGE. I think it has been correctly stated. I have not the modified form of the resolution before me, but as I listened to the reading the amendment seemed to me to be correctly stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the purpose of that amendment is to secure the appointment of the committee by the Chair. It has been said of the Senate by distinguished gentlemen in another part of the Capitol more than once that the Senate has no rules, but only customs. Like most generalizations, this one contains an element of truth. The Senate began with 22 members, and it has grown to be a body of 96 members. Its customs and traditions have remained, and I think have been of value not merely to the character of the Senate itself but to the conduct of the public business.

I am aware, of course, of the provisions of the rules in regard to the choice of standing and all other committees, but those provisions have been far more honored in the breach than in the observance. It has been, however, the universal practice, so far as I know, to leave the appointment of committees, whether provided by statute or by resolution passed at the moment, to the Chair.

I have had some experience in the Senate. For 12 years of my service I served under Democratic Vice Presidents as Presiding Officers, and I know that the practice of leaving the appointment of committees to the Presiding Officer, who represents the whole Senate, was observed then and was always observed in the same way when the Republican Party was in power. Whether the Presiding Officer was chosen for us by the people or whether he was selected by our own choice, we have always recognized the fairness and the capacity of the Chair in that respect.

The powers of the Presiding Officer in the Senate are limited, of course, to those necessary to a presiding officer—the power of recognition and the power to rule on points of order. He has no other powers, except such as are given to him either by tradition or by actual enactment of a statute or by the rules; but the tradition of the Senate I believe to be a sound one. No matter who occupies the chair which you are now occupying, sir [Mr. MOSES in the chair], I think it is essential to the conduct of the business in the Senate that the Presiding Officer, whether chosen by us or by the people, shall receive from the Senate every mark of personal confidence and respect. I dislike to see anything done in what I think is the manner and effect of the pending resolution in a form that breaks down the respect and the recognition which we have always given to our Presiding Officers, no matter what their party or how their power was derived. I am, therefore, opposed to making this change in what I think a very valuable tradition of the Senate. I will not go into the point of the distrust which is manifest or the reflection upon the Presiding Officer. I think the objection lies much deeper than that.

In the effort, by changing our method of appointing committees, to assure ourselves that this committee of investigation shall not be unduly impartial but assuredly hostile to the person investigated we have seen fit to attempt this change in our traditional custom. Personally, I desired an opportunity to oppose it and to vote against the proposed change in our practice, and therefore offer this amendment.

I do not desire to detain the Senate. This resolution has been too long delayed already. I merely desired to say these few words to express my own feeling about it—that it is a very unfortunate change to make in the practice of the Senate, for it establishes a precedent and sets aside one of more than a century, which, to my mind, can not but result in ills in the future which we and those who succeed us will deeply regret.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I find myself unable to agree with the position taken by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], both as to the question of fact involved in his declaration that the precedents and practices of the Senate preclude the Senate from electing its special committees and in the conclusion that the selection of committees by the Senate itself is a custom detrimental to the public interest and in conflict with sound policy and proper procedure by the Senate.

There have been many instances within my own experience and service in the Congress where special committees have been selected by processes other than by appointment of the Chair. Indeed, there are numerous precedents in the records of the Senate where special committees have been authorized, where subcommittees have been authorized to be selected by the chairmen of committees of the Senate. That the policy of the Senate itself selecting its committees is not regarded as unwise and subversive of public interest is reflected in the fact that the Senate rules require all standing committees, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate, to be selected by ballot—that is, elected—substantially in the manner that the resolution of the Senator from Montana requires this special committee to be selected, and that rule has been in force for many years.

If it is right and proper to elect the standing committees of the Senate, how can it be said to be detrimental to any public interest or subversive of or in conflict with any sound public policy for the Senate itself to take the responsibility of naming a special committee the nature of whose duties requires caution, and where a failure to exercise discretion upon the part of the Senate may result in criticism?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has assumed that for the Senate itself to elect this special committee is a reflection on the Presiding Officer of the Senate. How can that be, Mr. President? The Senate selects its own Presiding Officer. It can remove him by the simple process of electing another Presiding Officer, and it has reserved in its rules the unqualified right to select all committees; and whenever it has wanted to do so for any reason, it has in the past provided for the selection of special committees and of special subcommittees in other ways than by appointment of the Chair.

This is a case, sirs, in which the Senate ought to take the responsibility of selecting this special committee. This is a case in which the Chair ought not to want, and does not want, the responsibility of selecting this special committee. It has been openly declared that efforts have been contemplated to pack the committee. I know that the distinguished Senator who enjoys the honor of being the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], is incapable of lending himself to any scheme or plan or purpose to select an unfair special committee in this or in any case.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has received any assurance from the Presiding Officer of the Senate that he does not desire to appoint this committee, or whether anybody else has received such an assurance to his knowledge?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have never asked the Senator from Iowa whether he desires to appoint this committee.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator said a few moments ago, as I understood him, that the Senator from Iowa does not so desire.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have reason to believe that the Senator from Iowa does not want to appoint this committee.

Mr. BRUCE. That was not what the Senator from Arkansas stated, if I may be pardoned for saying so. Of course, I do not want to hold him too closely to the literal language that he employed——

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator may pursue any course that he pleases.

Mr. BRUCE. But the Senator's statement was that the Senator from Iowa does not desire to appoint the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator information that the Senator from Iowa does desire to appoint this special committee?

Mr. BRUCE. None whatever.

Mr. ROBINSON. I repeat the statement, Mr. President, and the Senator can satisfy himself in regard to it in any way that he chooses, that, in view of what has transpired in the Senate, the Senator from Iowa does not want to name this special committee.

Mr. BRUCE. Then I certainly should not force it upon him. Otherwise, I certainly should insist upon his not being stripped of the dignity and authority that belongs to his office.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am contending that this resolution does not strip the Senator from Iowa of any dignity or authority conferred on him by the rules of the Senate or by the customs and precedents of the Senate. I am insisting that by the selection of its own special committee the Senate is discharging its own responsibility, the responsibility which devolves primarily upon the Senate itself. I do not care what view of the matter the Senator from Maryland takes. I do not care how he or any other Senator votes upon this resolution or upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts. I want fair treatment of everybody concerned, and I am sure there is nothing in the practice or customs of the Senate which constitutes the selection of a special committee by the Senate itself a reflection on the Presiding Officer of the Senate. If it does, then how can it be said that the rule of the Senate that requires all standing committees of the Senate to be elected by the Senate is not a reflection upon the Presiding Officer of this body? When the Senate elects its special committees, the Senate takes responsibility for the committees itself. When the Senate requires the Presiding Officer to select a special committee, it places upon the Presiding Officer the responsibility of making the selection.

The Senate can, of course, pursue any course it desires to pursue. It can establish the precedent of requiring the Presiding Officer to select a special committee in a case where the responsibility is peculiarly upon the Senate itself, but it need not do so.

There are many exceptions to the practice of requiring or permitting the Chair to appoint special committees. Those exceptions are found in both the precedents of the Senate and the precedents of the House of Representatives. Why should it be insisted that the Chair, and not the Senate, make the selection? Let any Senator who has an answer to that question make it now in my time. Why should any presiding officer want to make the selections under the circumstances that surround this case? And why should Senators want to impose on the Presiding Officer of the Senate the responsibility which the country holds to be their own?

My attention has just been called to a fact I have overlooked, that the rule of the Senate not only requires that all standing committees shall be appointed by the Senate but it expressly requires that all special committees shall be appointed by the Senate—that is, all other committees.

Mr. LODGE. All other committees. I called attention to that when I spoke.

Mr. ROBINSON. The language is:

> All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered.

So that the rule requires that this committee shall be appointed by the ballot of the Senate; that is to say, elected by the Senate. I ask again, Why should the rule be disregarded in the selection of this committee? How can it reflect on anyone if the Senate obeys its rules?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I simply desire to say a few words in support of this resolution and to tell the Senate some of the reasons why I propose to have the members of the special committee named by the Senate itself. Probably under ordinary circumstances I would not be opposed to having the chairman name the committee, but, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has said, there are peculiar circumstances surrounding the situation with which we are confronted to-day. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] stated on the floor of the Senate that after consulting with the Attorney General he went to the chairman and asked him to appoint certain members upon that committee. All I am asking for is that we have a committee that will give the Attorney General of the United States a fair and an impartial investigation.

All I want to see is that we shall have a real investigation, and that men shall be upon that committee who will not be constantly consulting with the man who is being investigated. I read in this morning's paper the statement given out in Chicago yesterday by the Attorney General himself, in which he makes this startling statement. He said:

> If a bunch of Senators have not resigned this afternoon, I may have an important statement to make.

I would like to know just which of the Senators in this body he expects to resign from the United States Senate. I wonder which one of the Members of the Senate he is trying to intimidate. I wonder which one of the Members of the Senate he thinks he has something on, that he can force him to resign. I want to say to the Members of the Senate he has already apparently intimidated the man in the White House, because we all know that his resignation would be acceptable to the White House, and we all know that the President of the United States, for some unknown reason, has not had the intestinal stamina to ask him for that resignation. Having, if you please, apparently intimidated his superiors, he now comes to the point where he wants to intimidate the Members of the United States Senate.

I read an article in the New York Evening Mail, published in a special edition, clear across the front page, "Daugherty striking at his foes charges revenge," and that he declares, "Senator WHEELER seeks revenge for having been removed as Federal attorney in Montana"; plainly intimating, if you please, that I was removed by him as United States attorney, when no baser lie could ever have been told, because neither did I ever serve under Mr. Daugherty, nor was I ever removed as United States district attorney; neither did I resign, except voluntarily, and I was requested to stay in office by Mr. Gregory, the then United States Attorney General.

Not only that, but the article goes on to say that my war record is going to be attacked, and it reminds me of the old adage that when a man is on trial and he has a good defense, he should always present that defense to the court and to the jury; if he has no defense, either upon the law or the evidence, then he should immediately start to attack those who are trying to either investigate or prosecute the case.

So, in this instance, the Attorney General of the United States, first through the newspapers, makes an attack upon those who ask an investigation; then he attempts to intimidate the White House, and says that if he has to resign he will open up the tomb, or the closet, and let the rest of the skeleton come out of the closet. Then he starts in to intimidate the Members of the United States Senate.

It is for these reasons that I am insisting that a committee should be appointed which will give to the Attorney General the investigation which he himself claims he is very anxious to have.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I had not thought to make any remarks upon this branch of the subject, but since the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has referred to me, I think perhaps I ought to say a word.

I note that he quotes from an alleged statement made by the Attorney General. I think it might be useful at this point to have read at the desk a telegram which has appeared in all the morning papers, but which I ask to have read now for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

CHICAGO, ILL., February 20, 1924.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Do not fail to again advise the Senate that I have not opposed the passage of the resolution under consideration. I have made no statement nor authorized any for publication since leaving Washington. Having attended to the Government business which brought me here I am leaving to-night for Florida as intended and required. I have retained Hon. George E. Chamberlain and Hon. Paul Howland, who represented me in a similar attack a year ago in the House, inspired by the same influences who openly and secretly and on practically the same charges with substantially the same object in view, to represent me. They will give such attention as may be necessary in my personal behalf so that the regular force of the department and I may continue to give our attention to the Government business. I will return to Washington as soon as possible.

H. M. DAUGHERTY.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, it will be observed from that telegram that the Attorney General of the United States says he has neither made any statement since he left Washington nor authorized any; so, while I do not, of course, question that the Senator has read accurately from the paper, whether that is authorized or not I do not know. I will let the telegram speak for itself.

The Senator from Montana, perhaps unintentionally, has left the impression that somebody on this side has undertaken to get a packed jury for the consideration of this case. I understood him to say that I had conferred with the Attorney General, and then conferred with the President pro tempore of the Senate, obviously seeking to convey the impression that some committee had been agreed upon, and that an effort was made to get the President pro tempore of the Senate to appoint such committee.

I take this opportunity to say that there is no foundation whatever for that statement.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the distinguished Senator if he did not make that statement and answer "Yes" in response to a question I asked him on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. WILLIS. I am perfectly willing to have the RECORD read. I did not make the statement with the implication the Senator now tries to draw from it, and if he will permit me to proceed, I will state the facts. There is nothing to be hidden in this matter. The Senator will bear me out in what I am now about to say, that he, the Senator from Montana, and I talked about this matter of the membership of the committee, and I said to him at the outset, as I have said to him, I think, within 24 hours, that I thought it was improper that he, the Senator from Montana, should be a member of the committee, and the Senator knows that I meant nothing offensive personally in that. There is no reflection at all upon his character or ability. I think the Senator understands that. But since this matter has been brought up, I do say, Mr. President, that I think it is an unheard-of proceeding to have the prosecuting attorney in a case a member of the jury that is to try the case. I have never heard of such a thing in any legislative body.

Before I go into that further, however, let us talk more about this committee business. I did talk to my friend the Senator from Montana about the make-up of this committee. It will be recalled that the name of the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was mentioned. His was the first name that was mentioned, as I recall. The senior Senator from Idaho is not now on the floor——

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. In just a moment. I want to finish this statement. Following our conversation, I conferred with the senior Senator from Idaho and he advised me that he did not care to serve on the committee and gave sufficient reasons therefor, and that I reported to the Senator from Montana. I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I just came into the Chamber. Did the Senator from Ohio talk to the Attorney General about the make-up of the committee?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have not seen the Attorney General for probably a week——

Mr. CARAWAY. I say——

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator will just let me answer. When I did see the Attorney General the question of the make-up of the committee was discussed.

Mr. CARAWAY. It was?

Mr. WILLIS. It was. I told him I did not know how the committee would be appointed. I suggested to him the names of a number of members of the majority who I thought would be proper members for the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Now may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the rule to let the man who is going to be tried select the jury by which he is to be tried?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. Now, wait until I answer the Senator on that proposition. Certainly that is not the rule, nor was it proposed or thought of in this case.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then let me ask the Senator another question. Why was the Senator suggesting to the Attorney General certain men he thought would be suitable for that purpose? What was the object?

Mr. WILLIS. It was a perfectly natural and perfectly reasonable thing, Mr. President. The Attorney General asked me something about the make-up of the committee——

Mr. CARAWAY. I can see why the Attorney General should be vitally interested, but I never knew before of a Senator going and talking to a man who was to be investigated and helping him pick the jury.

Mr. WILLIS. I will take care of that, if the Senator will possess his soul in patience.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator would have to have a great deal of patience to approve of such a proposition as that.

Mr. WILLIS. I discussed with the Senator from Montana the name of the senior Senator from Idaho. His was the first name suggested. I suggested the name of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], whose name I am glad to see embodied in this resolution.

I suggested the name of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST]. I suggested the name of the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE]. I remember those were mentioned as possibly being members of the committee.

I submit that there was no impropriety in that. There was no suggestion that the Attorney General was to name the committee. He did not undertake to name the committee, and there was no suggestion of the kind ever made to the President of the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator if he feels that he has told all the story? Did I not ask the Senator if he would pick out from the Republican side some one of the progressive Members, on the Republican side, and he would not agree to any of the so-called progressives having representation upon the committee?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have just finished saying that the first name mentioned was that of the senior Senator from Idaho. He is a fairly progressive Senator, I had always supposed.

There is nothing to this proposition that there is an attempt anywhere to pack the jury. It is simply another part of the smoke screen that is being put out here. An effort was made——

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Who is putting out a smoke screen?

Mr. WILLIS. Anybody who says there is an effort to pack the jury.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why did the Senator consult with the Attorney General over the peculiarities of Senators if he was not attempting to find a jury that would be friendly to the Attorney General?

Mr. WILLIS. The Attorney General inquired of me——

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course he did.

Mr. WILLIS. But let me answer the Senator's question. He inquired of me as to the probable make-up of the committee, and I suggested the names of 8 or 10 Senators who might possibly be on the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. What was it that the Attorney General wanted to know about those peculiar Senators that the Senator from Ohio was going to help him pick?

Mr. WILLIS. There was no inquiry made about the peculiarities of any Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. He wanted to know whether they would vote for him right along?

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, Mr. President, men judge the motives of other men only by their own. It was a perfectly reasonable, fair inquiry, which I answered as I have indicated.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Out of the Senate was to come the jury. Is it a fact that anywhere on earth there is any such practice as that the man who is going to be tried is allowed to go and talk to the jury and ascertain what their peculiar leanings are? Is there not——

Mr. WILLIS. Let me answer that question.

Mr. CARAWAY. Just a minute.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well, go ahead.

Mr. WILLIS. I answer the question by saying of course not, but nothing of the sort was undertaken in this case.

Mr. CARAWAY. What was it the Attorney General wanted to know? That is what I am curious to know.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator think there is any impropriety in the Attorney General inquiring as to how the committee would probably be appointed and who might be considered?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Ohio said he talked about certain Senators and evidently wanted to know how they stood with reference to the inquiry.

Mr. WILLIS. Not at all. There was no inquiry about that.

Mr. CARAWAY. What was the inquiry?

Mr. WILLIS. No inquiry except that which I have stated. There was no inquiry at all such as the Senator suggests. There was not the slightest inquiry about how any Senator stood in that matter.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. In order to keep the record straight, I desire to read this statement found on page 2771 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 19, referring to the senior Senator from Ohio:

> Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator if he himself, after conferring with the Attorney General, did not suggest to the President of the Senate who should go on that committee?
> Mr. WILLIS. Certainly; I conferred with the President of the Senate, and if his resolution had been adopted in another form I expected the Senator to do that. The President of the Senate is not apart from other people; and certainly I suggested names to him; but that is quite apart and quite a different thing from a Member of the Senate undertaking to name the members of a committee and their naming himself as a member of the committee. I never heard of such a procedure.

The Senator must admit that the RECORD bears out my statement.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not question at all the RECORD, and it does not at all bear out the statement that the Senator made or the implication that he sought to draw therefrom. It is a fact, as I said upon that occasion, that I talked with the President of the Senate. The Attorney General made no suggestion to me as to the Members that he wanted on the committee, and if he had I should not have repeated that suggestion to the President of the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator will admit that he is a very close personal friend and political adviser of the Attorney General?

Mr. WILLIS. I will not admit that. I will admit that in a good many years of politics in Ohio sometimes we have been on the same side and sometimes on opposite sides, and I will admit that when an attempt is made to condemn a man without hearing I will stand up and to the best of my ability defend him, whether he is friend or foe.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not a fact that the Senator himself has been the one man in the Senate who has been in constant touch with the Attorney General——

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, no; that is not true at all. I have not been in constant touch with the Attorney General. I have not seen him for a week.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, for a whole week?

Mr. WILLIS. No. Does the Senator think that we have got to that state of suspicion and innuendo and ribaldry in the Senate of the United States that a Member of the Senate is disgraced when he confers with any member of the Cabinet?

Mr. WHEELER. I am not so sure but what that should be the case at the present time. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. WILLIS. That is the Senator's political viewpoint. It is not mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to remind the occupants of the galleries that the rules of the Senate prohibit demonstrations in the galleries.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator will admit that he has been a close political friend of the Attorney General for a long time?

Mr. WILLIS. We have been fairly good political friends. I am not his political spokesman, but I am willing to admit that I have been his friend.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is his friend at the present time?

Mr. WILLIS. I would be the friend of any man when I saw an attempt made to assassinate him and murder him in cold blood without a hearing.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator is his friend at the present time?

Mr. WILLIS. I have just stated that.

Mr. WHEELER. And as his friend and political adviser——

Mr. WILLIS. I am not his political adviser at all. Please do not impute such matters.

Mr. WHEELER. As his close personal friend, the Senator wanted to name the committee that was going to investigate him?

Mr. WILLIS. I did not. I repudiate that absolutely. That is absolutely false. I did not want to name the committee, and never sought to name the committee.

Mr. WHEELER. Did not the Senator talk to the President of the Senate about certain Members for the committee?

Mr. WILLIS. I suggested to the President of the Senate the names of a number of Senators who I thought would be faithful and effective and intelligent members of the committee.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator named to him a number of them whom he thought would be faithful to the Attorney General?

Mr. WILLIS. That statement is false. I made no such proposition at all. I named no one with the idea that he would be faithful to the Attorney General.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did not the Senator rise in his place a few days ago and proclaim that the Attorney General was a clean as a hound's tooth?

Mr. WILLIS. With reference to the oil transaction, that is what I said; but whether I was correct will be proven if we have a fair investigation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Was not the Senator's statement just general? He just gave the Attorney General a clean bill of health?

Mr. WILLIS. As I recall, it was the oil matter under discussion; but that will be determined by a fair investigation, which I am in favor of.

Now, I repeat there has been no effort on the part of anyone to pack the jury in behalf of the Attorney General.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator just qualified his indorsement of the Attorney General awhile ago by saying he was clean so far as oil is concerned.

Mr. WILLIS. It is my recollection that that was the subject under discussion.

Mr. CARAWAY. He goes no further in vouching for the Attorney General than oil?

Mr. WILLIS. I gave the Senator my recollection of the discussion then in hand, and it will be found, if a fair investigation is permitted here, that the Attorney General will present the facts. If it is found that he is guilty of wrongdoing, there will be no one more ready to insist that he shall be punished than shall I. But I insist, Mr. President, that a man is entitled to his chance to present the facts and have a fair hearing.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I yield, though I am anxious to proceed with my statement.

Mr. STANLEY. If my recollection serves me right, did not the Senator from Ohio some time since introduce a resolution reciting that a Senator was guilty of practices detrimental to the best interests of the Republic and which were highly reprehensible, and then voted for that Senator?

Mr. WILLIS. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. STANLEY. I have a faint recollection——

Mr. WILLIS. I understood the Senator's statement, but he has not yet propounded a question.

Mr. STANLEY. Did not the Senator recently introduce a resolution in the Senate stating that another Senator had been guilty of practices which were detrimental to the moral welfare of the country at large and were highly reprehensible and dangerous to our institutions, and then vote to seat that same Senator?

Mr. WILLIS. If that is the Senator's question, I will answer it.

Mr. STANLEY. That is it.

Mr. WILLIS. The question propounded by the Senator from Kentucky shows that he is not at all familiar with the resolution. The resolution which upon that occasion I introduced recited the practices and it did provide for the seating of the Senator from Michigan, but there was nothing in the resolution that indicated that the Senator from Michigan himself was personally guilty. If the Senator wants to know the reason for my position, it was exactly that. There was no evidence here to show any personal guilty knowledge on the part of the Senator from Michigan, and therefore——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. Not now. There the practices that were condemned were the practices that had been indulged in without his knowledge or approval or consent. I am not going into the Newberry case now, however.

Mr. STANLEY. Let me ask one further question.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

Mr. STANLEY. Is the Senator prepared to apply the same ambidextrous standard to Daugherty that he did to Newberry?

Mr. WILLIS. I am prepared to say this: I will discuss the Newberry case with the Senator here or elsewhere any time he wants to; but just now I do not propose to be diverted from the matter in hand, and that is the discussion of efforts to pack a jury. Let us see about that. I had gotten to the point——

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment, and then I am through?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield once more, and then I am going to finish my statement.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not seek to divert the Senator. I simply want to get the Senator's peculiar point of view. In that case he recited the guilt of the man——

Mr. WILLIS. I did not recite the guilt of the man at all. I recited what I regarded as practices which were indulged in without his knowledge or approval or consent. There was no personal guilt imputed to that Senator.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator said the man was elected by means of abominable practices which he abominated, but he would not want to see the man go.

Mr. WILLIS. Because the man himself was not personally guilty. I believe that guilt is a matter that is personal and has to be established by facts and the evidence, and it was not so established, in my judgment.

Mr. STANLEY. It does not matter now how rotten that department is or how corrupt his underlings or assistants are; if you can get him out by some hook or crook, you will put him out.

Mr. WILLIS. Now my friend is changing his attack. He is now suggesting that it is the underling somewhere that is guilty. Finding it is impossible, as I believe it will be impossible if a fair hearing is had, to show guilt on the part of the Attorney General, he now writes a general blanket indictment, but all that will be determined in the inquiry if it is a fair one. It will be found that the Attorney General fights. He does not run away from a controversy of this kind, and I repeat——

Mr. STANLEY. Where is he now? [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will suspend for a moment. The Chair desires to admonish the occupants of the galleries that the rules of the Senate require order in the galleries, and the occupants of the galleries must refrain from demonstrations of approval or disapproval or the Chair will have to enforce the rule.

Mr. WILLIS. I am going to answer the question of the Senator, and I would like to have his attention. The inquiry was where is the Attorney General now? I will answer the Senator now. I had supposed that sense of decency in the United States Senate would prevent such an inquiry as that. The Senator knows of the illness in the family of the Attorney General. He knows of the fact that the good wife of the Attorney General is an invalid and has been for very many years, and that she is in Florida, and that the Attorney General has gone to pay her a brief visit, and yet the Senator from Kentucky cheaply seeks to get a titter and to make a point of a situation so delicate as that. He is welcome to all the glory he can get out of the situation.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I decline to yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Kentucky may speak in his own time.

Mr. STANLEY. I hope the Senator will yield.

Mr. WILLIS. No; I will not yield now.

Mr. STANLEY. Very well.

Mr. WILLIS. Going back to the matter of the discussion, from which I do not desire to be diverted, I suggested then a number of names to the President pro tempore of the Senate. I would not be so foolish as to suppose that it would be proper for any individual to say to the President pro tempore of the Senate whom he should appoint. I suggested the names I have mentioned.

Coming back to the matter of packing a jury, what shall be said in the forum of public opinion when it shall be known as to the Senator who stands here and makes unsupported charges, absolutely without foundation in fact so far as here adduced, that that Senator, out of a sense of fine modesty and in order to be absolutely fair, in order that the jury which is to pass upon the facts shall be fair and unprejudiced, names himself as one of the committee to investigate the charges that he himself makes.

Mr. CARAWAY rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the senior Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Upon the point the Senator is just now discussing, he also discussed it in the beginning of his remarks. He is criticizing the proposal to place the author of the resolution upon the investigating committee. I ask the Senator if it is not true that the prevailing practice, both in the Senate and in the body at the other end of the Capitol, to name upon the committee the author of a resolution creating a special committee? Is it not the universal practice except in cases where the author of the resolution requests to be excused from service?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, unfortunately my understanding of the practice and the precedents does not quite agree with that of the Senator from Arkansas. I say to him that I have never known a case where charges of a bitter and almost personal nature were made in which the person making the charges was appointed on the committee to investigate them, and I invite the attention of the Senator to an interesting case in the last year or so.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. Let me finish this, please. The Senator will remember the charges that were made——

Mr. ROBINSON. In connection with the statement which the Senator has just made——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. Let me answer the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me point out——

Mr. WILLIS. All right, if the Senator wants to complete his question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me point out a fact that is fresh in the memory of the Senator from Ohio, which contradicts his statement. Recently the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] filed charges here that were held to reflect upon a citizen, and yet the Senator from Alabama was appointed upon the committee to investigate those charges, as the Senator from Ohio well knows.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well. I think that was a bad precedent, if it was so done. But the illustration I was about to give my friend the senior Senator from Arkansas was this—and he will remember it——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. Let me proceed with this statement, I ask the Senator, and then I shall yield to him.

The precedent to which I wish to call his attention is this: It will be remembered that a year or two ago—I do not recall the exact date—very serious charges were filed here in speeches and otherwise by the late lamented Senator from Georgia, Hon. Thomas E. Watson; it will be remembered that a committee was appointed to investigate those charges, but there was no thought on the part of anyone, so far as I know, toward placing the Senator from Georgia on that committee. He was, however, present at the hearings of the committee; he was permitted to cross-examine witnesses; he was permitted to subpœna witnesses; but he was not a member of the committee.

Now, Mr. President, proceeding with what I wish to say about the fairness of the proposed committee which is to examine the matter, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] proposes to have himself named, after making one of these

"we all know" speeches, which have become quite common here in this Chamber—"we all know" this and that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. I promised to yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Pursuing the question of precedents as to the selection of the authors of resolutions involving charges as members of the investigating committees, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that recently, at the instance of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senate created a special committee to investigate matters relating to propaganda, particularly as to the Bok plan, and the Senator from Missouri was appointed a member of that committee. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] some time ago introduced a resolution making charges of gross mismanagement and corruption and other abuses against the Veterans' Bureau and providing for the creation of a special committee, and the Senator from Pennsylvania was made a member of that committee and became its chairman.

Mr. WILLIS. But how was the committee selected? Will the Senator say?

Mr. ROBINSON. In the body at the other end of the Capitol——

Mr. WILLIS. But will the Senator answer that question? How were the members of the committee selected?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not recall.

Mr. WILLIS. They were appointed by the Chair, I think.

Mr. ROBINSON. They were appointed by the Chair in all probability.

Mr. WILLIS. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. That, however, is not material to the proposition now under discussion, namely, the question as to whether the author of the resolution providing for a special investigation should be a member of the special committee to conduct the investigation. At the other end of the Capitol, the Senator from Ohio will remember, that some months ago serious charges were filed by the gentleman from Illinois, Representative GRAHAM, against the conduct of the War Department and other agencies of the Government. Mr. GRAHAM was appointed a member of that committee, and, I believe, was made its chairman. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Walsh, filed charges against the Shipping Board, and yet he was appointed a member, I think, of that committee. The Senator from Ohio, if he will take the trouble to look over the precedents, will find that in almost every case where a special committee has been created by resolution the author of the resolution has been permitted to serve on the committee so created.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, on that specific matter the Senator from Arkansas will find, I think, if he will look up the history of each case to which he has referred, that the appointment of members of the committee was made by the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. What difference does that make upon the question of the propriety of the author of the resolution serving on the committee? It only confirms the principle for which I am contending and the practice as sustained by the precedents of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I can see a very vast difference in those two cases. I should not have objected if the President pro tempore of the Senate, in the exercise of his sound discretion, had thought proper to appoint the Senator from Montana on the proposed committee; I should not have said anything about that; but when the Senator from Montana so far forgets the proprieties of a situation as to make ex parte charges, to which I shall in a moment refer, and then designates himself to investigate his own charges, I say it is a proceeding absolutely unheard of. In the case referred to relative to the Senator from Pennsylvania, the appointment was made by the Chair, as in all of these cases.

However, I started to refer to one of the "We all know" addresses of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. We had another one this morning. The Senator said "we all know" something about the President. Well, I do not know whether or not the President communicates with the Senator from Montana; certainly he does not communicate with me. Perhaps the Senator from Montana knows the mind of the President on this matter. He says "we all know" this. The other day the Senator made an address in which he said "we all know" so and so about the Attorney General; "we all know" so and so about Mr. Doheny and about somebody else then mentioned—I saved the newspaper, thinking it might be interesting—about Mr. Felder and about Mr. Jess Smith. There are a good many interesting things connected with that. The Senator in his charge in that favorite eloquent expression "everybody knows" and "we all know" made certain statements about Mr. Felder, whom I do not know and for whom I do not care, but Mr. Felder came back immediately and said that the statements were utterly false. In the same newspaper, which is before me, Mr. Doheny makes a similar statement. This is the same Mr. Doheny, the Senator will remember, who said that he voted 40 times for Mr. McAdoo at San Francisco and whose name was presented to the convention as a candidate for the Vice Presidency.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. Is that the same Doheny who has now become spokesman for the Republican Party?

Mr. WILLIS. No; it is not the same Doheny, because no Doheny has become spokesman for the Republican Party. Mr. Doheny appears to be spokesman for Mr. McAdoo, and while the Senator is inclined to be interested in the matter, in order to help him identify this Mr. Doheny I will say this is the Mr. Doheny who was a member of the Democratic committee on resolutions at the San Francisco convention, who helped to write the platform of the Senator's party, a platform, by the way, which for the first time in American history, so far as I know, had an oil plank in it. Mr. Doheny was a member of the committee on resolutions, from which there was forthcoming the oil plank in the platform pointing out the desirability of securing foreign oil interests; and at about that time occurred the employment of Mr. McAdoo, for whom Mr. Doheny had voted 40 times. It is an interesting subject.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator read us the plank to which he refers.

Mr. WILLIS. If I can find it, I will do so. I had it before me recently. The Senator does not question that there is such a plank, does he?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. WILLIS. What I have before me is a list of the committee, and I had perhaps better read the names of some of the committee on resolutions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will not the Senator read the plank to which he refers?

Mr. WILLIS. I will read it later, but I will first read some of the names:

Alabama, Borden Burr; Arizona, P. W. O'Sullivan; Arkansas, C. A. Fuller; California, E. L. Doheny.

Mr. Doheny was there delivering the goods, voting 40 times for Mr. McAdoo. He was also a member of the committee on resolutions. I do not know—I was not there—but no doubt he had considerable to do with this petroleum plank which I now read for the Senator:

The Democratic Party recognizes the importance of the acquisition by Americans of additional sources of supply of petroleum and other minerals and declares that such acquisition both at home and abroad should be fostered and encouraged. We urge such action, legislative and executive, as may secure to American citizens the same rights in the acquirement of mining rights in foreign countries as are enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of any other nation. [Applause.]

The Democratic convention liked that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator now advise us what part of that resolution he does not agree with?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not discussing it; I am saying nothing about that. I am calling attention to the fact.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that; but I am asking the Senator a question: Is there any part of that resolution to which the Senator takes exception?

Mr. WILLIS. Well, Mr. President, the Senator can not commit me to the Democratic platform.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not want to.

Mr. WILLIS. I am sure the Senator does not expect to do that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand the Senator is contending that it is wrong, and, of course——

Mr. WILLIS. I have said nothing about the quality of the platform. The people spoke on that, and they rejected it by 7,200,000 votes, so there is no use discussing that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator declines to answer my question?

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not decline to answer the question at all, but I answer in my own way in my own time. I am not criticizing this plank.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well, if the Senator is not criticizing it.

Mr. WILLIS. I was merely reciting the history of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is a sufficient answer, if the Senator is not criticizing it.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well. I am merely calling attention to an interesting bit of history in regard to a subject as to which the Senator from Montana seems to be very sensitive. I just pointed out the fact that this Mr. Doheny, one of the "everybody knows" persons about whom the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] talks, was a member of the committee on resolutions, and that the committee on resolutions adopted this petroleum plank, the first one, so far as I recall, in any national platform, and that at about that time the former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, became very active in carrying out the terms of this plank and in acquiring foreign oil interests, for which he says he got $150,000, and that the fee was going to be $1,000,000 if he had been able to put it across.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator kindly give us the name of the Montana representative on the committee on resolutions?

Mr. WILLIS. I think I can turn to that in a moment. The name of the Montana member of the committee on resolutions was the distinguished senior Senator from Montana, Senator THOMAS J. WALSH.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator give us the names of the members of the subcommittee that drafted the platform?

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator can see the book I have here. I have before me merely a list of the committees.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is so familiar with the proceedings of the Democratic conventions that I supposed he would have the names at his fingers' ends.

Mr. WILLIS. I have not gone far enough to discover that much; I may go into it further at some later time, for this McAdoo business develops very interestingly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But just now the Senator was telling us about the plank to which he referred.

Mr. WILLIS. And just now I do not know who the members of the subcommittee were.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well. I will advise the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. I can imagine that whoever constituted the subcommitee got in their work splendidly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I advise the Senator that the junior Senator from Virgina [Mr. GLASS] was charman of the committee, and I was also a member of it. I indorsed that plank, and I am glad to know the Senator from Ohio has nothing to say in criticism of it.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not attacking the plank; I am reciting its history.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIS. I always yield to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is kind. Does the Senator think that this administration has lived up to the plank in the Republican platform that was adopted at the same time and which reads as follows:

> We passed an oil leasing and water power bill to unlock for the public good—
>
> "The public good" should be underscored—
> the great pent-up resources of the country; we have sought to check the profligacy of the administration, to realize upon the assets of the Government, and to husband the revenues derived from taxation.

Mr. WILLIS. Now let me answer the question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator——

Mr. WILLIS. One at a time; they will last longer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi advise us whether that preceded or followed the platform adopted by the Democratic Party?

Mr. HARRISON. It preceded the Democratic platform.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It preceded it. So that the Senator from Ohio was not quite as familiar with the history of the platform of the Republican Party as he seems to be with ours.

Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. The question——

Mr. WILLIS. Let me answer my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The question I ask the Senator——

Mr. WILLIS. Let me answer first. It will last so much longer, it will be so much more delightful, if the Senator will give me an opportunity to answer him first.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want the Senator to forget the question.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I was about to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield at the present time.

Mr. WILLIS. I will yield a little bit later, but let us have the questions one at a time.

What I was going to say was that evidently the Republican committee on resolutions were somewhat misled in that particular, because they proceeded to indorse an act which, according to common knowledge, was recommended by the former Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, under whose leadership the legislation was had.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. At least, if they were misled as to its origin, they certainly realized on it, did they not?

Mr. WILLIS. They did not realize quite so largely as Brother McAdoo did. He got the cash right away. It was not sufficient to have collected the large amounts that were collected by presenting cases before the Treasury Department after he himself had been Secretary of the Treasury, and arguing cases before people who were his own appointees. He evidently cast an anchor to windward here, and had it all to the good with Brother Doheny and the rest of them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to know whether the plank that was just read by the Senator from Mississippi was drafted before or after part of the delegates in the Republican convention from Wyoming, and from Illinois, and from Arkansas, and from Kentucky, had consulted with Mr. Joe Cannon in his room concerning the next Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. WILLIS. That is another of the "everybody knows" stories. I have finished with that. The Senator does not know anything about what he is now talking, and neither do I.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I was afraid the Senator would forget to answer my question.

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, I did not.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Senator has not answered it.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not forget to answer it.

Mr. HARRISON. I asked the Senator if he thought this administration had lived up to the principles enunciated in that plank.

Mr. WILLIS. I thought I had answered that when I said I thought it had not done so—nearly so fully as Mr. McAdoo and his associates had.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh! The Senator thinks, then, that Mr. McAdoo had lived up to his principles?

Mr. WILLIS. Why, apparently; it looks that way. I do not know, but it looks that way. Mr. Doheny was on the committee on resolutions, and got the oil plank in, and Mr. McAdoo got the $150,000, and said it was worth a million, when he never appeared in court at all; so I think Mr. McAdoo lived up to his opportunities pretty well. But I started to talk about these stories—these "what everybody knows" stories.

The Senator first said certain things about Mr. Doheny, whom I have now identified. Mr. Doheny came back in the papers the next day and announced that the statements made by the Senator were utterly unsupported, and, indeed, were false. He used that language. I have already referred to the statement he makes concerning Mr. Felder, which Mr. Felder repudiated; and the Attorney General stated, in a statement the next day, that there was no foundation for it so far as it related to him.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIS. The only statement that the Senator was able to get away with was the statement that he made about a dead man. He makes a statement about poor old Jess Smith. I know nothing about his relationship to this matter. Everybody else that he charged came back at once and said that his statements were false; but Jess, being dead, could not speak on the subject.

Mr. WHEELER. And, of course, the Senator believes Felder, who is under indictment——

Mr. WILLIS. I have no opinion about Felder.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course the Senator believes Felder, who is under indictment and who is the personal friend of Mr. Daugherty; and, of course, he believes Mr. Doheny who if the Department of Justice had done its duty would have been in the penitentiary.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, that is another one of these "what-everybody-knows" stories. The Senator is so kind as to indicate what I believe. I do not know Mr. Felder. I never saw him or had any relationship with him. I am simply pointing out the fact that every individual that the Senator, in irresponsible fashion, charges with things, came back within 24 hours and said there was no foundation for the charges—all except poor old Jess Smith, who is dead and gone. He could not reply, so the Senator ought to center his activities on Jess.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator had not blocked the appointment of the committee, the committee probably would have proved these things before now.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I had intended, and I would not have occupied this much time except for the interruptions.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I say in perfect good faith, and without the slightest feeling against the Senator from Montana, that I think it is a very unusual proceeding for a Senator who makes charges to insist that he himself shall be a member of the committee to investigate the charges. What I should think the Senator would have preferred would have been to have a committee selected—I think it ought to be appointed by the Chair, but if the Senate decides to elect it, well and good—and then have the Senator present. I recall the hearings in the Watson case.

The late Senator from Georgia [Mr. Watson] was present at every session of the committee, cross-examined witnesses, and had the right to ask the committee to subpœna witnesses, and we did subpœna very many of them. It would seem to me that that would be fair; but if the Senator insists and the Senate insists that the prosecutor shall be a member of the jury, why, let the country judge of the fairness of the resolution.

Before I take my seat——

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WILLIS. Just a moment. I ask unanimous consent, since it has been the subject of inquiry, to have printed in the RECORD at this point the letter from the Attorney General relative to his attitude toward this hearing. It has been printed in all the papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 22, 1924.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am informed that the resolution of Senator WHEELER, providing for an examination of the Department of Justice, may be called up for consideration at any time. I am taking advantage of your kindness and courtesy to me to place before you a few of the thoughts that occur to me in connection with the pending resolution.

I wish you to understand, and I authorize you to say to the Senate, that any committee of investigation which the Senate, in its judgment, may appoint will be accorded every facility which the Department of Justice affords in order that a thorough investigation of all of my official acts and of the Department of Justice may be made fairly and systematically. I believe and know that such an investigation will satisfy the Senate and the country that the Department of Justice has been and is being conducted with a high degree of efficiency, and that the rights of the Government have been and are at all times fully and amply protected.

I note by the resolution that the committee is instructed to investigate my alleged failure to arrest and prosecute Albert B. Fall, Harry F. Sinclair, E. L. Doheny, Charles R. Forbes, and their alleged coconspirators.

It is interesting to remind you that before the introduction of this resolution I requested the President to relieve me of the responsibility of prosecuting Albert B. Fall, and those with whom he is alleged to have been acting in collusion, because of the fact that Mr. Fall had been a member of the Cabinet in which I also served, and that the country might be better satisfied to have the conduct of the prosecution in control of lawyers in no way connected with the Government. You know that the President, approving this suggestion, did place this whole matter in the hands of two of the ablest lawyers in this country, Hon. Atlee Pomerene and Hon. Owen J. Roberts, whose appointments have been confirmed by the Senate, and who are now in full charge of the particular matters referred to in this resolution.

Realizing the difficulties confronting these distinguished lawyers, I have extended to them every possible facility afforded by the Department of Justice in a formal letter addressed to them, and I am attaching hereto a copy of that letter so that it may be available for reference at any time.

The resolution complains of my failure to prosecute Charles R. Forbes. You know, Senator, and I can not understand how Senator WHEELER has failed to note, the activities of this department in connection with this matter. It has been placed in charge of Hon. John W. H. Crim, who was appointed by me on December 15, 1923, in prompt cooperation with the Reed committee and after conference with and approval by Chairman REED and his associates on the committee investigating the Veterans' Bureau matter. Mr. Crim is being assisted by Maj. Davis Arnold, who so ably aided the Reed investigating committee, and by other assistants. The case is now, and has been for weeks, under thorough investigation by a special grand jury at Chicago (which jury I requested the court to impanel for the purpose of considering this case long before the resolution criticizing me in this case was introduced).

I have observed in the press insinuations that so-called high officials bought and sold Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co. stock upon information regarding the making of the oil leases, the inference being that they profited thereby. In view of such publications, I desire now to deny all such insinuations and inferences and to give the facts in this connection, in so far as they relate to me personally.

Before I became Attorney General or seriously considered any connection with the Government, from time to time in the ordinary course of my personal investments, I bought and paid for some stock in the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co. Six months after the execution of the Teapot Dome lease, of April 7, 1922, endeavoring to recoup my losses in said stock, I sold a portion of my holdings therein acquired and paid for as aforesaid before I became Attorney General. Thereafter I bought back and paid for the same amount of said stock thus sold at a price slightly less than the price for which the same amount had been sold. Finally, in the fall of 1923, I sold all of my holdings in said company acquired prior to by becoming Attorney General at a net loss to me of about $28 per share. In addition to this transaction I bought 18 shares of said stock in the year 1922, the year the Teapot Dome lease was executed, which I acquired for the sole purpose of rounding out my holdings in said stock.

This is the story which the testimony will reveal, and I am glad to have the Senate know of my personal business transactions in said stock in 1922. There is nothing unusual in this transaction; nothing improper; nothing indiscreet; and nothing to conceal.

During the year 1922, the year in which the Teapot Dome lease was made, with the exception above stated, I neither bought nor sold any stocks in any of the so-called Sinclair or Doheny companies or in any other companies which were interested, directly or indirectly, or were affected or could be affected by the oil leases under consideration. I desire to say further that since I have been Attorney General I have never acted upon any information received as Attorney General which resulted in my personal profit. I was not called upon by Secretary Fall or anyone else for an opinion, written or oral, in regard to the wisdom or legality of the oil leases, and I never volunteered an opinion, either written or oral, to Secretary Fall or anyone else. I had no part of any kind or character, directly or indirectly, in the negotiations leading up to the execution of the oil leases; no information ever came to me in connection therewith, and the leases were executed without my knowledge and without any official requirement or opportunity on my part to know of their execution.

The charges and complaints in connection with any official acts of mine as Attorney General and against the Department of Justice, will, I hope, be made as specific as possible, in order that I may promptly file a complete answer thereto and assemble the testimony so as to develop the truth and the whole truth.

In conclusion, Senator, I shall be glad if I might have the privilege of having counsel present at all the hearings of the committee, with the right extended to them to interrogate any and all witnesses.

After the testimony has been presented by those making the charges, and I am thus advised as to what I am actually charged with and the testimony in support thereof, I further respectfully request the right to produce testimony before the committee on motion of my said counsel, and have process to compel attendance of such witnesses.

I trust that the investigation may be conducted and completed as promptly as thoroughness will permit. My only reason for asking this is that while these investigations are pending against the Department of Justice, the official force of the department is necessarily taken from duties which are pressing and in the interest of the Government; and also that as speedily as possible those innocent of any connection with the matters under investigation may be freed from suspicion and those guilty be brought to justice.

Very sincerely yours,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1924.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
Hon. OWEN ROBERTS,
Special Counsel for the United States Government,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: On January 26, from Miami, Fla., I sent the following telegram to the President of the United States:

"May I again urge the desirability your immediately appointing two outstanding lawyers who as such shall at once take up all phases of the oil leases under investigation by the Senate or others and advise you as to the facts and law justifying legal proceedings of any kind. As you know, I do not desire to evade any responsibility in this or any other matter, but considering that Mr. Fall and I served in the Cabinet together this would be fair to you, to Mr. Fall, and to the American people, as well as to the Attorney General, the Department of Justice, and my associates and assistants therein. I do not desire to be consulted as to whom you shall appoint. The only suggestion I have to make in that regard is that those appointed shall be lawyers whom the public will at once recognize as worthy of confidence and who will command the respect of the people by not practicing politics or permitting others to do so in connection with this important public business. Their work can be done with or without the cooperation of the Department of Justice or any person connected therewith, as you and they may desire. The Department of Justice is at all times in this or any other matter at your service and at the service of your appointees in this connection."

On January 27 President Coolidge issued the following statement:

"It is not for the President to determine criminal guilt or render judgment in civil causes. That is the function of the courts. It is not for him to prejudge. I shall do neither; but when facts are revealed to me that require action for the purpose of insuring the enforcement of either civil or criminal liability, such action will be taken. That is the province of the Executive.

"Acting under my direction, the Department of Justice has been observing the course of the evidence which has been revealed at the hearings conducted by the senatorial committee investigating certain oil leases made on naval reserves, which I believe warrants action for the purpose of enforcing the law and protecting the rights of the public. This is confirmed by reports made to me from the committee. If there has been any crime it must be prosecuted. If there has been any property of the United States illegally transferred or leased it must be recovered.

"I feel the public is entitled to know that in the conduct of such actions no one is shielded for any party, political, or other reasons. As I understand, men are involved who belong to both political parties, and having been advised by the Department of Justice that it is in accord with former precedents, I propose to employ special counsel of high rank, drawn from both political parties, to bring such actions for the enforcement of the law. Counsel will be instructed to prosecute these cases in the courts so that if there is any guilt it will be punished; if there is any civil liability, it will be enforced; if there is any fraud, it will be revealed; and if there are any contracts which are illegal, they will be canceled. Every law will be enforced and every right of the people and the Government will be protected."

With my cordial approval, the Department of Justice has been represented by an Assistant Attorney General in constant attendance since January 22, 1924, at all hearings before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys of the United States Senate.

Following each session of the committee conferences have been held at the Department of Justice with a view to protecting the rights of the public and the preparation of the machinery of this department for cooperation and use as warranted by the facts developed at the hearing or elsewhere obtained by the department.

It may be that beginning with the next hearing before the committee you will either personally or by representative of your choice observe the proceedings before that body. If not, and you prefer to have the further services of the Assistant Attorney General at these hearings, I shall be pleased to have you advise me and your wishes will be cheerfully complied with.

Congress will undoubtedly place at the disposal of the President a sum sufficient for the prosecution of your work. Notwithstanding this, I apprehend that you may need the assistance of the Department of Justice, or at least some of its agencies. In so far as it may be needed the organization of the Department of Justice is at your disposal, and I trust that you will not hesitate to call upon me for whatever assistance may be rendered by me, either personally or officially, or by the Department of Justice or any official or person connected therewith.

It may be that you will require additional authority in order to appear before grand juries in conducting your investigations; and if so, this authority will be given promptly upon application therefor.

I fully appreciate the magnitude and difficulty of the work which you are undertaking. The Department of Justice will assist you in every way, to the end that wrongdoing may be punished without fear or favor.

With assurances of esteem and respect, I am

Very truly yours,

H. M. DAUGHERTY, Attorney General.

Mr. WILLIS. Now I yield the floor, or I yield to the Senator from Washington, if he desires to ask a question.

Mr. DILL. I wanted to ask the Senator about this question of propriety, since he has been talking about it. I want to know what he thinks of the propriety of a certain telegram that was sent to Mr. McLean on the 16th of January. I want to read it to the Senator:

Informed that investigation is being made by Senate committee to determine if you had $100,000 in cash in any bank at the time you testified you gave Fall check for that amount. Thought I had better advise you concerning this phase. Regards.

ROCHESTER.

And "Rochester" is the confidential publicity man in Mr. Daugherty's office at this time. Now, speaking of proprieties, I want the Senator's opinion as to the propriety of the confidential man of the Attorney General informing the man who was being investigated by the committee of a matter of that kind?

Mr. WILLIS. If it is a fact that anybody connected with the Department of Justice was giving information to Mr. McLean, I regard it as highly improper, and he ought to be punished.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I notice in last evening's paper that it says that on January 23 Major wired to McLean as follows:

Willis in full possession of matters. After battle of wits between Lambert and myself, this was accomplished.

It could not possibly be the Senator from Ohio, could it, that that refers to?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the fact that the Senator is willing to give publicity to a thing like that is the best proof in the world that he is not fit to sit upon this committee of investigation. I say to him now that any imputation that he would make that I have had any communication with any of the people referred to is as false as anything could be. I know nothing about the matter to which he is referring. I know nothing of these parties, and the telegram is an enigma to me; and yet the Senator introduces it here in the hope that he may get something before the country to the effect that I am connected with it. I repudiate it absolutely and deny it as vigorously as I may, and say that, to my mind, the fact that he could do a thing of that sort is proof that he ought not to be a member of this committee.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one more question?

Mr. WILLIS. All right.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to say that last evening's paper stated that Senator WILLIS was the man. I just simply wanted to give the Senator an opportunity——

Mr. WILLIS. What paper said that "Senator WILLIS was the man"? I challenge the Senator to read it.

Mr. WHEELER. The Washington Times.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator read the portion of it that says that "Senator WILLIS is the man"?

Mr. WHEELER. It says that the Senator's name——

Mr. WILLIS. Read it. I challenge the Senator to read it.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I will if the Senator will just wait a minute.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not care for the Senator's interpretation. I want the reading of the article.

Mr. WHEELER. It says:

The names of Senator WILLIS, of Ohio, * * * were found in messages sent to McLean.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER. Is there any interpretation that I have put on that? Then it goes on, quoting this telegram. I simply say to the Senator that I asked him the question in order that he might clear up the matter before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes—well, there is not any doubt about it. I do not know whether there is doubt in the Senator's mind or not, but I say to him that any newspaper or anybody else, in the Senate or out of it, that says that I have had anything to do with this matter, or have sent or received any telegram, states that which is a wicked, cowardly, malicious falsehood.

Mr. WHEELER. There is not any question in the Senator's mind about what the paper says, is there?

Mr. WILLIS. I am giving the Senator the facts. I am not discussing papers.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that he can get consolation out of the fact that "Cherries" and "Apples" and "Apricots" and "Peaches" were also named in this telegram.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, I was not one of them. That might be the Senator; he is a peach.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, it is always a Senator's province to yield to a colleague on this floor or to refuse to yield. It is not the custom of Members of this body to make charges at once offensive and untrue and to refuse to an injured adversary the opportunity to then and there answer the unwarranted statement. I was amazed—more amused than amazed—at the peculiar courage of the Attorney General's sponsor. It is a kind of courage about which I know little and about which brave men, as a rule, care less.

I asked the Senator a courteous question—Where was the Attorney General now? The Senator from Ohio immediately stated that I knew where he was, and knew what took him there, and that with that knowledge my question was indecent.

Of course, if language of that kind had been used by a man who was at that time in possession of his senses, and who understood the weight and force of the English language, I should have resented it; but, owing to the peculiar mental condition of the Senator from Ohio, I excuse it as but another evidence of the frenzy that has possessed him for the last hour. But I do say to the Senator, who is so prompt in telling people when they lie, that the Senator from Ohio did not know and has no way of ascertaining what I know or think. If I thought the Senator from Ohio could discern my mental processes, I should pray God for another mind. I knew nothing about Daugherty's wife, or whether he had a wife or not, or whether she was sick or well. I know Daugherty is sick, and I know he has gone to the same health resort where Doheny and Fall and the rest of them were found.

Mr. CARAWAY. And McLean.

Mr. STANLEY. Yes. I have never yet struck at a woman, and I have never yet respected the man who would hide behind the skirts of a woman, be she sick or well.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] a moment ago said that McAdoo had gotten cash for representing Doheny and had gotten it right away. I want to remind the Senator and the Senate what I have said here a number of times, that Mr. William Boyce Thompson, the treasurer of the Republican campaign committee in 1920, a stockholder and a director in the Sinclair Oil Co.——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HEFLIN. In a moment; borrowed three and a half million dollars on a dummy note. There were $5,000,000 borrowed in all. Three and a half million of it was on a dummy note, and Sinclair oil stock was used as collateral.

Now I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely wanted to ask the Senator if it was not a fact that Mr. Upham was treasurer of the Republican National Committee, and not Mr. Thompson?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; Mr. Thompson was treasurer at the time I speak of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not in 1920. The Senator is wrong.

Mr. HEFLIN. He was connected with it, I understand, and he got this money. I have intimated here before that I believe that this money was used by the Republican Party to help carry the election in 1920. This committee—and its chairman is a Republican from Wisconsin—can summon Mr. William Boyce Thompson, and I ask the chairman to summon him and to question him about these matters. I challenge him to summon him to appear and testify before the committee. That issue can be joined.

I have a statement by a former official of this Government, who is a patriotic citizen and as honest as Paul, and I get these facts from him, and he is ready to testify. I want William Boyce Thompson brought to Washington, and I want certain questions asked him. We will find out then, if he will tell the truth, the part the Sinclair Oil Co. played in the Republican campaign in 1920.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] refers to Doheny being in the Democratic National Convention trying to get over an oil plank. Mr. President, it seems that the one in the Republican platform was more to his liking. He has left the Democratic Party. He could not carry out his schemes in the Democratic Party as he wanted to. He has gone out of the Democratic Party and has gone over to a party that is doing entirely as he would have it do, and he has come to Washington and issued a statement in the administration paper urging the people to support the Republican administration. There is no getting away from the fact that Doheny is supporting the Republican administration at this time, and will, of course, support the Republican ticket in the election in November.

Mr. President, the further this thing goes the worse it gets. It looks to me as if it is going to involve finally nearly every Republican official high in authority. Reaching, as it does, into nearly every nook and corner of the administration, it calls to mind two old familiar lines about a dog—

> Whose name was Rover,
> And when he died he died all over.

It looks as if the time has come for the passing of the Republican Party as it is manipulated and controlled to-day.

I called attention here yesterday to the fact that every day Doheny's pumps are running, and Sinclair's pumps are running, in the oil reserves of the Nation, one pumping out 3,000 barrels, the other 4,000 barrels.

I want now to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that since we appointed two attorneys, supposed to be learned in the law, supposed to be especially equipped to represent the Government and do this work and do it speedily, Doheny and Sinclair have pumped out of the Nation's oil reserve 84,000 barrels of oil. They are pumping it out to-day. They will pump it out to-morrow, and on and on, until somebody sends up there and stops them and takes away from them this property of the people of the United States.

The distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] in an able and eloquent speech in the Senate not long ago showed how alert were Republican officials under a Republican administration to do Mr. Sinclair's bidding, to be Johnny-on-the-spot where his interests were at stake. He said, after stating what had transpired up there:

> I read the headlines of an article that appeared in the New York Times July 30, 1922, as follows:
> "Marines to eject oil-land squatters. Roosevelt orders a detachment to Teapot Dome reserve to stop drilling. Trespassers claim title. Mutual Oil Co. official says it is as good as leases held by Sinclair."

Commenting, the Senator from West Virginia said:

> Why should the administration not deal as drastically with the bribers of a Republican Cabinet officer and the despoilers of the Nation's oil reserve as it formerly dealt with trespassers on Teapot Dome?

Mr. President, that is a strong statement and a very pertinent inquiry. Marines could be sent to keep these people off of Sinclair's Teapot Dome property, or property that he claimed. The people there were stopped immediately from drilling wells. But Sinclair has drilled his wells; he has put in his pumps.

He has a pipe line, as I stated before, running to Kansas City, Mo., with stations every 40 miles of the way, and to-day this oil is being pumped out just as rapidly as they can get it out. No Government official has been sent to stop Sinclair. No marine has been called out by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. No United States marshal has appeared upon the scene to stop these people from taking this oil out. No petition for an injunction has been filed so far as I know by the two attorneys, Mr. Pomerene and Mr. Roberts. In 10 days from this time, if an injunction has not been issued and this pumping of oil has not been stopped, I will favor removing those two attorneys and appointing two country lawyers, who will go immediately into this thing and stop it within 24 hours.

If a man's jugular vein is cut and you send for a doctor and the patient is bleeding to death, does he sit down and open a book and say, "I am going to read for 24 hours, or longer, and study up on the case, before I undertake to stop the flow of blood and save your life"?

That is the situation yonder. The oil is being taken out. It is the oil of the people. We said so. We have instructed these two lawyers to go and stop the taking of that oil out, and take this property over; but nothing has been done.

Who appointed these attorneys? The President. They are under his direction and control. Has he instructed them to go out there and stop them from taking this oil out of the ground? I have not heard of it if he has. Why does he not do that? I have a right to ask that question; why does he not do it?

I have here a letter from Mr. H. L. Scaife, written to Chairman LENROOT on February 26. The latter part of that letter reads as follows:

> After the introduction of the La Follette resolution under which your committee is now sitting, Mr. Means suggested to me that I make an effort to be appointed as an investigator for your committee, and he later told me that Mr. Burns had spoken to Senator BURSUM in my behalf and requested me to call on Senator BURSUM and discuss the matter, which I did. After I had seen Senator BURSUM, Means suggested that I talk to Senator SMOOT, which I did. Senator SMOOT indicated to me that there would probably be no investigation except by geologists. While, as already stated, I attached no significance to the matter at the time, in view of developments before your committee, I now recall how insistent and keen were Mr. Means's efforts to ascertain my opinion as to whether or not the committee was going forward with a real investigation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think I can allay the Senator's concern, because within 10 days I saw in one of the Washington papers Mr. Doheny quoted as saying that he had plenty of confidence in the attorneys who had been appointed to prosecute him.

Mr. HEFLIN. That he had confidence in these two attorneys?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. From the way they are performing, it seems as if his confidence is not misplaced.

I am not going to shield any Democrat, or Republican, either. One of those attorneys is a Democrat, and the other is a Republican. I stated at the time I voted for them that I wanted somebody to get in action and stop the taking out of the earth this oil of the Nation, and to take this property over, and that I had no assurance we could get better attorneys, or that the President would send us the names of more competent men.

In view of the fact that 12 days have come and gone and nothing done to protect this property it looks as though I have made a mistake in voting to confirm these men. I have not practiced law in 20 years, but I know enough about law yet to know that all that is necessary would be for these lawyers to go into the court and ask for an injunction to stop the pumping of this oil out. Until when? Until the rights of the parties were decided. If this property does belong to the Government, are we going to let them keep pumping the oil out, and when the case is decided at some distant day have Doheny say, "You can have what is left," and Sinclair say, "You can have what is left; we have pumped all the oil out. We do not care anything about the old hull of a hill that is left there. We have the oil. What are you going to do about it?" Oh, Mr. President, our lawyers and our President are moving very slowly in this matter. The people are entitled to action, immediate action. But what is going on reminds me of what the poet Markham said about the "Slow creep of the patient mole."

Those are the tactics being employed by the administration to apprehend these millionaire criminals. I am not going to remain silent when such is the case.

Every man and woman in this country, I do not care whether rich or poor, are interested in this important matter and we should speak out in open meeting for them.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that if he can tell the counsel the jurisdiction in which these actions should be brought, if he himself will sit down and dictate the pleadings which must be drawn, he might be of very great assistance in expediting this matter.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, Mr. President, I am not called on to sit down and write the pleadings. If you will have these two attorneys resign, and save the money we are to pay them to the people, I will undertake to do it, and we will save this fifty-odd thousand dollars we are going to pay these lawyers.

Whom do they represent in this long delay? They are not representing my view of the matter, and I am speaking in part for the people of a sovereign State. The Senator from Wisconsin smiles. It does not seem to disturb him that they are not stopping the taking out of this oil; but I want it stopped, and the American people want it stopped. This letter to him [Mr. LENROOT] from this gentleman says that the impression prevailed that there was not going to be any real investigation, and Senator SMOOT, the former chairman, told this gentleman that there probably would not be an investigation except by the geologists. It does not take a geologist to investigate this case. It requires the investigation of a grand jury and criminal indictments. It takes somebody who has the courage, and who has clean hands, to stand up and fight in order to get at the truth, and the whole truth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside to enable the Senate to conclude the consideration of Senate Resolution 157. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was about to say that you can not apprehend a crook and a criminal by any milk and cider process, nor by people who blow both hot and cold out of the same mouth. You have to have somebody that is in earnest, that feels that he has a mission to perform, and that he is there to perform it. We do not want somebody who is afraid he will offend Mr. Sinclair or offend Mr. Doheny or Ed McLean. Was ever a witness treated with the consideration that this man has received—pampered, played with, put off, postponed? Why, Mr. President, he never has yet appeared before the committee. I ask the committee to summon him now, and the chairman sits before me. Why do you not bring Ed McLean before the committee?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. I certainly do. I am asking him a question.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say in answer to the Senator from Alabama that Mr. Ned McLean was subpœnaed; he is under subpœna before the committee every day, and just as soon as the committee can finish its work upon the telegrams that have passed, so that they are in the condition to examine Mr. McLean—many of the telegrams are in code—we expect Mr. McLean will, of course, appear before the committee; but he is under subpœna to-day, and has been.

Mr. HEFLIN. He is in Washington, I understand.

Mr. LENROOT. He is.

Mr. HEFLIN. It takes a long time to get him before the committee. I wonder if his health is good? Mr. President, many a man has lost his health since this thing started; and just as soon as we jump one of them he hits for Florida, post-haste, like a jack rabbit across the plains, going down to rest and recuperate. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] in his speech a while ago talked about Mr. Daugherty going to Florida because of sickness in his family. An article in a newspaper here in Washington recently reported that he went down there before, and there was some talk that he was hiding out. He said there was no truth in it; that he was down there playing and resting for his health, or words to that effect. I wonder if he feels the need of recuperation now? He is gone; but he did not leave, I understand, until he defied the powers that be in the White House. Why did he leave, as it were, shaking his fist at the White House? I have a paper on my desk here that will throw some light on the subject—

> Republicans now fear Daugherty—

This is from the Nashville Tennesseean, published at Nashville, Tenn., Monday morning, February 25, 1924. I will begin again. The headlines read:

> Republicans now fear Daugherty may be Samson. G. O. P. leaders dodge finish battle. Think party may go down in crash. Knows too much. Smear of oil can be seen in incidents leading to naming of a President.

Those are the headlines of this paper—that Daugherty is walking about under the Republican temple feeling the columns and trying out his strength, and may shake down the whole Republican convention that is assembled in the hall above his head, and that he has the forces with him to do it. Is that why the President does not ask him to resign? Why does he not ask him to resign?

I have seen a letter that will be shown in this investigation that it is said he wrote to a district attorney in the West that will open the eyes of the Senate and of the Nation. In the case that I am speaking of now a Republican national committeeman is involved, and instead of going after him and apprehending him the Attorney General was writing a letter to a district attorney whose duty it would be, I understand, to prosecute him that any favor that was granted would be highly appreciated, and, among other things, used these words: "He is our man." Oh, Mr. President, the trail of the serpent is over it all. It gets worse the further we go.

Now, since the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is present and has made an excuse which is not satisfactory to me about why Ed McLean has not been summoned——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think Mr. McLean should be summoned before the examination of the telegrams which passed between the city of Washington and Mr. McLean in Florida is finished?

Mr. HEFLIN. I think I would have called him before any of them were gone into and then I would have called him back again. I would have had him there twice, and maybe three times. That is the way to do with witnesses when you are trying a case. When the other side produces testimony that is contrary to the position you take, you bring in somebody to rebut it, and then give them an opportunity to come in and put up testimony to explain that, and then you refute that if you can. But Mr. McLean stays out, and he stays away for weeks way down in Florida. Some I am satisfied do not want him, and many efforts are made to keep him from coming, and they have succeeded, it seems, up to this time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to say to the Senator from Alabama that the chairman of the committee stands ready and has stood ready to call Mr. McLean to the stand, under the subpœna under which he now stands, at any moment that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] may request him, but there has been no difference among the Democratic and Republican members of the committee as to the course that should be pursued with reference to McLean, which is that the committee should conclude the investigation of the telegrams before Mr. McLean is called.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not see any members of the committee present just at this time. I think they have gone to lunch.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is present, and he is a member of the committee.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. KENDRICK. I want to corroborate the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin, so far as I know. It has not been possible for me to attend all of the meetings, but whenever I have been there there has been no refusal to summon any witness that the committee thought it was right and proper to summon.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not charging that there has been any refusal to summon a witness. I am complaining that Mr. McLean has not been summoned before the committee—to appear before the committee and testify long before now. The Republican Party is in power. The Republicans are in the majority here. The Republicans have the authority to lead in this matter, while they have not done so. Senator WALSH of Montana, a Democrat, had the lead, poorly supported at times, according to my judgment, but the chairman of the committee is a Republican. He could summon Mr. McLean without consulting the committee.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. KENDRICK. I think perhaps my statement did not convey exactly the impression that I wanted to have it convey in reference to the summoning of witnesses. I want to say here, as one who has been in attendance, as I said a moment ago, that I have never seen the slightest failure to acquiesce in the summoning of witnesses on the part of our chairman. He has immediately issued subpœnas whenever the suggestion has been made by any member of the committee that he would like to have a witness summoned. On all occasions that has been true.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not talking about what the members of the committee might suggest. The chairman ought not to wait to have the members to make these suggestions. The chairman of a committee who is directing an investigation does not and should not have to consult members always before issuing subpœnas. He can issue subpœnas, and it is his duty to move in the matter, and no chairman who is the head of a committee investigating a great subject like this ought to have to wait for somebody to suggest who ought to be summoned.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. I will state to the Senator from Alabama that the chairman of the committee has issued subpœnas of his own volition; but it is true that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has assumed the active part in the prosecution of the investigation. The Senate must know, if the Senator from Alabama does not know, that there can not be two directing heads in any investigation. There must be cooperation. There has been cooperation. The Senator from Montana has undertaken the prosecution. He has not met at any point or at any time any refusal of cooperation upon the part of the chairman of the committee.

So far as the summoning of Mr. McLean is concerned, does the Senator from Alabama under the circumstances think that the chairman of the committee, without the consent of the Senator from Montana, should undertake to put Mr. McLean upon the witness stand?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would have summoned him regardless of every member of the committee if I was chairman of it, because I think that he has some very important information. I think it ought to be brought out. I would ask him what about a private wire he has that runs into the White House or is operated by the White House telegrapher.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have repeatedly stated to the Senator from Alabama that Mr. McLean has been summoned. He is under subpœna to-day before the committee. He is here in Washington and he is going to be examined.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is it—he is going to be examined, and Christmas is going to come. Yes, he is going to be examined. There is no doubt about that. He is not the only one that is going to be examined, because this matter belongs to the public now. It is a United States question. There is not going to be any shielding in it. The high and the low, the rich and the poor are going to be summoned if I and other Senators that I know here can find out that they have information on the subject. The whole truth must be brought out.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] spoke about smoke screens being thrown out. I have not seen any smoke screens, except one that Daugherty threw out just before he departed. I confess that his attitude presents an amazing situation to the country of an Attorney General who has been arraigned as he has; facts have come out here in the Senate for two years regarding him, the record is full of things against this man, and still he holds on. He goes to the White House and talks to the President. We are told that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was called by the President to lay before him certain things that he knew about Mr. Daugherty's official conduct and reasons he had why he should be asked to resign from the Cabinet.

The story goes that the President said, "I want you to tell me again what you said to me before," and that Senator BORAH started to relating it again in detail and that Mr. Coolidge, the President, said, "I think Mr. Daugherty ought to be present," and BORAH said, "All right." Then the President touched a button, and within a minute's time Mr. Daugherty walked in. He was already in the White House. He walked in, and the story is that Mr. BORAH, the Senator from Idaho, continued to relate the story and related it in detail before the President and Mr. Daugherty.

No one can say that the President does not know about some of these facts. No friend of the President can say that he is not acquainted with some of these charges in detail. That can not be said. Some have tried to show that he was not here when the Teapot Dome matter was up for discussion and that he was not in the Cabinet when it was discussed there, but Senator BORAH knows that he was present when he told the President, in the presence of Mr. Daugherty, all of the things that he had to relate concerning him and why he should be asked to leave the Cabinet.

Smoke screen? Where is the smoke screen, Mr. President? The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] both during this oil investigation have asked questions of Mr. Magee, a very important witness against Mr. Fall, that indicated that they were trying to browbeat or discredit him.

They asked what his politics was. One of them asked, I believe, if he had supported Fall; whether he was a Democrat or Republican. He said that he had not supported Fall; that when he found out how things were being run in New Mexico he turned and fought the machine; that he went there as a Republican, but he found conditions so bad that he changed around and commenced to run an independently Democratic newspaper. They went on to ask him about his sojourn down there. He said in substance that Mr. Fall said to him, "The land office in this State has been organized to suit me." Twelve million acres of land have been given the State by the Government, and the whole situation is just as the cattlemen in southern New Mexico want it. He went his way. Later on he attacked the way they were operating the land office; he complained about how they collected a million and more dollars and held it instead of turning it over to the State. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] asked him what kind of an administration was that—Democratic or Republican? He said it was Republican. That must have been to the Senator from Wisconsin a disappointing answer.

Then members of the committee went on and asked, "What became of the thing finally?" He replied in substance, "Well, Mr. Fall came to my office; my wife told me that he was there waiting for me. I walked in; Mr. Fall took up a newspaper, handed it to me, called my attention to an article criticizing the land office, and so on, and asked, 'Did you write that?' I said, 'Let me put on my glasses,' which I did. I looked at the article and replied, 'Yes; I wrote it.' He said, 'I want you to back off from that.' I said, 'No.' He said, 'Did I not tell you that the land office was organized down here to suit me'—Fall. 'Yes; but it is not organized to suit me.'"

Then what? Fall said, "I am going to break you," meaning financially. Dollars and dimes! I said the other day, and I repeat it now, the time has come in this country when the dominating power—which at this time is the Republican Party—puts more emphasis upon the dollar than upon anything else on earth. Going to destroy his business. Why? Not because he was wrong, for Magee was right, but because he antagonized the corrupt powers of New Mexico. Fall was at their head and he said, "I want you to quit this attack." Magee said, "I will not do so." He was a poor newspaper man, who was struggling along. Fall then said, "I am going to break you." He was going to impoverish him, to put him out of business, put him where he could not fight for the good of the State whose civic institutions he had sworn to support and sustain.

Now let us follow that a little further. What happened in reference to Mr. Magee? Mr. Magee stated that Senator BURSUM came to see him, and said, in substance, "Magee, you owe a note at a certain bank for $30,000"—I think that was the amount—"which comes due on the 26th of April." Magee said, "I was astounded; I did not think anybody knew anything about that deal but myself and the banker from whom I had borrowed the money to help run my newspaper." "Well," Magee asked, "what is the trouble?" And if I recall the testimony correctly, Senator BURSUM said that they were going to collect the note; and later some one said, "You think you are going to renew the other note, but they are not going to let you renew it." Magee replied, in effect, "They have already promised that they would let me renew the note." They were going to drive this newspaper man to the wall. I repeat what I said a little while ago, the trail of the serpent is over it all.

Then what? Magee's note is coming due. He was told, "You are not going to get that note renewed." He said, "Yes; I am. I have an understanding with the bank." The bankers let the matter go right up nearly to the time the note was due and then told him, "We can not renew the note." So the poor fellow had his back to the wall, and they were crowding him and smiting him hip and thigh and were about to destroy his business. He said to the banker, "Would you rather fight me or buy me out?" The banker replied, "What will you take for your paper?" Magee answered, in substance, "You have my back to the wall"; and he sold the paper. They closed him out. However, he started a little weekly newspaper down there; he appealed to the people, and they supported him so well that he came back and is again publishing a daily newspaper. That is only a part of this gruesome story.

Magee is the man to whom questions were propounded by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that seem to me to be an attempt to discredit him. I think one of those Senators asked Magee if he had not been convicted of some crime; and, as I said before, the other one asked him whether or not he was a Democrat; another one asked if he was not merely talking politics. Did that look like they were earnest, serious investigators trying to get at the facts in a case where a man is charged with the most heinous crime that has been brought to the attention of Congress in a century?

Oh, Senators, this case involved the bartering of a whole nation's naval oil supply and it involved the national defense oil worth billions of dollars. Mr. President, if a Democratic President had been in the White House and a Democratic Secretary of the Navy and a Democratic Secretary of the Interior had put this thing over, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and all of the leaders over there would be bombarding this side every day, and I can imagine what they would say. They would say, "Senators, think of what they have done!" This naval oil reserve that we have held against the day of need has been turned over to them to safeguard and they have disposed of it; they have bartered it away; they have accepted money in connection with it; there is fraud in it; there is corruption in it; there is bribery in it; there is betrayal of trust in it; they are guilty of a great crime against the people of the whole United States. That would have been their cry every day in the Senate, and a just cry it would have been. Now, let me say to Republican Senators that it is right and proper to hold you and your party responsible for the conduct of the Government during a Republican administration—to hold your party responsible for this crime against the people.

Mr. President, I want some people to get a certain idea into their heads. It is carried in this quotation:

> The thorns which I have reap'd are of the tree
> I planted; they have torn me, and I bleed.

That is the situation which you have brought about with distrust, fraud, and charges of corruption hanging about nearly every department of the Government, and an Attorney General, whose record ought to be pure as light and stainless as a star, charged with all sorts of high crimes and misdemeanors heading the Department of Justice of a hundred million people. Talk about respect for law with the very head of the Department of Justice himself stifling prosecutions, protecting Republican friends and officials, that deal in barter for the good of the Republican Party!

Mr. President, I want to announce to the Senate that the disclosures of the last day or two are not only startling but astounding indeed. We have come to a time under Republican rule in the life of the Nation when one of its wealthiest men has a private wire, and the man who operates the telegraph service for the White House—the White House of the Nation that we love—is the private operator of Ed McLean, the millionaire, whom it is so difficult to get before the investigating committee.

Mr. President, suppose that had happened under a Democratic administration; suppose the Republicans were able to say that the White House is infested with the very people who are charged with putting this deal over to the hurt and injury of the Nation; that a man in the service of the White House is in the private employ of this man McLean; that the telegraph operator of the White House is McLean's private telegraph operator. You can not get away from these entangling situations; they fasten themselves about your very limbs; they clamp your wrists; they clasp your ankles; you have the shackles on, and you can not break away. Yet this man McLean has never yet opened his mouth in a committee room to tell what he knows.

The concocted story that he loaned Fall $100,000 passes away with the mists of the morning. It is false. Fall, it seems, never borrowed $100,000 from McLean. The story was manufactured out of the whole cloth; it was concocted for a purpose. What was that purpose? The purpose was to keep Doheny in the background, because they knew if ever the light was turned on Doheny that there would be made plain all of these oil interests of his, his friendship for the present President, his ardent support of the present administration, his visits to those high in authority now in the Capital, and the statements given out by him in support of the Republican ticket—the light would reveal things that would cause honest people to sit up, think, and ask the questions: How fares the Republic and whither are we drifting?

What have we here this morning in this connection? The Senator from Ohio admits that he discussed with Mr. Daugherty the make-up of the committee that is going to investigate him. Well, you can imagine about what would be said in a conversation on such an occasion. A man of an inquiring mind would ask the question whether something like this was said:

"Harry, how would So-and-so do? Would he be agreeable to you?"

I imagine Harry would say:

"I will take him"; or "I will not take him."

"Well, now, how would LA FOLLETTE, NORRIS, BROOKHART, SHIPSTEAD, or MAGNUS JOHNSON and LADD and CAPPER do?"

I imagine when you mentioned "LA FOLLETTE" to him, he would have thrown a fit right on the spot. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The present occupant of the chair can not continue admonishing the occupants of the galleries regarding the rules of the Senate. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], while occupying the chair, has admonished the occupants of the galleries as to the rule forbidding demonstrations in the galleries. The rule will have to be observed if the galleries are to remain open.

Mr. HEFLIN. I could imagine when that conversation proceeded, that Mr. Daugherty might say:

"Why, Senator So-and-so will do. I have just appointed two Federal judges for him. I have named a district attorney or so for another Senator, and these would be agreeable to me."

I guess they would. So the Senator from Ohio says the make-up of the proposed investigating committee was discussed with Mr. Daugherty.

Do you know what a man would say whose hands were clean, and who, at the judgment bar of his own conscience stood guiltless? He would say: "I do not care what committee you appoint. But I do want you to appoint a committee. All I want is an opportunity to give to that committee the truth." That is what most men would have said, I think.

I understand that the Attorney General to-day states that he has "got some dope on certain Senators." Well, let him go to work at once with his dopestick. Any Senator who can not stand up and have the yardstick of common decency and common honesty applied to him here ought not to be in the Senate. I do not care on which side he sits. Let Daugherty come on and turn on the light with whatever charges he has, whatever facts he has. Let him submit them. I wonder if he threw that out thinking he would intimidate Senators, some of them who knew that maybe they had better tread softly.

Mr. President, he has challenged the Senate. He defied the President, we are told, and now he challenges the Senate. Well, I saw the Senate pass the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] calling on the President to request Denby to resign, and I saw Denby's statement flaunted in the face of the Senate and the country saying that he would not resign and defying everybody and everything, and I saw the President's statement saying he would not permit him to resign; and yet in a little while, when the tidal wave of indignant public opinion came sweeping in, I saw Denby fold his tent and silently steal away.

Daugherty defies them now. He is the kingmaker of the Republican Party. He knows more than any other man in the Cabinet. He, in my judgment, is in connection with more big crooked interests than any other man who ever sat in the Cabinet. He can call forth more campaign funds for Republicans than any other man who ever sat in the Cabinet of the United States. They know it. He is the Samson; and if he gets up under the pillars with his mighty shoulders and strikes these columns with his mighty fists, there is going to be some great doings in Republican quarters, and you do not want any crash to come.

Ah, Senators, I do not care what party may be in power; whenever a man can so conduct that office that he can construct a network of crooked doings through the country, establishing his agents here and yonder, and so represent predatory interests that he can stand up and defy those who have sworn to act for the good of the whole people we have reached a pitiful pass in the life of this Nation.

I do not know how they will explain that telegraphic arrangement with the operator at the White House. I should like to have it explained. If any Senator here would like to make an explanation, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. President, this feature of the oil scandal is one of the worst things connected with it. Not only have we trailed this serpent to the door of various Cabinet members, but we are now tracking him over the fence into the White House yard, and even into the White House itself.

Mr. President, I want to say to the Senate and the country that it is unpleasant to have to be so plain in statements here. It is not at all pleasing to me. I would rather say things that would please people. I like to make people laugh. I like to speak of things that are agreeable rather than have to go into things that are disagreeable; but I am in the same position here that a soldier would be on the firing line in defense of his country. His duty calls him to go where there is danger. His duty calls him to go where there are unpleasant things to do. His duty calls him to go where his work may result in driving away or destroying the enemy, but he never flinches because of that. He hears the call of duty; he has a flag to support, a government to defend, and if he is the right kind of a soldier he is ready to fight and, if need be, die for his country. Why should we be any less patriotic? Why should we be any less courageous? Why should we shrink from duty here because it may involve in this oil scandal some Senator?

I call on Mr. Daugherty to name the Senators he has in mind. I guess he can read the English language. Let them communicate that message to him. Name them. Name them to-morrow. Put them in print. Let the Senate and the country know who they are.

I said on yesterday, and I have intimated it before, that there are no secrets in this whole thing, so far as I am concerned. There are not going to be any of them kept from the American people if I can prevent it. Why should we keep secrets from them? What did they do when the tocsin of war sounded? They sent their sons to go 3,000 miles to die for these institutions. Were those boys fighting to harbor Denby and Fall and Daugherty in evil doing, in looting the Nation, in corrupting high places in the Government? That was not what they were fighting for. Was that what their comrades died for on the battle fields of France? No, thank God! There are those here who will dare to fight for these boys, to fight for their fathers and mothers, the women and children back of them, and to preserve the Government that they fought to save in the hour of its peril.

Mr. President, on yesterday I commented upon the conduct of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in doing an extraordinary thing, reprehensible, to my mind, very reprehensible. They called on Mr. Fall, this man who bartered the birthright of children yet unborn, this man who betrayed his trust, this man who profited to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of dollars, I believe, by selling the property of the people intrusted to his care. They called on him, out at his apartment in Wardman Park Inn, the papers said at night, but the Senator from Wisconsin says it was in the afternoon; but whether it was in the daytime or nighttime, Mr. President, it was a bad thing to do, and that performance is not going to be set as a precedent if I can prevent it. I think I shall a little later on call on the Senate, through a resolution, to express itself upon that subject.

What is the situation that is presented? Here is this former Cabinet officer, a Republican, in conference with the chairman of the committee and former chairman, both Republicans, they leaving the committee without telling a single member of the committee they were going to call on Fall, going out alone, just these two Republican Senators, and having a conference with him, a secret conference, when nobody outside was present to hear what took place, and they had a private conversation with him. The Senator from Utah says that nobody had told how much money was involved or where it came from, and they were desirous of securing that information, and that is why they went. Now, then, I want to propound to him this interrogatory: Why was it, if the Senator was there for that purpose, bent on obtaining that information, that he did not hear Mr. Fall say that he got it from Ed McLean?

If I had been sent with a certain message to somebody and to get an answer, I would hate to come back and have this happen: "Did you see him?" I would say, "Yes." "What did he say?" And I should have to say: "I do not know. I am not sure what he said." The other fellow with me would say: "Well, he said so-and-so." And they should ask me, "Did not you hear that?" And I should have to say, "No; I did not hear it." "Well, if you were present, why did you not hear it?" "I do not know. I am willing, though, for you to look into my heart and see if you can find the answer there." This situation is puzzling.

Mr. President, I have not time to look into hearts. I am going to judge people in this matter by the standard that the Bible gives me:

By their fruits ye shall know them.

That is the standard. These Senators go out to see Mr. Fall, about what? They stated here that they discussed the subject and made some suggestions to him that he ought to tell this thing. Well, he came up here and told something. Now, it turns out that there was not any truth in what he told. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] intimated yesterday that I had charged him and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] with concocting this scheme. I said nothing of the kind.

The wicked flee when no man pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a lion.

The Senator from Utah says, "The Senator from Alabama insinuates that we concocted this scheme." I did not do it. I asked the question, Who suggested that Fall make that statement? I ask it again to-day, Who suggested to Fall that he make that statement? I will ask it many times.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator ask that question in connection in any wise with the visit that the Senator from Utah and I had to Secretary Fall?

Mr. HEFLIN. Do I ask it——

Mr. LENROOT. In connection with our visit to Secretary Fall?

Mr. HEFLIN. I asked who suggested this to Fall.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator asked who suggested it. Does it have any connection in the Senator's mind with the visit to Secretary Fall that has been referred to?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will ask the Senator a little different question: Was it discussed there? Was Ed McLean discussed in his presence?

Mr. LENROOT. In what way?

Mr. HEFLIN. In any way.

Mr. LENROOT. He was not, except that the Senator heard my statement upon the floor yesterday afternoon, did he not?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I heard it.

Mr. LENROOT. I have nothing to add to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is the reason why I am operating again to-day. I want to hear more on this subject. The Senator now says that nothing was said about it except when Fall said that. Where was the Senator from Utah when that was said?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Utah was in the room.

Mr. HEFLIN. He says he did not hear it.

Mr. LENROOT. I heard that.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, I will ask the Senator, while he is up, whether he suggested to the Senator from Utah that he go up there with him, or whether the Senator from Utah suggested to the Senator from Wisconsin that he go with him?

Mr. LENROOT. I did not. I stated that on the floor yesterday. The Senator heard me state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Senator SMOOT was quoted in the Washington Herald on the day before as saying that you invited him to go.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not responsible for that, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. President, about the most despicable of human beings is the assassin of character, and I have a right to ask the Senator from Alabama whether he intends to insinuate by innuendo that I had any part in concocting a lie on the part of Senator Fall?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I have not accused the Senator of trying to concoct a lie, and I do not at all. But I will ask that question many a time, Who was it that suggested to Fall to state that he got this money from Ed McLean?

Mr. LENROOT. Now, I ask the Senator again, in asking that question, does he ask it with reference to any visit I had with Senator Fall?

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask it generally.

Mr. LENROOT. Then he does in that connection, does he?

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask it generally. I am not saying that. The Senator can take that statement of mine and now act as he chooses.

Mr. LENROOT. Again, Mr. President, I want to say to the Senate that I can not think of anything more despicable than the insinuations the Senator from Alabama would now leave with the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I can not think of anything more despicable than a partisan Senator leaving his committee room, without telling any member of his committee, except another partisan member of that committee, and going into the room of the criminal charged, under indictment, and talking to him about what he ought to say or ought not to say and then not tell the committee about it. The Senator came back here yesterday and stated that he told one or two.

I have asked one or two of the Members about it and one Member, I believe, said that the Senator said that the Senator told me that Fall told him that before, but he never told about the circumstances under which he told him. I asked another Senator if he told him, and he laughed and said, "I understand that he says he did." Now I ask the Senator what Senators he told, and under what circumstances he told them, that he went up there.

Mr. LENROOT. I will be very glad to state it. Shortly after Mr. McLean's testimony, in the room of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I stated to the Senator from Montana that Senator Fall had lied to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and myself, as he had to the committee. A week or 10 days ago I told this story, as I told it yesterday, to the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], another Democratic member of the committee.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will in a moment. What I am wanting to know about was why did you did not tell the committee immediately on returning from the visit to Fall's room at his hotel in this city. This other came out later, and other developments were bringing it out. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I simply want to say that if the Senator from Wisconsin told me the whole story as he told it here on the floor, I did not so understand it. I merely understood the Senator to say that Senator Fall had told him this same story he told the committee, but I never knew, and I never had any idea, that there was any meeting between Senator Fall, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and if the Senator from Wisconsin so stated I did not so understand, and I did not so hear. I simply wanted to say that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to say to the Senator from Washington that seated on a seat in the rear of the room I told him that Mr. Fall had told the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and me the same story exactly that he had told the committee.

Mr. DILL. I did not hear anything about the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I simply heard that he had told "me" the same story that he had told the committee, but as to a meeting being held before that occurred, and all that sort of thing, I never heard anything about it, and never dreamed anything about it until it came out in public.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is there any other witness the Senator from Wisconsin would like to put up? I talked to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] about this thing, and I would like to ask him what his recollection of it is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not like to be drawn into this kind of a controversy. I would not undertake to say that the Senator from Wisconsin did not say to me just exactly what he said he said. I do recall that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] told me after I got back from Palm Beach that Senator Fall had told him that story—that is to say, told that he had got the money from McLean.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did he say anything about calling on him at Wardman Park?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; he did not.

Mr. HEFLIN. So the Senator from Montana does not——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the statement that he did make necessarily implied that he had met Senator Fall somewhere and had talked with him somewhere.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true; that could be implied; but the Senator from Montana does not recall that the Senator from Wisconsin told him that they called on ex-Secretary Fall at Wardman Park.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not state that we called on him at Wardman Park.

Mr. HEFLIN. Two witnesses have been produced, and they do not remember it exactly as does the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Alabama will permit a further interruption, I understand that the Senator animadverted to some extent on the failure thus far to recall Mr. McLean to the stand. Mr. McLean was subpœnaed to attend some time ago, and at that time it was expected that he would be promptly interrogated by the committee; but that he has not yet been interrogated by the committee is a responsibility which I must myself individually assume. With respect to the examination thus far, it has been, with the kindness of the other members of the committee, practically placed in my hands, at least so far as the order in which the witnesses shall be examined is concerned, and in the regular order of the procedure I have not deemed it advisable to call Mr. McLean just yet.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am anxious at an early date to have his testimony. I earnestly and sincerely hope that he will be called soon.

Now I want to go back to this other proposition, because that is not going to be set as a precedent if I can help it. In my judgment, the Democratic Party will come into power on the 4th of March, 1925, and I do not want any Democratic member of an investigating committee to call on a Democratic official, a Cabinet official, if he should happen to be charged with crime against the country—I do not want them hobnobbing with him in secret. That is my position. I am not only condemning the Senator from Wisconsin—as I do—for his conduct, and the Senator from Utah; I condemn any partisan for conduct like that.

What would you have thought if, when the Newberry case was under consideration, the chairman of the investigating committee and the next man to him on it, both Republicans, had gone in behind closed doors and had secret conferences with Newberry, charged with buying a seat in the Senate? What would we have thought of it? You would have condemned it; at least, I think you would. I would have.

Now, I put another illustration to the Senate. Suppose a man was being tried before a jury, 12 jurors selected for that purpose, with a foreman of the jury, the head of the jury, there listening to the testimony. Suppose the judge should find out the next morning that after the judge had adjourned court in the afternoon and the jurors had left court, the foreman of the jury and another juror had been closeted at night with the defendant, the man under indictment. What would the judge have done? He would have put them both in jail for contempt of court. But when in the United States Senate representatives from the sovereign States of the Union are investigating one of the worst criminals in its annals, accused of bartering part of the public domain worth billions of dollars, with his pockets stuffed full of money out of the crooked and corrupt transactions, we find his friends and partisans calling on him at his apartment and having a conference with him, when neither the Senator from Montana nor any other Democrat upon the committee was invited to be present. It is a reprehensible act. The people of this country are not going to approve of it. I do not approve of it. I condemn it with all the force at my command; and I ask the Senator from Wisconsin or the Senator from Utah, if there was nothing to be kept secret about it, why they did not give it to the press the next morning and say "Senator SMOOT and I called on Fall yesterday afternoon and we got an important statement from him that is coming out pretty soon." But nothing was said about it for some time after that.

Mr. President, it is a strange situation, I say again, a very strange situation indeed. There is a right way to do these things and there is a wrong way to do these things. I am heartily in favor of the resolution of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I want the Senate to elect this committee, and I think the gentlemen named in that resolution in the outset will do their duty in the premises. There are Senators in this Chamber I would not want to be on that investigating committee. I feel it my duty to talk frankly and plainly.

Why not elect this committee? The Senate is the body that is ordering an investigation. The Senate is the body that elects the Presiding Officer. The Senate is the body that is supposed to represent the American people. The Senate wants a committee that will go earnestly into the facts. The Senate, with 96 Members, can not sit as the committee. It wants a small committee of five to go into it and bring out all the facts. This committee simply gets the facts and submits them to the whole Senate. That is what the committee is to do. This committee does not have the final say in this matter. After they investigate they make a report, and I want Senators on that committee who are really in earnest, Senators who want to get at the truth, it makes no difference whether it hurts the Republican Party or the Democratic Party. So I am in favor of the resolution of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. President, I believe that is about all I want to say upon this subject to-day. I want to say this in conclusion: Every Government on the earth that has perished has perished on account of just such conduct as this—officers in high place proving unfaithful to the people, betraying their trust, becoming corrupt, and bartering away the substance of the people, and in doing so attack the very vitals of the Government. That is why so many Governments of the earth have gone down, and here we are with one Cabinet member after another arraigned for grave wrongdoing, with probably two or three more to be arraigned later on.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I am glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. The Senator suggests that things are striking at the vitals of the Government. Will the Senator yield long enough for me to read a series of telegrams showing how this is striking right at the White House?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. Among the telegrams which have come before the committee we find that on December 22 a man by the name of Major telegraphed to Edward McLean in Palm Beach that he should install a private wire.

It will give you quick access to the White House.

Mr. McLean replied December 22, 1923, to Mr. Major:

I am having a wire installed. Please take up with Smithers at the White House.

Smithers is the wire man, in charge of the telegraph room at the White House.

On December 24, 1923, Mr. Major wired Mr. McLean:

Have talked with Smithers at the White House.

On December 28, Mr. Duckstein wired to Mr. McLean:

Wire here ready Saturday night, 29. Regarding operator, Smithers would like the job. John Brown thinks man satisfactory and advises against the stranger. Brown self rather not handle it. He is trying to get away from telegraphy, but will if you say so. Please wire me on receipt definitely regarding the operating.

Mr. McLean on the 28th replied to Smithers direct, not to Major, and I may say there were some long-distance telephone conversations that intervened, as shown by the telegram. McLean said to Smithers, wiring him at the telegraph room at the White House:

Of course, would like to have you as operator, but wire is going to be put direct into Cincinnati. Telegraph room.

On December 29, 1923, McLean wired Smithers again, telegraph room at the White House:

Will be glad to have you handle Washington end of wire. Get in touch with John Brown, Cincinnati Enquirer, Post Building, Washington.

Then, on January 20, Mr. Major wired to Mr. McLean:

Smithers has not been placed on pay roll. You instructed Marks to place him there last week at regular rate. The reason that he has not been put on is the fact that there appears to be no regular rate.

Now, Mr. President, this series of telegrams show that Edward McLean was putting in charge of his private wire the man who was the private-wire operator at the White House, so that no message from the world can go into the White House by wire without passing through the hands of the private operator of Mr. McLean on his private wire.

I want to read into the RECORD from an editorial in the New York World of February 28, yesterday's issue. The editorial is as follows:

TO THE DOOR OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

Among the telegrams made public yesterday by the Senate committee are several sent last December from Washington to Edward B. McLean, at Palm Beach, that call for instant explanation. They cast a startling light on conditions that have not yet been brought under investigation.

For what reason did McLean want "easy and quick access to the White House" through a leased wire? With whom did he seek direct personal communication? Why should E. W. Smithers, chief telegrapher at the White House, "like the job" and be recommended above others? Why should a member of the White House secret-service staff, named Starling, receive from McLean at Palm Beach and send to McLean at Palm Beach mysterious messages?

The trail of oil leads straight into the Executive Offices of the White House. This is a matter that President Coolidge must want to have cleared up at once. If men in the White House offices—telegraph operators, secret-service men, or others—were in close communication with McLean, the President can not but demand that they explain to him their conduct and make clear the purpose of their secret relations with persons who have been exposed in the oil scandals.

I read a moment ago, while the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] was speaking, a telegram from the confidential man of Mr. Daugherty, giving Mr. McLean private advice as to the working of the committee investigating him because of the way he had deceived the committee, and the trail of this thing goes clear the rounds of the Executive's offices; it seems even in his own office. As yet we have had no word of explanation why a man who is the private confidential wire man at the White House should become the private wire man of Edward McLean, a man who is clearly guilty of perjury before the committee and who is clearly guilty of having deceived the committee and the country, in combination and in harmony with Mr. Fall, who sold the oil reserves of the country.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I thank my good friend from Washington; he is a brave and brilliant member of this investigating committee—right on the job all the time. It is refreshing and helpful to have such as he on guard for their country at a time like this. These disclosures must have astounded everyone who heard them, Senators and people from over the country who sit in these crowded galleries at this time. A private wire of this millionaire of the city is run into the White House itself, and the White House telegrapher is his private agent. As the Senator from Washington has well said, no message from the wide world can come or go that does not trickle down the wire, if he wants it to, to Edward McLean, the man who had undertaken to help Fall out of the awful predicament in which he found himself in this oil scandal, the man who said that he had loaned him money and then later said he wrote the checks and let him have them, but he returned the checks to him. Why? Because there could be no trace of them in that fashion. If he had had them cashed, the banks would have a record of it and be able to testify; but they were not cashed, so he had to say that he gave them, and they were returned—just a little agreement between two friends. Doheny, the man they were seeking to hide behind the smoke screen, the man they were trying to protect, came out and said, "Why, I loaned it to him, an old friend." "Yes? What did you get in return, Mr. Doheny?" He could have said, "I have this oil reservoir, one of the greatest in the wide world." "You just loaned your friend this money?" "Yes." "What is that you have in your pocket, Mr. Doheny?" "That is a note passed to me by Senator SMOOT in the Senate Office Building during a meeting of the committee; he is the former chairman of the committee on investigation." "Let us see it." He took it out, but it was torn into a hundred pieces. I understand that he said, "Read it if you can."

Oh, Senators, these things are not pleasant, but as I live and God reigns they have got to come out. The people have got to know the facts in the case. We on this side are determined, and some on the other side of the Chamber are determined that these things are coming out.

Why is it that Daugherty does not want a progressive Republican on this committee—LA FOLLETTE of Wisconsin, NORRIS of Nebraska, BROOKHART of Iowa, SHIPSTEAD of Minnesota, JOHNSON of Minnesota, CAPPER of Kansas, and others that I could mention? Why, they refer to them as Bolsheviks, their people impoverished by the cruel administration of the Republican Party grinding them down, taking their substance away, pauperizing them. They are crying for relief and their people are crying for relief, and here they are characterized by these high-brow crooks as Bolsheviks. There never was a time in the history of human government when those who stood up and fought to save their country from the despoiler were not characterized as demagogues, as time servers. Those who were not willing to wear the collar of the corrupt interests have always been characterized as demagogues. If those here are demagogues who demand honesty in office, I pray God that this Chamber may soon be filled with them, and the sooner the better. I do not care what side they hail from. If a Senator is in this body who can not stand up and fight these oil crooks to the finish he ought to be put out of the Senate.

Let Daugherty come on with his charges. This side of the Chamber is ready to stand up and meet them. Call the roll. It makes no difference who it hits, whether it is Democrat or Republican. Let him come on. The disclosures made here by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] in the telegrams he has read creep up close to the White House. My God, is there no spot in this Government under Republican rule not infested with these crooks?

What has the President got to say now? I saw the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], when he told here how the present President sat in the Presiding Officer's chair in the Senate and heard him discuss the Teapot Dome oil scandal and this Doheny oil matter.

It was also said that this thing was discussed in the Cabinet. Fall himself, I believe, said it was discussed in the Cabinet, and some of them claim now, I believe, that the present President was not there. But how is he performing since the mantle of Chief Executive fell upon his shoulders? What has been his walk and what has been his talk? How was it when we indicted Denby and plastered over his back a placard saying, "This officer in your Cabinet is guilty of conduct born in fraud and corruption. He violated the law of his country and defied the fixed policy of the Nation." He said he would not even permit him to resign if he wanted to. What did Denby do? He said, in substance, "I defy you. I refuse to resign." What has been the President's walk and his talk since this scandal broke upon the Nation in all its fury and rottenness?

Daugherty? The Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] shows that one of the secret-service men or confidential men from the Department of Justice communicated with McLean in Florida about this thing. Daugherty is under indictment by resolution of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and under a number of indictments brought by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]. The RECORD is full of pages sizzling and bristling with severe characterizations of him. What is the President doing?

What does the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] say? The paper says that he and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] went up and advised Daugherty to resign; and who sent them? What did they say to him? I do not know. He has not resigned. When he left this city he defied the whole powers that be and said he was not going to resign. What is the President's talk and walk now? No longer are we permitted to say he was at this place or that place when this was discussed and that was up for consideration. These things that I am talking about are transpiring under his own eyes, and now the culmination and climax of it all is that Ed McLean, who with Fall is smeared all over with the slime of this oil thing, has a private-wire operator in the White House.

Ed McLean's private agent is his telegrapher, and he is at the same time the White House telegrapher, and as the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] said, no message can come and go that Ed McLean's agent does not know about. Predatory interests are crowding into every nook and corner of the Government.

Senators, this investigation is becoming more and more interesting. If I were the President, if I were in position to do so, I would do like the silver fish does when he gets covered all over with jellyfish. He can not get them off of himself in the water. They cling to him from gill to tail; but he knows a trick that will do the work. He finds a place where the sun is shining bright upon the water at noonday, where all the heavens are ablaze with the light and glory of the sun. He approaches the surface there and leaps out without a minute's warning to the enemies that surround him, and as soon as the light of heaven strikes them they are dazed, and they turn loose and fall, and he darts away free from all of them. It is high time that the President, if he can, was shaking off the dangerous and corrupt jellyfish that are hanging onto the body politic of the Nation. The good of the country demands that he shake them off.

What would Old Hickory Jackson have done if the Attorney General had told him he was not going to resign? What would he have done? Why the Attorney General would have been thankful to have had the opportunity to resign. But when a man who is so big as Daugherty is in the Republican councils comes in and tells them, "You know all about these things," what happens? It is intimated that he had a conversation like that with some high in authority. "You know all about these things and you have known about them all the time. You have known what I had to do to accomplish this and accomplish that, and you are not going to make a scapegoat of me. If that is your game, 'lay on, Macduff,' and I will strike back." The papers say Republican leaders are afraid of him. They are afraid he is a Samson, and if they do lay onto him in this matter and he throws that big first of his into them, there will be more withheld or called-in campaign funds than they ever dreamed of.

Not only that but a fellow who has a passport to the purse of these big fellows, which he uses for his party, may come around and say, "I have seen So-and-so and So-and-so, and they say if you crucify me and put me out they will not give you a cent for your next presidential election."

The poor old Republican Party! If Abe Lincoln could come back to-day and see what is going on under the control of that party, he would denounce every one of them and drive them out of control of the Government. He would say, "I do not propose to have these crimes committed in my name, in the name of the party of Lincoln." Next autumn the appeal must be not only to the Democrats but to honest Republicans, men and women the country over, to progressives and independents. They must be called to arms and told "the battle here is not between this theory and that, but it is between the friends of good government and its enemies—it is honesty in politics and integrity in place against crookedness in politics and corruption in high office." That is going to be the issue.

Mr. President, I have no fear as to what the final result will be. If this country should retain the Republican Party in power, with all this corruption reeking everywhere, I should tremble for the safety of my country. I believe in the honesty and integrity of the masses of the people; I believe that when the truth is put to them they will for the good of the country act as they should act. If there are any members of the investigating committee who are not at liberty to conduct this oil-scandal investigation to a finish in the open, I wish they would make it known and decline to serve.

Mr. BRUCE obtained the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] has been recognized.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not wish to occupy more than two or three minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BRUCE. I do not expect to occupy but a few minutes myself. I merely wish to make a brief explanation with regard to my vote in respect to the pending amendment. Indeed, I desire to say very little more than that in voting on this amendment I do not propose to be influenced by any personal or factious motive whatever.

The question now is not whether the public conduct of Mr. Daugherty shall be investigated. I imagine, though I do not know it, that practically all of us are agreed that the investigation shall take place. Indeed, as I understand it, Mr. Daugherty himself is willing that his official conduct shall be investigated, and, under the circumstances, prefers that it should be. Were the question under discussion whether it should be investigated or not, there might be some room for partisan controversy; but that is not what is at issue.

The point to be determined is whether or not the public behavior of Mr. Daugherty is to be fairly investigated; or, in other words, whether the committee by which it is to be examined is to be so constituted as to consider his public actions fairly or to be simply a gun loaded to kill. I do not see that anybody will profit by an unfair investigation of Mr. Daugherty's public conduct; certainly not the Democratic Party. If it should be held blameless, there would be no partisan advantage to be derived by that party from that fact; and if it should not be investigated fairly and should not be held blameless there would be about as little real partisan advantage to be gained by the Democratic Party from such result. So I say the question really is, Is Mr. Daugherty's public conduct to be fairly and justly reviewed or not?

The present debate has wandered far from the point actually at issue. Originally the pending resolution provided for an investigation of Mr. Daugherty's official conduct, and the mover of the resolution [Mr. WHEELER] undertook to name in it the committee by which the investigation was to be made, and among the persons named was the mover of the resolution himself. I do not wish to use any censorious language, but the mover of the resolution, in my opinion, made at least a mistake of judgment in suggesting his own name. It was certainly not a modest thing to do. That, however, is a matter of secondary importance. What is more important, it was not, in my judgment, just the fair thing to do.

If any Senator on this floor since I have been a Member of this body has exhibited a strong personal and factional animus against anybody, it is the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] in his relations to Mr. Daugherty. Whether he has personal reasons for entertaining this peculiarly acrid feeling toward Mr. Daugherty or not, everybody knows that he is closely affiliated politically with elements in our population that have peculiar reasons of their own for subjecting Mr. Daugherty to investigation.

Mr. WHEELER. To whom does the Senator from Maryland refer?

Mr. BRUCE. It is unnecessary for me to say, for the Senator knows very well what I mean.

So I say, with all due respect to the Senator, as the mover of the resolution that he should never have suggested his own name as one of the investigators. Indeed, his conduct in that respect reminds me just a little of an historic circumstance that occurred in this Hall or in the Hall at the other end of the Capitol a good many years ago when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] introduced his "force bill" into Congress, which proposed Federal control of Federal elections at the South. There was no provision in the bill for minority representation; in other words, for Democratic representation in the choice of the officers of election.

Some innocent Democrat asked, "How is it that there is no provision in this bill for minority representation?" "Oh," replied some Republican whose name I have forgotten, "there is no politics in this bill." I think it must have been on some such amiable theory as this that the Senator from Montana deemed himself qualified to be one of the members of the proposed investigating committee.

In insisting that Mr. Daugherty's public conduct should be fairly investigated, if investigated at all, I can not altogether shut my eyes or close my memory to the circumstance that it was only a year ago when, in response to the demand for an investigation similar to that which is now being urged, an effort was made by the House of Representatives to have him impeached. Charges were laid before a committee of that body; they were considered, and, as I recollect, by a majority of 20 to 1 the committee refused to report favorably upon the proposition of impeachment. This fact certainly furnishes another reason why we should act in the proper spirit now.

I hold no brief for Mr. Daugherty. I do not know him; I never saw him until I sat behind him at the Harding memorial exercises a few days ago. I believe him to be a brave man, and I like that. I believe that it still remains to be shown that he is not an honest man.

I shall reserve my judgment about that, at any rate, until the final result of the investigation shall have been reached; but I do not believe, and the bar and the bench of the country do not believe, that he has the professional skill and attainments and the application that befit the incumbent of such a lofty office as that of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. President, after the pending resolution was introduced in its original form it was modified at the instance of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] so as to strike out the names of the committee suggested in it and to provide for the appointment of the committee by the Senate. Then the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] rose and proposed the amendment which is now under consideration, providing that instead of the committee being selected by the Senate it should be selected by the Presiding Officer. At that time my attention had not been called to the rule of the Senate requiring the members of the select Senate committee to be chosen by ballot unless otherwise ordered. Consequently at that time my intent was to vote in favor of the amendment presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, because I think any parliamentary body that has a vestige of self-respect should be slow to lay rude hands upon its own presiding officer. When any such body affronts its own presiding officer without cause, it does not simply affront him; it affronts itself. His office is an ancient, honorable, and dignified one, coeval with the political history of the Anglo-Saxon race, and usually he is intrusted with the function of naming the members of all committees.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BRUCE. If the Senator will pardon me, I should prefer not to yield just now, but I will yield in a few moments. This is not a very convenient point at which to stop, because I am reciting the history of the resolution. After that, however, I shall be glad to yield. So at first I favored the pending amendment. In other words, I felt that the dignity of the Presiding Officer of the Senate is the dignity of the Senate itself, and though he is elected under partisan conditions, yet when he is elected he is expected to be the servant of the whole House, and if he has any proper conception of his duties that is what he always is. How often after the end of a session, during which there has been much partisan conflict and strife, do the members of a parliamentary body, without regard to party, assemble and present some conspicuous testimonial of their esteem to their Presiding Officer, irrespective of all partisan considerations.

Afterwards the attention of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and of myself was called to the special rule of the Senate, to which I have referred. I have carefully read the rules of the Senate, and I am as fairly conversant with them, perhaps, as a man can be with such a limited experience in this body as mine, but I confess that I had forgotten this one. Now, however, that it has been called to my attention, I think that it should control this case.

It provides, as I have said, that the members of special committees of every sort shall be chosen by ballot unless otherwise ordered. In point of fact, this has not been done since I have been here. Even where special committees have been appointed, their members have been named by the Presiding Officer; but that was merely as a matter of complaisance or acquiescence on the part of the Senate. Now, however, the question has been distinctly raised: Shall the proposed committee be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, or shall it be appointed by the Senate itself? As there is a strong demand, to say the least, on the part of the Senate that the committee should be named by the Senate itself, I think that demand ought to be complied with. I think that we should, under the circumstances of this particular case, honor the rule itself instead of its exceptions because a certain amount of distrust is going to attach to the naming of the committee, whether it is named by the Presiding Officer of the Senate or whether it is named by the Senate itself.

I can truthfully declare that I have no desire in this case to do anything except the right thing, the proper thing, the just thing. That is what we should all try to do. Certainly there can be nothing of deeper concern to any individual than to have his public reputation or his personal honor assailed. Some Member of the Senate said here the other day, speaking in a perfectly unaffected, natural manner, "I would rather die—yes, I would rather die—than have my public integrity besmirched." That is the way we should all feel. I trust and believe that it is the way that we all do feel.

Therefore I think that if this committee is to be selected by the Senate it should be selected with the most scrupulous, the most punctilious regard to fairness. Of course, every political element in the Senate should be represented on it, but it should be made up fairly and justly. In making it up some sort of sense of proportion and balance ought to be preserved. In other words, the constitution of the committee should be such that Mr. Daugherty's public conduct shall as far as possible be investigated in a fair-minded manner. I do not believe that the country would be satisfied with anything else. I do not think that any Member of the Senate ought to be satisfied with anything else.

I will gladly yield now to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] if he has any questions.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; I yield. I am a little timorous about the Senator's interruptions, however. We are always very good friends except when he interrupts me, and then, somehow, our relations always become, just for a little while, I am sorry to say, somewhat strained.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; we are going to smile like brothers.

Mr. BRUCE. Does the Senator recollect the man referred to in the Bible who smote another in the side, and said, "Is it well with thee, my brother?"

Mr. CARAWAY. The thing I wanted to ask the Senator was this: He was saying so much about a fair investigation for the Attorney General, and that nobody ought to be judged without a hearing. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] sits just back of him; and the Senator from Maryland said, as I understood, that the Senator from Montana had not sufficient fairness or lack of prejudice to give Daugherty a fair trial. Is not that the inference that goes with the Senator's statement?

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, not at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did not the Senator say that he was so highly prejudiced that he would not be a fair judge?

Mr. BRUCE. Well, I knew that all this brotherliness was going to end something like this before it terminated. No; all I have to say is that if I had a strong prejudice against a man, if I knew that my mind and heart were set against him, and that he was about to be the subject of an investigation affecting his personal integrity or his public honor, I should not want to be one of his judges.

Referring to the bill introduced recently by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] forbidding any member of a Federal commission to sit in a case in which he has a personal interest of any kind, I will say that only a few days ago a member of such a commission approached me and asked me to take the floor and insist that he should have the privilege of assisting in the decision of a matter in which his wife had an interest. I replied, "Not so! I will not do it. I can not understand how you could ask me to do such a thing. You have a personal interest in the subject matter of the controversy, and you should not be a judge in your own case."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRUCE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator was good enough to yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BRUCE. Why, of course; I have never declined to yield, but sometimes I am not asked to yield but to surrender.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I merely desire to ask this question: The Senator made some remark concerning my colleague to the effect that he could well understand what element he represented in this matter. That was in the nature of an imputation, and he declined to answer my colleague in regard to it; but I feel constrained to ask the Senator from Maryland what he meant by that reference.

Mr. BRUCE. I said he was affiliated with one of the elements of our American population that is very hostile to Mr. Daugherty. Of course, I meant the labor element.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRUCE. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's objection seems to be that the author of the resolution is going on the committee.

Mr. BRUCE. No; that is past.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that is past.

Mr. BRUCE. So far as his suggestion is concerned that he should go on it.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the Senator familiar with the fact that without a single exception, I will say—it has been said here that there were some exceptions—without a single exception, the author of a resolution authorizing an investigation has always gone on the special committee, except when the author requested that he should not go on it?

Mr. BRUCE. I do not know how far that is true. I think it would be necessary to rummage the precedents a good deal to find how far it is; but the case presented where a Presiding Officer has considered a matter coolly and thinks there is no objection under the special circumstances to the mover of a resolution, even though he be biased, being one of the committee created by the resolution, and the case presented where the particular individual suggests himself, notwithstanding his intense personal or factional animus in the matter, as a member of the committee, are two very different cases. It seems to me that they differ toto cœlo.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that the Senator from Montana was following the usual custom? And if he had not placed his name in the resolution, since we were going to vote on the members, it would have been the exception.

It has been stated, and the Senator perhaps has the impression, that in the case of the Watson investigation, so called, Senator Watson did not go on the committee. The facts about that matter, I may say to the Senator, are that Senator Watson did not offer a resolution in the Senate asking for an investigation. Senator Watson made a speech here, bringing to the attention of the Senate certain facts that were alleged to exist in the Army, I believe. Thereupon the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] moved that those charges be investigated, and thereupon the Chair named a committee to investigate those charges. That is quite different from the custom that prevails generally, that where a Senator offers a resolution for an investigation he is appointed a member of the investigating committee.

Mr. BRUCE. I know nothing about the Watson case.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why I cited the Watson case was that it has been cited as showing that it was not usual for one who brought about an investigation to go on the committee. The fact is, however, that in every other case where an investigation has been sought by a resolution the author of the resolution has gone on it.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; but did the Senator ever know the mover of a resolution to suggest his own name as a member of the committee of investigation in a case where bitter, malignant, partisan feelings were involved, and he had taken an active part in the controversy?

Mr. HARRISON. I am just saying to the Senator that I know of no exception to the rule I have stated. I know of no case where the author of a resolution did not go on the committee, and he is one who should go on the committee.

Mr. BRUCE. I have no disposition to reflect on the Senator from Montana. I said I thought that he had shown bad judgment, and this I still think.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, yes. I will yield altogether if the Senator will allow me just a word further.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator was representing the railroad companies before he came to the Senate, was he not?

Mr. BRUCE. Never! I never had a railroad company as a client in my life. I never tried a case for a railroad company. I have often tried cases against them, and for 18 years of my life, down to the time that I was elected to the United States Senate, I was engaged night and day in the regulation of railroads, holding them up to the full measure of their duty. I am glad to say that when the time of my election to the Senate came the great mass of the people of Maryland, including the citizens with their great business enterprises, gave me one of the handsomest majorities that any candidate in the State of Maryland had ever received in the history of the State. The Senator has been on the wrong track pretty often, but he never so distinctly got on it as he did that time.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland further yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRUCE. I do.

Mr. WHEELER. Did not the railroad companies in the State of Maryland support the Senator in the last election?

Mr. BRUCE. Not that I know of.

Mr. WHEELER. They contributed nothing toward his campaign?

Mr. BRUCE. No, sir; not one cent. Any railroad that contributed one cent to my campaign would have subjected itself, under the laws of Maryland, to criminal indictment. No corporation in the State of Maryland is allowed by law to subscribe one cent to the candidacy of anyone.

Some years ago, when I was a candidate, a gentleman connected with a public-utility corporation sent me a contribution. He did not know the law. He was closely connected with me and was interested in my candidacy entirely from a personal and party standpoint. I sent the check back to him. If I have ever received any illegal contribution in the whole course of my political life from any corporation or any individual, I do not know when it was.

I knew, of course, that some attempt would be made at some time or other, because of the views that I hold about what is due to the great business enterprises of the United States, to attack me; but it will be found, when I am attacked on that score, that it is not the heel of Achilles that is being assailed but the invulnerable parts of his body. I am a friend of the great business enterprises of the United States because I am a friend of the people of the United States.

We hear a great deal in this body—and much that is well to listen to—about dishonest rich men who prostitute their opportunities for promoting the public welfare to their own corrupt purposes. I can truly say that we have no such rich men in the State of Maryland. If there is any rich man in that State who is regarded as an oppressor or a public malefactor, I do not know him personally or by hearsay.

We have great business concerns in Maryland, among others the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, but we do not experience the difficulties which other portions of the United States seem to experience in keeping in check any lawless aims that they may have. They are all successfully regulated by public authority. From one end of our State to the other we are at peace with our large business interests. The more rich men that are sent to us from the West, provided they are not of the Doheny or the Sinclair order, the better pleased we shall be. The more great business enterprises that are established within the limits of Maryland the more grateful we shall be.

My own idea is that in the course of time the people of the West, too, will find some better modus vivendi with their great business interests and such rapacious captains of industry as are inclined to go beyond bounds than they have yet been able, apparently, to find. But they will never do it by shifting the railroads of the country from the basis of individual to the basis of Government ownership.

But I, too, am wandering far afield. All I have to say, in conclusion, is what I said in the beginning: Go ahead and investigate the public conduct of Mr. Daugherty, but do it through the agency of an open-minded, fair-minded committee; indeed, the very best committee for the purpose that the Senate can possibly elect.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, ordinarily I would pay no further attention to what the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has said, having gone over the matter completely yesterday afternoon; and if it was only because of any possible effect his views might have upon Senators present, I would have nothing to say at all at this time. But he is a Senator of the United States, and his expressions go out to the country and are not confined within the walls of the Senate. I want to review for just a moment the circumstances leading up to the visit of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and myself to Mr. Fall.

In the latter part of November evidence was produced before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys showing that shortly before December, 1921, Mr. Fall was in straitened circumstances financially; that in December he bought a ranch for $91,500; that he afterwards expended considerable sums in improvements upon the ranch. May I ask the Senator from Montana to remain in the Chamber just a moment? The evidence showed that in the payment of this $91,500, $10,000 was paid in currency. Up to the time of our call upon Mr. Fall that was the only evidence there was indicating any corrupt conduct upon the part of anybody connected with the matter under investigation.

Those were suspicious circumstances, which called for explanation; and, as I said yesterday, just as soon as that evidence came out I suggested to the then chairman of the committee that he wire Mr. Fall and ask him to come before the committee and explain the transaction. He did wire him. Mr. Fall wired back that his son-in-law could explain it, and I stated to the chairman that I felt very strongly that Mr. Fall should come personally and testify before the committee. He finally did come, and nothing else had occurred with reference to any evidence of fraud.

The Senator from Alabama says that Mr. Fall was under indictment at that time.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator misunderstood me. I meant under this indictment.

Mr. LENROOT. Under what indictment?

Mr. HEFLIN. Under the charge of having done wrong in the transfer of this property.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Alabama clearly did not wish the Senate and the occupants of the galleries and the country to understand that that was the indictment he referred to. He clearly meant it to be inferred that at that time he was under indictment by public opinion for corrupt conduct, not merely in betraying his trust in transferring the naval reserves.

Mr. President, under those circumstances, upon Mr. Fall's coming here, and two or three days before he made his statement to the committee, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and I called upon him under the circumstances narrated yesterday, and we urged him to come before the committee and disclose fully the source from which he obtained the money to purchase the ranch and make these improvements.

In view of what the Senator from Alabama has said I want to ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] if he will not be good enough to say to the Senate whether or not in his opinion there was any impropriety in the call upon Mr. Fall for the purpose indicated?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I see no impropriety in it.

Mr. LENROOT. I was sure the Senator would say that. Now, Mr. President, one other matter. The Senator from Alabama undertook this morning to berate the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys for not having put Mr. McLean upon the stand and had him testify. I undertook to state to the Senator from Alabama the reasons why Mr. McLean had not been examined. I stated to him that Mr. McLean was here under subpœna, and had been here all of the week. Nevertheless, he continued his attack, until the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] rose in his place and said he took full responsibility for the failure to have Mr. McLean examined up to this time, and gave the same reasons I had given.

Mr. President, I am not going to take any further time upon what the Senator from Alabama said, in view of the two circumstances I have just mentioned.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought the Senator was through. I will wait and get the floor in my own right.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, one other matter. Reference has been made to a private wire installed by Mr. McLean. The committee has not concluded its investigation with reference to that matter.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The answer I made to the Senator a few moments ago might be open to misinterpretation, and, with his permission, I should like to say something about it.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The bare fact, as stated by the Senator, of his going to see Secretary Fall with his colleague, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] carried to my mind no impropriety whatever. Neither of the Senators named, the Senator from Wisconsin nor the Senator from Utah, indulged the suspicion about this whole transaction with which I was impressed from the very beginning.

Let me review for a moment. At the time these transactions took place, in the spring of 1922, the secrecy which characterized them, the strange transfer of these reserves from the Navy Department to the Department of the Interior notwithstanding the struggle that had gone on theretofore; the efforts of the Senators interested in the matter at the time to get information about the execution of the leases and their being put off upon one excuse or another, gave to the circumstance, in my mind, from its inception, a rather sinister character.

I interrogated Mr. Fall at length, he being the first witness when we began the investigation; and the answers he made, the reasons he assigned for his acts, the futile justification he attempted, from the standpoint of the law, for his action—what seemed to me the perfectly outrageous usurpation of power in connection with the matter—all these things had left a deep impression upon my mind.

Mr. Fall went to El Paso. He was there when the witnesses from New Mexico told their story about the sudden rise in affluence of Mr. Fall and his expenditure of approximately $200,000, as it was traced to him, when he had not had money enough to pay his taxes for 10 years. Of course, that testimony was startling in its character, and the Senator from Wisconsin rightly recites that forthwith, in what seemed to me something like consternation, because both he and the Senator from Utah had up to that time exhibited the most implicit confidence in Mr. Fall, he said that this information should be given to Senator Fall at once, and he should be invited to come before the committee. I said in that connection that in my judgment he should be apprised at once of the information, but that he should be left to judge for himself whether he should come or not.

Thereupon we understand that he sent a wire to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that his son-in-law, who was entirely familiar with his affairs, would come on to testify. That was a circumstance which must have impressed the Senator from Wisconsin, as it did me, with added suspicions concerning the circumstance. Why should not Senator Fall himself come on to explain the matter? His son-in-law did not come on, pursuant to his telegram, but we heard from Senator Fall himself that he was somewhere en route but was ill and unable to come on.

It was intimated at one time that he was in the city of Chicago; at another time that he was in the city of New York. The newspaper men, aroused to the importance of the thing at that time, endeavored to locate him somewhere in the city of Chicago or in the city of New York, and were utterly unable to do so. It transpired that he came to Chicago and went from Chicago to New York, the committee being apprised in the meanwhile that he was too ill to come on. He went from New York to Atlantic City, and from Atlantic City came to the city of Washington, and was in the city of Washington some days theretofore and had not yet appeared before the committee.

We resumed on the 28th of November, if my recollection is correct, and commenced the examination of these witnesses from New Mexico at once, and it consumed only two or three days. Of course, any honest man who was able to make any kind of a satisfactory explanation of the damaging testimony given by the witnesses from New Mexico early in the month of December would have hastened to the city of Washington, even though he were approaching death, to go on the stand and tell the story, and thus dissipate the unfavorable inferences which must necessarily have been drawn from the testimony. But he did not, and he was here in the city of Washington and had been here for several days.

It was under those circumstances that the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Wisconsin, as the information has now come to me, visited Senator Fall. I can not see any impropriety in that visit at all.

Mr. LENROOT. May I correct just one statement? He might have been here several days, but I did not know it. The first information I had that he was here was the day we visited him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I had no information as to the date when the Senators visited him at Wardman Park, but I had the information that he was in the city some days prior to the time that he sent the letter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is right. Information came from his sick room that Mr. Fall could not appear on the day that we expected him to appear and testify, and he asked for a few days' delay. It was immediately after that request to the committee that the Senator from Wisconsin and I went up to Wardman Park and called upon ex-Senator Fall. It was about between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I say that I can not doubt for a moment that the suspicions of the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Utah must have been aroused concerning this matter before they visited ex-Senator Fall, although I know that mine antedated theirs by a considerable period of time. That is a plain statement of the thing, and I again say that I can see no impropriety in those two gentlemen, political friends and former associates of ex-Senator Fall, going to find out what was the truth about the matter. Of course it would have been a happier circumstance, I say frankly, if the Senators had promptly come before the committee and told us that they had visited ex-Secretary Fall and what he had told them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that when ex-Senator Fall sent that letter to the committee I believed it as much as I ever believed anything that ever came to my notice. I thought every word in it was true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I accept the statement of the Senator, and I have no doubt it is correct, but he could not have accepted it if he had not been very decidedly friendly to the cause of ex-Senator Fall, because no one can take that letter and look at it and read it and imagine that it was a frank statement of the affairs.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that when the letter was read to the committee I felt that it was a full explanation of the matter, and I believed every word of it to be true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me add that if the Senator had conversed with people about the town who know anything about Ned McLean, I undertake to say that nine out of ten men would have been able to tell him it could not possibly be true.

Mr. SMOOT. I knew nothing about McLean nor his financial condition, nor did I have a single solitary word of conversation with anyone about Mr. McLean nor the financial condition of Mr. McLean just stated by the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have only one more thing to say. If there was anything discreditable in urging Senator Fall to come before the committee and disclose fully to the committee the source of this money, then I am guilty of an impropriety, but otherwise not. I thought a public service was being rendered in doing what was done.

Reference has been made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to a private wire installed by Mr. McLean.

The committee has not yet completed its investigation of that subject. It does expect to examine all of the parties who sent telegrams, among them those who sent telegrams respecting or having reference to the White House. But I understood the Senator from Alabama to say that there was this private wire installed in the White House. I do not so understand it. I do not understand there is any private wire from Mr. McLean to the White House. Members of the committee will correct me if I am wrong in that statement.

Mr. HEFLIN. What are the facts about it?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know. We will find out before we get through, I hope, as to the facts, but there is no private wire into the White House as I understand the telegrams. Does the Senator from Washington so understand it?

Mr. DILL. I understand there is no private wire in the White House, but that the telegraph operator at the White House is the man who operated a private wire of Mr. McLean.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, we will find out fully about that before we get through.

Mr. DILL. That is what the telegrams indicate, that he was the wire man who handled the private wire of Mr. McLean, but not that the private wire goes into the White House.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know whether the telegrams indicate whether the man who had been the operator at the White House was hired to become the operator on the private wire and severed his connection with the White House or whether he continued at the White House. I do not know, and that, of course, will be fully disclosed before we conclude.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a word with reference to the pending resolution, as I probably will not have another opportunity. Having had some experience on investigating committees in the other House and in this body, I do not fully share the opinion of some that all of the members of the committee must be impartial and have no opinion, because if that were true an investigation would never get anywhere. There must be some one on every investigating committee, if it is to make any progress, if it is to bring out all the facts, who must assume the rôle of prosecutor upon the committee, and it is not to the discredit of any man that he does. Presumably any Senator, though he does assume the rôle of prosecutor, will be guided in his ultimate decision by the facts that are disclosed before the committee. So far as I am concerned I do not see any impropriety in the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] being a member of the committee. I would be glad to see the Senator from Montana made a member of the committee, entertaining the views that he does. I would like to see the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] also a member of the committee to insure that there was fairness to Mr. Daugherty, the accused in this particular case. I would like to see the other three Senators in whom the Senate would have confidence as to their impartiality in coming to a conclusion. But if we are to have five Senators who have no opinion and who have no interest, the committee is not going to get very far in the investigation.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not know whether the Senator was referring to what I said——

Mr. LENROOT. No; I was speaking generally.

Mr. BRUCE. I think every political element in the Senate should be represented on the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to assure the Senator that I was not aiming at all at what he said. I was speaking in general terms, and what I said with reference to this I would say with reference to any investigating committee.

Mr. BRUCE. I agree with the Senator absolutely in everything he has said.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, after all, the benefits of an investigation such as the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys is now making are not in the final decision that the committee will make and the recommendations it may make to the Senate with respect to the particular matters. The benefits that come from such an investigation are the publicity, the evidence that is produced, the facts that are disclosed. Again referring to the oil investigation, every Senator upon every matter that we have had brought out has had his opinion formed without respect, in my judgment, to the conclusions of the committee as a committee. So in the matter of the investigation of the Attorney General, Senators will form their final opinion, in so far as they shall have any duty to perform in the premises, from the evidence that comes out before the committee.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I was called temporarily from the Chamber, but I am advised that the Senator made the suggestion that he thought it would be perfectly proper or agreeable to him if I were a member of the committee. I hope the Senator will permit me to say that I utterly dissent from that view. I do not think that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] should be on the committee for reasons I have stated, not at all personal, and because I have taken an active interest in the matter I do not think that I ought to be on the committee. Indeed, with great respect, if such a thing were considered I should be compelled to resign from the committee, because I do not think the committee ought to be made up in that fashion. I do not think my colleague should be on the committee, because the Attorney General comes from the State which we represent. I wanted that statement to be in the RECORD. I utterly dissent from that portion of the Senator's view.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator perhaps did not hear my statement. I prefaced what I said by the statement that I believed that no investigating committee would get very far in the investigation unless it employed counsel, if the committee were selected solely with reference to the impartiality of the members of the committee. Someone must always assume the rôle of prosecutor if the facts are to be developed and the truth disclosed. I said in that connection, having that in my mind, that I saw no objection to the Senator from Montana being a member of the committee, notwithstanding the views he expressed, and to insure fairness upon the other side I said I would be glad to see the Senator from Ohio also made a member of the committee.

Mr. President, I have just one other thing to say. It is quite evident that the next campaign is going to be very largely a washing of dirty linen. Inasmuch as that is going to be done to a very large extent, I personally would like to see all of the dirty linen of both political parties washed while we are about it. It is rather painful perhaps for the time being to both of the political parties if that be done, but in the long run I believe that good will come out of it all. I personally would like to see a general committee here with authority broad enough to investigate every officer of the Government, to investigate every violator of law having to do with the departments of the Government.

Washington especially is now full of stories and rumors insinuating corrupt conduct upon the part of nearly everybody. I should like to have a committee of the Senate sitting here for the remainder of the session so that when there be these whispers, these slanders, the men uttering them may be called before such a committee and asked if they have any facts in their possession reflecting upon the integrity of any public official or ex-public official. If they should not have, such a course would have a very salutary purpose in stopping the circulation of such charges.

We all know how such stories were circulated through the last administration and are being circulated through this one. We all have reasons to believe at the same time that there is foundation for some of the stories which have been floating about.

The evidence which has been taken in the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys has fully disclosed that, but it may not be limited to matters of which that committee has exclusive jurisdiction. I believe the public mind to-day is in such a temper that it demands that every corrupt official should be discovered and punished; and that is altogether praiseworthy upon the part of public opinion; but I am also afraid, Mr. President, that there is something of a tendency upon the part of the public to hope that public officials will be found to be corrupt rather than otherwise. I think it would clear the air if we had a committee with general jurisdiction which could examine into every question. Perhaps, if such a committee were constituted, we should find some very prominent men in this country who had been violating section 190 of the statutes of the United States, which prohibits ex-officials from practicing before departments of the Government in the prosecution of claims within two years after they retire from public office.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator refer to the statute in regard to practicing before departments?

Mr. LENROOT. I do. I refer to the statute in regard to practicing before departments, and if there be violations of law in that respect upon the part of ex-public officials, it is just as important that the public know of it as that it should know if there be dereliction upon the part of some one who is himself in office. If we had such a general committee as I have suggested, instead of names being bandied about every day, as they are in this Capitol and elsewhere in reference to ex-officials of the last Democratic administration, as well as Republican officials who are no longer in office, persons could be called before the committee and the truth ascertained. I believe it would be a good thing, so long as we have started this business, to have a general house cleaning; and in the long run, Mr. President, I believe as a result we should have higher standards of public conduct and public service.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I rather hesitate to say anything further at this time, in view of the fact that we not only have the heel of Achilles but the body of Hercules in the Senate. However, since some opposition has developed in reference to my being upon the proposed committee; since it has been charged that I should not be on the committee because of the fact that I have been elected by, as is asserted, and am partial to, an element which is known as the labor element in this country, I am anxious to say just a word with reference to the matter.

I feel that what the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] has said has cast a reflection not only upon myself but upon the people of my State. The population of Montana is overwhelmingly made up of farmers. The labor element in the State composes a very small minority. The State of Montana is also overwhelmingly Republican; but notwithstanding that fact, I carried practically every county in the State by a substantial majority, and even though it were true that I had been elected solely by the laboring people of Montana, I still should be mighty proud of the fact that I had the confidence of the laboring people of my State and of this country.

If it is to be established as a precedent that because a Senator is friendly to labor he is to be kept off a committee, I am sure that many Senators now serving would never be reelected if they went to the country on that issue. The great trouble in the past has been that men have gone to the country and told the people that they were the friends of labor and then when they were elected to this body they have betrayed the people who elected them.

I was not elected as a Republican; I was not elected as a reactionary; but I was elected by the people of Montana because they believed, and they thought that I believed, in the principles of Thomas Jefferson; and I propose to carry out those principles. I was not elected on the Democratic ticket, on the ticket of the party of Thomas Jefferson, and then expected by my people to come down here and repudiate everything for which my party stood. If I were elected upon the Democratic ticket; if I were elected by the party of Jefferson; if I were elected by the laboring people, and boasted of the fact that I had been elected by the laboring people, I should certainly feel that I should carry out the mandates of the people who elected me, and I would not, when I came here, repudiate every principle for which the people who elected me stood nor neglect the measures for which they expected me to vote.

Now, with reference to the proposed investigating committee, let me call to the attention of this body these facts: When first I introduced the resolution in the Senate stating that it was the sense of this body that Mr. Daugherty should resign, I based that purely upon what the testimony before the Public Lands Committee showed Mr. Daugherty had done or what he had failed to do with reference to this oil investigation; namely, that, notwithstanding the fact that millions of dollars had been appropriated by the United States for a large detective force and that we had at the head of that organization Mr. Burns, whose reputation and ability is undisputed—notwithstanding those facts, not one scintilla of evidence has been offered to the committee by the Department of Justice or by the Burns Detective Agency.

Further, I thought that his resignation should be demanded because of his failure to prosecute these men after the facts were known to him. I further asked that he should resign and that it should be the sense of this body that he should resign because I felt that he had not done his duty in connection with the prosecution of those implicated in the frauds in the Veterans' Bureau. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], who is chairman of the committee which investigated the Veterans' Bureau, can not and could not help come to the same conclusion, that, although the facts were known to the Attorney General, no prosecutions had been instituted and no arrests had been made.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WHEELER. I gladly yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. As soon as our evidence was completed we submitted it to the Attorney General and requested him to detail Mr. Crim, whom we regarded as the most vigorous prosecutor in his department, to that work. Mr. Crim had resigned, and his resignation had been accepted, but the Attorney General immediately sent for him and invited him to act as a special assistant to the Attorney General to take charge of those cases. The Attorney General offered to give Mr. Crim any help for which he might ask; and at our suggestion he likewise extended to General O'Ryan and to Major Arnold, who had been assisting our committee, invitations to enter the case as special assistants. Our committee formed the impression then that the Attorney General was doing everything in his power to prosecute those whom he had found to be guilty of fraud. I think I owe that statement to the Attorney General.

Mr. WHEELER. I am very glad to hear the Senator make it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Montana yield to his colleague?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania if he thinks that his committee had better facilities for ascertaining and exposing the facts than the Attorney General had with his powerful bureau of investigation?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know, Mr. President, that I am able to compare the two, but we were very fortunate in having the volunteered assistance of hundreds of lawyers all over the country to help us in our investigation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The facts unearthed by the committee of which the Senator was the chairman, of course, were not known to the public in all the detail in which they were revealed, but as soon as the Senator took the matter up he heard the rumors that were current about it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is true, Mr. President; we heard many rumors, and some of them—most of them, in fact—were not true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. So that these rumors must, of course, have reached the Attorney General as well as the committee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I presume that the true ones and the untrue ones alike reached the Attorney General.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And is the Senator from Pennsylvania able to advise us what steps the Attorney General and the Department of Justice took to unearth the facts and to bring the perpetrators of these crimes to justice before the facts were unearthed by his committee?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. So far as I am aware, Mr. President, the Attorney General took no steps; but I do not think the Attorney General's department would be of much use to the United States if he turned it loose on every rumor that happened to reach his ears.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Quite true; and although the committee of which I am a member were not at all equipped for the development of these facts, we went at it and got them; but, so far as I have been able to discover, neither the Attorney General nor his Bureau of Investigation ever turned a hand, either before or after we exposed the facts.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator is wrong in one respect, because here is his secretary notifying Mr. McLean that he had better look out, that they were coming after him.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If the Senator from Montana will yield to me for one sentence more, the Veterans' Bureau frauds have been the subject of inquiry by a grand jury in Chicago for nearly a month past; and I understand that that grand jury has almost completed its labors, and that action may be expected.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand that, but will the Senator answer one question for me? The Senator states that the Attorney General's office could not be turned into following down these rumors; but how about the Burns Detective Agency, which is a part of the Department of Justice? Was any evidence furnished to the Senator's committee by this great department which the Government of the United States pays for the purpose of investigating crime?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; in one case we asked them for an investigation to be made in a hurry, and they did make it in a hurry, and they gave us a prompt report.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but had they, prior to that time, furnished the Senator's committee voluntarily with any evidence?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; they had not.

Mr. WHEELER. So I say to the Senate that when I introduced this resolution it was because I thought that, upon the face of the record, the Department of Justice was not functioning properly. Then it was that the Attorney General came in and asked for an investigation; and I was very glad, under those circumstances, to give him an investigation and let him come before a committee and explain the things which I had charged him with failing to do in the resolution which I first introduced. Consequently, I introduced the subsequent resolution asking for an investigation of the entire department.

Since the first resolution was introduced I have received from various parts of the country, almost from one end of it to the other, communications from people who have written me charging the Attorney General and the Department of Justice with various things. Therefore I felt that a general investigation should be conducted, and that these men should have an opportunity to come before the committee, and that the Attorney General himself should be called before the committee and questioned by the committee as to whether or not the things with which he has been charged were committed.

I do not know the Attorney General. I never have met him. I never have seen him, except in the Senate Chamber the other day. I have no interest in the matter excepting that I should like to see clean government in the various departments. I appreciate the fact that when any man gets up here in the United States Senate and tries to clean up a rotten situation he may expect to be abused and bullyragged, so to speak, by those who want to protect crimes and criminals.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in response to Senate Resolution 147, relative to leases of naval oil lands, which appears under its appropriate heading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HEFLIN. I was on my feet and trying to get recognition when the Chair laid before the Senate a communication that could have been postponed until after the discussion was completed, and I insist that I be recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was on my feet at the same time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will have to suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator does not yield for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. There is another reason why I was entitled to recognition. I think the Senator from Alabama and I addressed the Chair at the same time; but the Senator from Alabama has spoken once at considerable length on the question now pending, and I have not had an opportunity to speak at all.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will speak at length again in a moment.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the Senator speaking for the balance of the week. I am not complaining about that at all; but I do insist that I was addressing the Chair at the same time that the Senator from Alabama was, and I submit in all fairness that when two Senators address the Chair simultaneously when a question is pending before the Senate, and one of those Senators has already spoken once on the question and the other has not spoken, it is the duty of the Chair, if he wants to be fair, to recognize the Senator who has not before spoken on the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair performed his duty.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Chair did.

Mr. President, the question before the Senate is whether this committee shall be appointed by the Presiding Officer or elected by the Senate. I want to consider first some of the history of the Senate and also of the House of Representatives.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in opening the debate gave some very interesting history about the Senate and the procedure of the Senate on this point during the century that has passed. He spoke of the precedents and the way the Senate had developed from the beginning up to its present state of practice.

I was impressed with what the Senator said. Everything else being equal, I should feel disposed to follow the Senator. Everything else being equal, I should feel disposed to vote for this motion. But, Mr. President, there are some of the precedents of the Senate that it seems to me the Senate will do quite well in overruling. There are some of the customs of the Senate, honored as they may be by the observance of a century of history, that we could well at least temporarily overlook.

I see in front of me the desk of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I am reminded of one of the ancient landmarks of the Senate, necessary years ago, before some ingenious Yankee had discovered blotting paper, but entirely out of date now, though still adhered to by the Senate. Upon every Senator's desk is a little sort of an inkwell, a sort of a pepperbox, filled with black sand. There was a time when that was of some value and use to a Senator. Before we had typewriters and typists, when Senators sat at their desks and wrote in longhand the letters which they sent to their constituents, they used this sand to put on the letters and blot the ink. We have not done it for years, but still we retain the old custom, and there is a bottle of sand on every Senator's desk. There is no other thing that would induce us to have sand on a Senator's desk except custom, because no one can claim that a United States Senator does not have all the sand he needs.

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Surely the Senator does not mean to imply that Senators are lacking in sand or grit?

Mr. NORRIS. They certainly are not lacking in sand, because everyone has an individual bottle of it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Now I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I was simply going to say that having entered upon this path of reform, and having started to remove the old things, I hope the Senator is not going to remove the snuff-boxes.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not going to remove anything.

Mr. LODGE. We have two snuffboxes here that nobody ever uses.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts, who now honors me with his attention, has himself violated one of the ancient rules of the Senate while he is asking us to enforce another one equally as ancient. Look upon the Senator's desk. He has taken this sand bottle of ancient days and of ancient usage and now, at this moment, is using it as a paper weight. That is very sensible, but it is a violation of the ancient custom which has come down from the days of Clay and Webster; and so the Senator is violating this rule.

We have at each side of the Senate Chamber a little black box filled with snuff. There is one on the Republican side, and whatever the Republicans have the Democrats have to have, so there is another one over there. The Senate could not exist without those snuff boxes. They are as ancient as the hills, as rockribbed as the mountains, but we must have them. We must maintain the old dignity, and the old forms, and the ancient customs, even though they are of no use now.

It would not hurt us, Mr. President, if, following the leadership of the distinguished Senator who is now violating one of our ancient rules, we took one further step and elected this committee instead of having it appointed by the Chair. We have some wonderfully good precedents on it. This investigation is not so very dissimilar to an investigation which took place a good many years ago known as the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation. Many Senators are here still who were here when that investigation took place. The country has been talking about it somewhat lately, but it has forgotten entirely how that happened to be a real investigation instead of a whitewashing expedition.

As a matter of fact, if you will look up the history of the matter you will find that when Mr. Ballinger was Secretary of the Interior, and Gifford Pinchot was the forester, and a man by the name of Glavis held another important position in the department, a great controversy came on; and the charge was made throughout the country, in the newspapers and in magazine articles, that the Secretary of the Interior was not properly preserving the coal of the United States, and that he was about to turn over up in Alaska a whole lot of coal fields to speculators and deprive the people of the United States, who owned them, of their rights. It became so clamorous that Mr. Ballinger himself demanded an investigation, as the Attorney General has done in this case. Now, it had been the custom, as outlined by the Senator from Massachusetts, for the Presiding Officer of the Senate to appoint committees, and for the Speaker of the House to appoint committees.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator of course knows that that is solely because the two Houses, particularly the Senate, have ordered that that be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The rule of the Senate requires the Senate to elect its committees, not only the standing committees but the special committees.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I understand that that is the rule of the Senate. It has been read here. The Senator himself read it.

Mr. ROBINSON. And we, in effect, suspend the rules whenever we do otherwise.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; we do that every time, but that has been our custom, as the Senator from Massachusetts says. We have been suspending the rules all this time.

Now, let me go on with the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation. The resolution of investigation was prepared, it was quite generally believed at the time, in the office of Mr. Ballinger himself. It was a concurrent resolution which proposed to authorize the appointment of a joint committee, half Senators and half Members of the House, to investigate the controversy. It was intended, I have no doubt, to whitewash the entire transaction. The whitewash was all prepared, the brushes were purchased, and were placed in the hands of Members who were to go on that committee. The resolution provided that half of the committee should be appointed by the President of the Senate, and the other half should be appointed by the Speaker of the House. The resolution passed the Senate in that way. It came to the House. The day that resolution was taken up in the House the morning papers announced just what was going to be done. The morning papers announced that as soon as the House convened Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, would bring in a special rule authorizing the taking up of this resolution for the appointment of this committee of investigation; that thereupon it would be passed; and that after it was passed certain Members—naming them—would be appointed by the Speaker to complete the committee, half of which had been appointed by the Senate.

It was all fixed. The machinery was all oiled. Everything was in working order and nobody doubted but what it was going through. But unfortunately a Member of the House secured the floor and offered an amendment, which provided that the words "appointed by the Speaker" should be stricken out and that the words "elected by the House" should be inserted in their stead, and immediately consternation ruled. There were insurgents in the House then, radicals, as there are in the Senate now, and they united with the minority party and adopted that amendment. There we had the Speaker shorn of his power, and after two or three days' deliberation, and after conferences back and forth had taken place, not a single man who had practiced with his whitewash brush to go on that committee was put on the committee. It became a real, genuine investigating committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Was not that also during the time when the Speaker, under the rules of the House, appointed all the committees?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. In other words, a precedent was violated, a precedent was broken. A rule that had come down for years, and which the older Members usually looked upon as sacred and holy, had been set aside and a new rule substituted. A different committee was elected, and that investigation became a real investigation, as everybody knows. All the facts were brought out, and although no action was ever taken by the House or the Senate on the reports that came in from that investigating committee, the effect on the country was just the same as though the House and the Senate had acted.

It will be so in this case, Mr. President. When the committee that is to be appointed develops the evidence, it will have completed its duty. The verdict is going to be rendered by the people of the United States. We are not the jury. The jury are the patriotic people of the country, and they want to know whether the charges which are made against the Department of Justice are true or false; whether they are partly true and partly false; and if so, what is true and what is false. I do not care who compose the committee, if it will but uncover the evidence and go to the bottom. We must have a committee against which there can be no taint of suspicion. If I were the Presiding Officer of the Senate, I would pray that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts should be defeated and that this committee should be elected. I would be glad to be relieved of the responsibility.

There has been a good deal said on both sides as to the packing of this jury, as it has been called. As I said, it is not to be a jury; it is to be an investigating committee. It is not a court. It is different from a court, although it has some of a court's attributes. It is an investigating committee. A jury never investigates. A court never investigates. But this committee must investigate. It will not be worth much if it does not. We must have a committee that will investigate. I do not want to cast any reflection upon anyone, particularly not upon the President pro tempore of the Senate. As far as I am concerned, I would be perfectly willing to let him appoint the committee. I think he would appoint a good committee. But if that committee were appointed and made a report after an investigation, conceding they had done their duty properly, and found nothing, there would be a suspicion that something was wrong.

It has been developed here that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has talked with the Attorney General about the committee, and that in turn he has talked with the Presiding Officer. I do not think that would influence our Presiding Officer, but it at least would not put the committee that is to be appointed before the country in the light in which it ought to stand.

On the other hand, suppose we named the very committee who were originally named in the resolution. Can anyone say they would not do their duty? Does anyone believe for a moment that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], who was named as chairman of that committee, would not perform his duty? If it is said that he has an unfriendly attitude toward the Attorney General, what of it? If it is an investigating committee, it is going to bring out the evidence, and he would bring it out better even than if he were the friend of the Attorney General, would he not? After all, that is all this committee is going to do. I do not care what they say. I will form my opinion from my reading of the evidence, and so will other Senators, and so will everybody else in the country.

I do not see anything wrong with any member of the committee who was named originally, although that was a new venture in the selection of a committee. I would not want to have committees appointed in that way. But the very moment any question is raised about the fairness of this committee, if we want an investigation that will have the confidence of the country, that very moment it becomes necessary that we shall have it absolutely shorn of any suspicion from any source.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana ought to be on this committee, I do not care whether it is elected or whether it is appointed. His selection would follow out a long custom, which I think was a good one. If we were selecting a court I would not pick the Senator from Montana because of the charges he has made. Let us see what would happen if we appointed a committee and said to that committee, "Now, you are a jury. You must not do anything else than that which a jury would do." They would sit up behind the desk and say, "The committee will come to order. We are appointed to investigate the character of the Attorney General, or the management of the Department of Justice by Mr. Daugherty. We are ready to listen to evidence." They would be waiting as the Presiding Officer does when he asks whether there is any objection. The chairman of the committee would say, "The committee hears no evidence. We will adjourn. It is all over." Who would produce the evidence? Who would bring the witnesses? Who would call their attention to anything?

When you are selecting a juryman you do not select the man who made the complaint. We are not so careful about a judge, for a judge is not disqualified because he has read all about the case in the newspapers. A judge on the bench is not disqualified from trying a case unless he is related to one of the parties or has a financial interest in the result of the litigation pending before him. He may himself be an important witness and not be disqualified.

Perhaps it is a little uncommon, but it occurs occasionally that the presiding judge is sworn to testify before a jury in a case where he is presiding.

So we ought to disabuse our minds, it seems to me, of the fact that we are going to pick a jury out of the Senate to try Mr. Daugherty. We could not get such a jury here. I presume there is not a member of the Senate who would be qualified to sit, under his own testimony, if the rules of law were applied that are applied in the selection of a jury.

Let no one shed any crocodile tears because the Attorney General is not going to be properly defended. He has already notified us through the telegram the Senator from Ohio has put into the RECORD that he has employed ex-Senator Chamberlain and ex-Congressman Paul Howland, of Ohio, as his attorneys, and that they are here ready to go ahead. I happen to know both those men. We all know ex-Senator Chamberlain and recognize his ability. Paul Howland is one of the ablest lawyers in the State of Ohio, and both are very fine gentlemen. So let no one get the idea that Mr. Daugherty is going to come before this investigating committee without being properly represented.

There is only one theory on which the Senator from Montana should be excluded from this committee. If you want to select the committee and make a jury of it, then get some Members of the Senate who have not made up their minds on the matter, select the Senator from Montana as an attorney, give definite instructions to the committee that upon his demand they shall issue subpœnas, they shall give him power to compel the attendance of witnesses, they will send for papers and documents, whatever it may be that he may demand. Then place him on one side of the table and ex-Senator Chamberlain and ex-Congressman Howland on the other side and have a lawsuit out of it, if you want to.

But that is not what this resolution provides, and we must not get the idea that it does. Here are some Senators appointed to make an investigation. They must know something about the alleged facts, or they can not make it, or they must delve into the facts and find out what they are. The Senator from Montana is one Senator of all others who ought to be on that kind of an investigating committee.

It is said, Mr. President, that practically these same charges were made against Mr. Daugherty on an attempted impeachment proceeding in the House. I presume that is true.

But it is also claimed—and I say claimed because I confess I do not know; I was not there; I did not see the proceedings that went on, nor did I hear any of the evidence that was offered or contemplated—it is at least claimed by those who were interested in the impeachment proceedings that they had a committee which was unfair. I saw one of them yesterday, a gentleman who laid on my desk in my office a report of the grand jury in this District saying, in effect, that a lot of whisky had been taken by the Department of Justice in raids which had been made, and that while in the custody of the the Department of Justice officials of the Department of Justice had stolen it and taken it away. That was the substance of it. I do not know whether that is true or not. If that is true, it is a serious indictment of the Department of Justice. It is one of the things the committee will go into, I presume. I said to the man who was talking about the impeachment proceedings, "Why was not that offered? Why did you not bring it out?" He said, "They would not let us." I do not know whether he was telling the correct thing or whether it was a good explanation as to the reason why it was not brought out.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure from what I was told that they put in some days, or some time at least, determining whether they would subpœna me because I had made some statements about the Attorney General. I had some information and some papers that I tried to turn over to somebody, whoever would take them, and I never could get anybody who had authority to hear anything or receive any papers.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what they claimed to me; that it was an unfair proceeding. The Attorney General was there with his attorney. Mr. Howland was his attorney there. Appoint a committee that does not know anything about it and has no attorney to prosecute, and let the man who is being investigated come with a couple of bright attorneys, and the investigation will amount to nothing. An investigation never has and never can amount to anything under such circumstances.

Now, the charge is made that those who want to bring out the facts were precluded from doing so by unfair methods. The country has heard that, right or wrong. We ought to take a step here now to place ourselves in a position where that charge can not be made. Under some of the things that have happened here, in my humble judgment, if the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts prevails and the Presiding Officer of the Senate appoints the committee, it will create a suspicion that will at once go out, even though it is not well founded. Whatever the result may be, it will be unsatisfactory.

On the other hand, there can be no injustice to the Attorney General if the Senator from Montana is a member of the committee. Another Senator who was originally suggested for the committee is the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. Is there anyone who doubts that Senator's desire and his ability when he hears the evidence to do what is right? Those of us who have served with him on committees, those of us who have served with him in the Senate, know that while he is a strong partisan, as a matter of fact, when it comes to a question of evidence, when it comes to a question of right or wrong he will be found standing up courageously without regard to politics, friendship, or anything else, and he will have the courage to do what he thinks is right.

So I could go on with every member of the proposed committee. There may none of them be appointed, but I do not know where we could go in the Senate to get a committee which could do an injustice to the Attorney General, defended, as he will be, by these attorneys. It is the evidence that will come out, that ought to come out, that must not be covered up, and when it comes out the American people are going to be the members of the jury and are going to render the verdict. If the committee should be harsh, if the committee should show by its action that it was not fair to the Attorney General, it would be the American people who would render a judgment of condemnation of the committee. The committee will be trying this matter in the face of all the people of the country. If they will not cover up the evidence, if they will let it come out from both sides, if they will be lenient with the rules, I do not care what they may say; if they let the evidence come out and the American people hear it, that is where the judgment will be rendered. That is where it ought to be rendered, and there is where in the end it must be rendered.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I heard the Senator a moment ago say something about the Attorney General being represented by attorneys. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Nebraska that the committee would permit the Attorney General to be present in person or by counsel and defend himself?

Mr. NORRIS. Why, yes; both.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator thinks he ought to have both privileges?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not conceive of the committee saying to the Attorney General, "You can not be present. We will do this in secret. You can not have an attorney." Let him have a dozen attorneys if he wants to. I would condemn a committee, no matter who might compose it or what it might be, if it would not permit the Attorney General to be represented by an attorney if he wanted to be, and to be present in person if he wanted to be, and the people would condemn such action on the part of the committee. I can not conceive of a committee of the Senate depriving a man of that right.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator think, in harmony with the practice of the Senate, that it would be proper for the Attorney General to suggest to the committee the names of witnesses whom he might desire to have subpœnaed in his behalf?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I again agree with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I can not conceive of any committee refusing to subpœna a witness unless it became apparent that he was playing with the committee. They must be given that latitude. I do not think anybody wants to do anything else.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator permit me to violate another rule and submit a unanimous-consent request that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it shall take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator want to quit now?

Mr. CURTIS. I would be very glad to quit now.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be willing to yield the floor then.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will not agree to a unanimous consent until I make a short statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Nebraska referred to the investigation in the House last session. I thought he suggested that it was not a fair investigation. I watched that investigation very carefully. Will the Senator permit me to have inserted in the RECORD the names of the members of the committee that made the investigation?

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that, but I would rather the Senator would wait until I conclude, and he can then put the names in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the request?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Ohio wants to place in the RECORD the names of the House committee that held the investigation.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that had better wait until to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not charge that the committee was unfair. I said I did not know. I was not there. I did not read the evidence. But the charge was made that it was unfair.

Mr. FESS. I know that the charge was made.

Mr. NORRIS. It was made by some good men, because they made it to me. I called attention to the fact that yesterday a copy of a report of the grand jury on the Department of Justice in some whisky business that was investigated by the grand jury was laid before me. I asked the man then, "Why did you not present this before the House committee?" He said, "We wanted to do so, but did not have an opportunity. They would not let us do it."

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me, I think he will agree that the membership of the Judiciary Committee of the House represents as high intelligence and fairness as any group of men in that body or this. I simply wanted to insert in the RECORD the names of the Members in connection with the Senator's statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say just a word about that.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask for information how that committee was made up?

Mr. NORRIS. It was the regular standing Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Both parties were represented on it?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. LODGE. What was the report of the committee? How did the committee stand?

Mr. FESS. Twenty to one for acquittal.

Mr. NORRIS. Since this interruption has come, I am going on a little while. The names of the members of the Judiciary Committee of the House can be found by looking in the Congressional Directory. They are already in the RECORD. I have no objection to putting them in again. I want distinctly to say that I made no charge against the members of that committee or against any member of it. I am simply saying that the charge has been made, and to a greater or less extent it is already believed by a large number of people over the country, that it was not a fair trial. It was so alleged in the papers. I have read statements in the papers which, if they were true, it seemed to me, indicated that the committee was not doing the right thing, but I do not know whether those statements were true or not.

I am calling attention to the condition of the public mind on the matter. If we are going into the same thing we must avoid any possibility of suspicion on the part of the people of the country as to the personnel of our committee on investigation. That was the point I wanted to bring out.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] called upon the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to state whether he thought there was any impropriety in his visit and the visit of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to Mr. Fall in the Wardman Park apartment. The Senator from Montana stated in substance, I am sorry to say, that he saw nothing improper in it. That does not in any sense represent my view of the matter. The Senator from Montana, of course, has a right to his views and has the right to express them either here or elsewhere. But I do not think that the conduct in question was at all proper. I think it was very improper. I think that it was very reprehensible. I do not think that any two Democrats, if they were on a committee investigating a former Democratic Cabinet member, should go to his apartment and be closeted with him about a matter in which the whole country was interested and about the matter being investigated by the committee, where both Democrats and Republicans were appointed to represent the Senate and the people in the investigation.

I still hold to that view. It would not make any difference with my own personal conviction if every Senator in this body felt the other way about it. I dare say, however, that at least 80 Senators out of the 96 do not feel that way about it. If they do not, let them say so. I think I shall give Senators an opportunity in a few days, in a resolution touching that very thing, to express themselves upon the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. On that point I would like to suggest to the Senator that while I think the propriety or the impropriety of the Senators going down to call on Senator Fall under some circumstances might well be open to question, I would not condemn anybody, because it seems to me it is rather an open question whether that was the right thing to do or not. I would not condemn anybody because they did it. It does seem to me, I would like to say to the Senator—nobody has said it, and it seems to me it ought to go in the RECORD—that having gone to see Mr. Fall, as they did, it was their duty, the first thing upon the reassembling of the committee, to have told to the other members of the committee that they had done so and to have told them the result of their visit.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. We are in entire agreement on that. I said that this morning. I am glad the Senator from Nebraska feels the same way about it. I was sure that he would.

Mr. President, I am never going to give my consent, so long as I am a member of this body, for a thing like that to become a precedent. I can understand how Members associated with each other on committees feel a delicacy in not responding when some member of the committee is under criticism for some conduct, but this is not a matter where senatorial courtesy can obtain. This is a matter which affects the whole American people and the very life of this Nation itself.

If men in high place can squander the public domain which has been committed to their care and keeping and then, when brought to account, members of a committee, their own partisans, can call upon them and sit in secret conclave and discuss the matter and LEVER disclose it until other things that come out force a disclosure, the Government is being betrayed and assaulted from the inside, and the day is not far distant when we shall feel their deadly sting and assault more than now.

I desire to say now, and then I shall be through for this afternoon, for I may have some further observations to make on another phase of this matter in the morning. Now, in conclusion, speaking about the White House wire, I stated that there was some suggestion about a wire being in the White House or the telegraph operator in the White House being the operator of Ed McLean. I was not clear about that subject and said so, but since the Senator from Wisconsin called into question my statement upon it, and he heard my speech, I desire to remind him that Major, Mr. McLean's close friend, wired him on December 22:

> You should install private wire because of congressional situation. It will give you quick access to the White House.

Now, let the Senator from Wisconsin ponder that to-night and explain it to me in the morning if he can. McLean wired back:

> Am having wire installed. Please take up with Smithers at the White House.

I leave it to the two Senators, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Utah, to explain that to me in the morning.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I do not object; I am entirely in favor of the proposition; but I wish to give notice that I shall ask for a short executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent asked by the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it seems to me before we adjourn that brief reference should be made to some remarks of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. He made a statement which I believe is likely to mislead the public mind regarding some phases of the discussions which have been going on to-day. I asked the reporter to transcribe two or three sentences from the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin and the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which I desire to read to the Senate. The junior Senator from Wisconsin said:

> I think it would clear the air if we had a committee with general jurisdiction that could examine into every question. Perhaps if such a committee were constituted we should find some very prominent men in this country who had been violating section 190 of the Statutes of the United States, which prohibits ex-officials from practicing before departments of the Government in the prosecution of claims within two years after they retire from public office.
>
> Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator refer to the statute in regard to practicing before departments?
> Mr. LENROOT. I do. I refer to the statute in regard to practicing before departments; and if there be violations of law in that respect upon the part of ex-public officials it is just as important that the public know of it as that it should know if there be dereliction upon the part of some one who is himself in office.

Mr. President, I think there can be no doubt but what that statement of the junior Senator from Wisconsin is bound to leave an erroneous impression upon the minds of all those who may read his remarks. There can be but one inference from those remarks, and that is that an official of the Government within two years after his retirement from office is prohibited under the penalty of law from practicing before any of the departments of the Government. I simply wish to read the statute to which the Senator from Wisconsin referred, in order that the matter may be thoroughly understood. Section 190 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

> SEC. 190. It shall not be lawful for any person appointed after the 1st day of June, 1872, as an officer, clerk, or employee in any of the departments, to act as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States which was pending in either of said departments while he was such officer, clerk, or employee, nor in any manner, nor by any means, to aid in the prosecution of any such claim within two years next after he shall have ceased to be such officer, clerk, or employee.

The statute presents an entirely different situation from that which would be inferred from the reading of the remarks of the junior Senator from Wisconsin. The matter in litigation must have been a claim against the United States, and it must have been a claim pending while the individual was an officer of a department of the United States. There is no law making it a criminal offense to practice generally before the departments of the Government within two years after an officer shall have retired from office.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly aware of the statute. It is that statute to which I referred.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But the Senator's remarks certainly indicated that there was a statute prohibiting any ex-official from practicing before the departments regarding any matter.

Mr. LODGE. I knew of the statute and I knew of its limitations. That is why I asked the question of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But the public did not know its limitations. I do not attribute any ulterior motive to the Senator from Massachusetts, but the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts, as well as the remarks of the junior Senator from Wisconsin, undoubtedly would leave an erroneous impression in the mind of the casual reader who was not familiar with the statute.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if that was the statute to which he was referring? What else did I say?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Massachusetts asked:

> Does the Senator refer to the statute in regard to the practicing before departments?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; and the statute the Senator has read refers to that matter.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But there is not any law regarding general practice before the departments.

Mr. LODGE. There is a statute referring to practice before departments.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There is no general statute——

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon; the statute he has just read refers to practice before the departments.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There is a law prohibiting an official within two years after he retires from office from appearing as counsel and prosecuting a claim against the United States which was pending when he was in office.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely; from prosecuting a case before a department.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is entitled to his interpretation. I have read the statute.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question. In view of his interesting discussion, is it his opinion that the practice of Mr. McAdoo before the Treasury Department, as outlined in his statement in the newspaper this morning, is legal? What is his view as to that?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will say to the Senator that I did not read the statement in the newspaper this morning, but I have not any doubt that the junior Senator from Wisconsin had in mind something Mr. McAdoo had been doing, and it was for that reason that I rose, for the purpose of presenting the law bearing upon such practice. I do not think the Senator from Ohio will insist that Mr. McAdoo has violated the statute.

Mr. WILLIS. I was seeking the opinion of the Senator from New Mexico, and I wondered, passing by for the moment the question of legality, whether he approved of the policy of such action. It must be evident that Mr. McAdoo did practice before the Treasury Department according to the statement to which I have referred. Does the Senator from New Mexico approve of that practice?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I know absolutely nothing about the facts in the case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I pass no judgment upon the matter, for there has been no proof furnished; but it has been stated in the newspapers that Mr. McAdoo appeared before the Treasury Department in a case involving the abatement of taxes, which is a claim against the Government, in the employ of a corporation within less than two years after he had left office. That is the statement in the newspapers. I do not say that it is true, but it covers every one of the conditions to which the Senator from New Mexico has adverted.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I submit the Senator from Massachusetts has not covered the conditions. The Senator from Massachusetts has not made the statement or even suggested that it was a matter which was pending in the Treasury Department when Mr. McAdoo was Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LODGE. Where would a claim for back taxes appear except in the Treasury Department? Where would it arise?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There is no statement as to when the claim was pending, and there is no statement as to when it accrued.

Mr. LODGE. I only know what appears in the newspapers. Of course, the case was pending or there would have been no claim made.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I submit that the Senator from Massachusetts is assuming much which he can not state of his own knowledge.

Mr. LODGE. I am assuming nothing except what is stated in the newspapers. I do not say that the statement is true, for I do not know the facts further than as set forth in the newspaper.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he has ever seen in any newspaper a statement as to when that claim first arose?

Mr. LODGE. It was a claim for taxes for the previous year.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is assuming something. We do not know about that. Does the Senator know that it was a claim for taxes for the previous year?

Mr. LODGE. That is what I saw stated in the newspaper, but the Senator is evidently fully informed in regard to the matter.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I submit that on his own statement the Senator from Massachusetts does not bring the case within the statute, and the wrong impression is evidently in his mind as to what the statute means.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all; and I know what the statute means; I have read it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It was quite necessary that the public, in view of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, should have some further light on the subject, and that is why I rose, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has enlightened the subject very much.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 12 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, March 1, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 29, 1924.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, Thou art the eternal source of every joy and every blessing. Thy goodness crowns each succeeding day. We thank Thee that our times are in Thy hands; Thou art with us in every state. Let us look above created things and find peace of soul in our fondest hopes. On we go, blessed Lord, being carried on the stream of time. O stay the tempest, quiet the storm, soften the gale that drives us nearer, nearer home. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE—POST OFFICE COMMITTEE.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Post Office Committee and Subcommittee No. 1 of that committee, having charge of salaries, have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, but that is a very unusual way to put such a request. It is a subcommittee of the Post Office Committee, is it not?

Mr. GRIEST. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the committee has permission to sit, of course any subcommittee would have the same right. I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the Post Office Committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House, and that would give the same right to any subcommittee of the Post Office Committee.

Mr. GRIEST. Does the gentleman think that would give a subcommittee permission to sit during the sessions of the House?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Absolutely.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I accept the suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRIEST] asks unanimous consent that the Post Office Committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 4121. An act to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in House concurrent resolution of the following title:

House Concurrent Resolution 14.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to the Hon. Charles E. Hughes for the able and appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of Warren G. Harding, late President of the United States, in the Representatives' Hall before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests on the 27th day of February, 1924, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved further, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of Warren G. Harding be requested to communicate to Mr. Hughes the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

S. J. Res. 52. Joint resolution for the relief of the drought-stricken farm areas of New Mexico; to the Committee on Agriculture.

REVENUE ACT OF 1924.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6715) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6715) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as I remember, at the time the committee rose last evening there was an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] was pending.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I had been recognized last evening. I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out all of line 4, on page 208, and that part of the word "employees" in line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment, and the Clerk will report the amendment as sought to be modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: Page 208, strike out all of line 4 and that part of the word "employees" appearing in line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire recognition?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read as modified?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has just read it, but without objection, it will be again reported.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was the amendment as modified?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is not necessary to go into any extended discussion of this amendment. The bill as reported by the committee provided that the members of the board of tax appeals should have not to exceed $10 a day for subsistence and that the employees of the board should have not to exceed $7. I take it the committee has found, as a matter of fact, that $7 is sufficient for the subsistence of the employees of this board, and that being true, I also take it that $7 should be sufficient for the subsistence of a member of the board. For that reason I have offered the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir; gladly.

Mr. YOUNG. The gentleman will notice that the wording is "not to exceed" certain amounts.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

Mr. YOUNG. These boards will meet in big cities, in some small cities and in some big cities, and in any case they must give an itemized statement of their expenses and that statement will be subject to scrutiny and criticism. But in the big cities I do not suppose the gentleman would expect the members of this board of appeals to stop at the cheapest place in the city, and, as the gentleman knows, rooms in hotels in the large cities are expensive, and it is quite conceivable that their expenses might run up to as much as $10 a day and still their expenses will not be extravagant and the members of the board not live in a way that would be inappropriate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the gentleman intended to ask a question, but in answer to the gentleman's statement I will say that it seems to me the same argument would apply to employees as well as to members of the board.

Mr. YOUNG. Then, perhaps, the amount should be raised for employees instead of the other amount being reduced.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir; gladly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. As I understand, the gentleman's amendment strikes out all that relates to expenses.

Mr. SIMMONS. No, sir. The bill provides that the members and employees shall receive "while traveling on duty and away from their designated stations, in an amount not to exceed $10 per day in the case of members, and $7 per day in the case of employees."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And then you strike that out?

Mr. SIMMONS. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir; gladly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. While I am not in favor of the gentleman's amendment, I assume it is going to carry or else something less, and if the gentlemen take up a great deal of time on this the final result will be that there will be a less amount. While I think it ought to be more, I think there is great danger that the members and employees will get less than more.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir; gladly.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think it is the strangest thing of all that the gentleman from Iowa and his colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee have not gotten together and fixed up the matter of the expense allowance to this board and its employees. I understood last night that the matter could be arranged in five minutes, and I assumed from that statement that the gentleman from Iowa would at least interest himself to the point of seeing whether he could not get an agreement as to what these expenses ought to be. Of course, we can take an hour discussing this matter, one that ought to be disposed of in five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not control the members of the committee. If they persist in taking up time on trivial matters I can not help it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, what is the effect of the gentleman's amendment? Changing the amount from $10 to $7?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the effect of it.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires, the modified amendment will be again reported.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I would like to have it again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment again as modified.

The Clerk again read the amendment as modified.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment last evening provided for inserting $7 in place of $10.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 3, "$10" and insert "$7," and strike out all of line 4 and that part of the word "employees" appearing in line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMMONS) there were—ayes 60, noes 47.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 100, where the Moore amendment was adopted with reference to publicity matters, in order that I may move an amendment to it correcting the verbiage and not changing the sense of it at all. I submitted the matter to Mr. MOORE the other day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to page 100 to offer a perfecting amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman says he has submitted the proposed amendment to the gentleman from Virginia, and it is entirely agreeable to him.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is my understanding.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do not want any understanding about it. I want an affirmative statement about a matter of that kind.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, these are the facts: I offered an amendment, and there was an amendment thereto offered by Mr. TILSON, of Connecticut. Mr. TILSON's amendment was in the language proposed by another Member and did not accurately designate the committees.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the request for the present. I would like to have the gentleman look it over and see if he can not accept it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It will only take a moment to explain. The two committees were not properly designated. Now, that was all, and what is proposed by the gentleman from Iowa will properly designate the committees. There can not be any objection to it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is there any change in the substance?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No change in the substance at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa to the amendment of Mr. MOORE of Virginia:

"On page 100, strike out the 'Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Finance of the Senate," and after the word "provided," in line 13, insert "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CROSSER. I want to offer, Mr. Chairman, an amendment at the end of this title.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CROSSER. I have not the amendment prepared, but I see that I must offer it here if I offer it at all. I offer an amendment as follows:

Page 208, after line 12, after the word "taxes," insert "when the board and its employees provided for in Title IX shall have been installed, any other board and its employees heretofore performing the same service shall be dispensed with."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk first report the amendment. Has the gentleman his amendment in writing?

Mr. CROSSER. No; I have not quite finished it.

The CHAIRMAN. For the purpose of having the Clerk report the amendment the gentleman had better have it in writing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER: Page 208, after line 12, after the word "taxes," insert: "When the board and its employees provided for in Title IX shall have been installed, any other board and its employees heretofore performing the same service shall be dispensed with."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you say "any board or committee heretofore performing the same service"——

Mr. CROSSER. That is exactly the object of the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This will simply throw everything into chaos down in the Treasury Department.

Mr. CROSSER. I want to address the committee for a couple of minutes on the subject.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that the committee on appeals and review will be dispensed with, because this board would take its place, but they do not want to throw the employees out of the department.

Mr. CROSSER. I do not want to claim too much for an amendment which has been hastily drawn, but I do want to call the attention of the committee to this proposition. As the gentlemen who are supporting this board of appeals know, I gave my support not only to the board but opposed such amendments as would have interfered with adequate payment for the services of this board, because I think that it is highly essential and a very desirable feature of this bill. I think the public should have some independent body to which it can go for a review and for redress of its grievances, if necessary, but my experience with these departments is that, unless there is some specific provision directing the abolition of any preexisting boards or commissions or employees, we will find that they will continue in existence in addition to the new board of appeals which we have properly provided for. I do not want to leave that to the discretion of any department, and I am sure that if we do leave it to their discretion what will happen will be that we will simply have so many more unnecessary employees.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. I am inclined to think we can trust the Treasury Department not to duplicate the service, and I notice that this amendment is subject to some other objections.

Mr. CROSSER. The amendment was hurriedly drawn, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG. The amendment provides that you are going to dispense with all of the employees of any similar board in the past. I want to suggest that those clerks migh be used in some other capacity, but you provide that the department must dispense with their services.

Mr. CROSSER. The gentleman will recognize the necessity for some legislation in regard to this matter. If we do not incorporate such a provision, we shall have two boards continuing, perhaps not in conflict with each other, but drawing salaries and unnecessarily increasing the pay roll. As I have already said, yesterday I voted for adequate pay for the members of the board, and for a sufficient number on the board. I do not want to curtail it in any way whatever, but I do not want to leave with the department the power of continuing on the pay roll a lot of previously existing boards or commissions, or unnecessary employees, which the committee yesterday assured us were to be superseded by the board of appeals.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's amendment had any effect at all, and I do not think it would have, it would simply throw the Treasury Department into chaos, and would prevent the Treasury from assigning the work and dividing it as it ought to be.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. CROSSER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; we can not spend time on propositions of this sort.

Mr. CROSSER. I wanted to ask a question; that is all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, what is it you wanted to ask?

Mr. CROSSER. Does the gentleman desire that any boards now existing for the performance of the work that this board of appeals is intended to perform shall continue in existence?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman knows that these claims have got to be heard in the department, or he ought to know that the claims ought to be heard in the department.

Mr. CROSSER. Quite so.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And if what you want is really carried into effect, they would not get any hearing in the Treasury at all.

Mr. CROSSER. The gentleman will admit that this board of appeals was represented yesterday as a substitute for what we now have, was it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

Mr. CROSSER. Now, a word as to the bill in general. An examination of the so-called Mellon tax plan should satisfy anyone that its object is to benefit the few who have great incomes, rather than the millions of American people. If, however, there were any doubt about the correctness of this statement, the methods used to force Congress to adopt the so-called Mellon plan would remove that doubt. Great amounts of money have been spent for advertising which has urged the Mellon plan. On the screens of every moving-picture house in the country we have seen the propaganda for the Mellon plan, and to every Member of Congress have come thousands of letters almost in the same language, often in exactly the same language, and without doubt sent at the demand of propaganda headquarters. People have not been merely requested to write to their Congressmen saying that the writers have carefully considered the Mellon bill—containing 242 pages—and that they urge Congress to pass it, but the arrogant propagandists have attempted to force their employees to write such letters to their Members of Congress.

To show the methods used by those who are determined to force Congress to pass the so-called Mellon plan I quote the following from a letter written to the employees of the Aeolian Co. of New York:

To all Aeolian employees:

It is of the utmost importance and a matter of vital interest to all of us that the program of tax revision, commonly called the Mellon plan, be passed at the present session of Congress.

It is also vitally important that the so-called bonus bill should not be passed. * * *

I am asking that you write at once to the two Senators representing New York State at Washington, as well as the Representative of your voting district, that you, as one of their constituents, desire them, as representing you, to vote for the Mellon bill without changes and to vote against any kind of a bonus bill.

Write your letter for the Representative of your district and send it to Miss Reilly, executive offices, Forty-second Street, and she will forward it to the Evening Mail, who will be glad to fill in the name of the proper Representative, provided you give your voting address at the bottom of the letter.

The two Senators are JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., and Dr. ROYAL S. COPELAND.

Address the Senators in care of the United States Senate at Washington and your Representative in care of the House of Representatives, Washington; addressing each one as "Honorable."

We shall check up our pay roll within the next couple of weeks to find out those who have written and those who have not.

Sincerely yours,

W. V. SWORDS.

The following is the form of a letter which one of the big trust companies of New York sent to its stockholders and employees for the purpose of having such stockholders and employees sign the statement and send it to the Congress of the United States:

DECEMBER —, 1923.

To the Congress of the United States:

I respectfully request and urge Congress to take a persistent and aggressive stand for lower Federal taxes and to support a tax-reduction plan substantially along the lines recommended in letters dated November 10 and December 17, 1923, from the Hon. Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to the Hon. WILLIAM R. GREEN, acting chairman Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives; and to refrain from voting in favor of any legislation which will interfere with the carrying out of such tax-reduction plan.

(Name)_____

(Address)_____

These two instances are sufficient to illustrate the tactics used by the powerful interests of the United States to force through Congress a tax bill which suits them. Let us see why these gentlemen are so fond of the Mellon plan and so opposed to the so-called Garner plan for raising revenue. The Garner plan proposes to take 44 per cent of all incomes above $92,000 a year for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Government. The Mellon plan proposes to take from big incomes only 25 per cent of the amount of such incomes which are over $100,000 a year. The Garner plan proposes to reduce the tax rate on the smallest incomes paying a tax to 2 per cent, while the Mellon plan proposes a rate on the same incomes 50 per cent higher.

Now, of course, everyone is in favor of lower taxes, but everyone also knows that the Government must have sufficient money to meet its needs. The question is, therefore: Is it more just and more wise to increase the tax burden on the persons receiving ordinary incomes, or should we not tax those with very large incomes at a higher rate than we tax people with smaller incomes?

Those who argue against taking the 44 per cent of all above $92,000 of the big incomes have a hard time finding an excuse for being against the taking of the 44 per cent of such big incomes. They have a hard time trying to make it appear right that the Government should get a large amount of the money needed to pay its expenses by taking off almost half of the tax on incomes above $92,000 and then to get the money it needs by increasing the tax on ordinary incomes.

They realized, however, that they must give the people and Congress some kind of an excuse, and so they tell us that they want to help business.

Now, Mr. Chairman, will those who want to take the tax off great incomes and put it on the shoulders of the people with smaller incomes tell us how money left in the pockets of men with incomes of more than $92,000 a year will help prosperity more than money saved to the people who pay taxes on ordinary incomes?

The welfare of the country depends just as much on the success and prosperity of the smaller business and smaller manufacturer as upon the success of the great money powers. We hear men at one moment denounce and howl about the injustice and tyranny of trusts and monopolies and then in almost the next minute tell us that we must take about one-half the tax from big incomes, the incomes from the huge businesses, and put the tax on the incomes from small business and of small manufacturers.

The statements of Secretary Mellon in support of this unsound policy have been severely condemned by men of all parties. Hon. JAMES COUZENS, the Republican Senator from Michigan, said in the Senate on January 21, 1924:

More dishonest statements, misstatements, if not absolute falsehoods, have been handed out at the Treasury Department of the United States for the purpose of misleading the public than ever were issued by a public department in my recollection of government.

Ah, my friends, the real position of those who argue that it is proper for the Government to cut down by almost a half the tax on big incomes, on incomes in excess of $92,000, and instead get the money by taxing more the people with smaller incomes, the real feeling of most men who want such a plan is that if we increase the wealth of those financially powerful, those at the top of the economic structure, enough will dribble down from them to help out those lower down. This is a dangerous doctrine. It implies the argument that if the powerful in society are given control of the country's resources they will be very kind and dole out enough to take care of all the rest. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the only way the healthy growth of civilization can be promoted is by assuring, as fully as possible, the success and prosperity of all the people as a result of their honest efforts, unhampered and uncontrolled by industrial or financial overlords.

But they pleadingly assure us that they, too, are anxious to be fair to the people and that the Mellon plan will not be unjust to them. Let us see. According to the latest published statistics of the Treasury Department, there are 6,650,695 income taxpayers in the United States, 9,433 of whom are in the State of Ohio. Now, the undisputed fact is that only 539 of these Ohio income taxpayers would benefit more under the Mellon plan of so-called tax reduction than they would benefit under the Garner tax-reduction plan. On the other hand, 366,557 would benefit more under the Garner tax plan, and only 539 in the whole State would benefit less under the Garner plan than under the Mellon plan. During the war thousands of new millionaires were added to those in the United States prior to the war. The present debt of the Government resulted largely from the war. Is it then unjust that the fabulous incomes of the country should bear a greater proportion of the expense of the Government than the smaller incomes?

I am not one of those who believe that even the taxing of these great incomes according to either the Mellon plan or the Garner plan will be any fundamental remedy for the distribution of wealth so unjustly as is now the case. I would adopt a system of taxation that would prevent the accumulation on the one hand of gigantic amounts of wealth by the few without their giving for it service equal in value, and, on the other hand, make it unnecessary for the many millions of people to struggle from morn till night for merely enough to enable them to exist.

But until the people and their representatives are ready to prevent by a sane method such an unjust distribution of the bounties of nature, I shall support, as now, such method of taxation as will put in the Public Treasury a reasonable amount of the wealth unjustly acquired by the very few. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GREEN of Iowa) there were 17 ayes and 77 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

SEC. 1001. The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is authorized to prescribe all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this section provides a blanket grant of power to the executive branch of our Government to make such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary for the enforcement of the proposed law. There are no checks, no reviews, no revisions. The Supreme Court has rendered some decisions that would indicate that Congress has the right to delegate the power of making rules and regulations, but there should be some limit as to the extent of those rules and regulations. We all know that when we give to a department the right to make a rule, or give them an inch they will take an ell, and they soon walk over into the realm of lawmaking.

The Internal Revenue Department has already written a code of laws for regulating the taxpayer in the matter of returns, and they assess him arbitrarily, frequently unjustly; he has no redress except through the courts. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] a few days ago gave us an instance of a taxpayer who had been arbitrarily assessed, unjustly assessed, and in order to save the payment of the excess tax he was forced to sign a waiver. The waiver carried him over the period in which the law limited the examination of his books, likewise the date for appeal, and the department then pleaded the statute of limitations, so that he could not go into the court and obtain redress. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] stated that the Internal Revenue Department had arbitrarily—I think that is the substance of it—assessed income in cases of a man's return in excess of that which was just and right in order to force the taxpayer to come forward and sign a waiver.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAL. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. At the time they made the assessment they intended that it should be just.

Mr. DEAL. Yes; but they took all the advantage and gave the taxpayer none. The last Congress had to make an appropriation of about $105,000,000, I think it was.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a further suggestion?

Mr. DEAL. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This practice will be stopped definitely and effectively by this board of tax appeals. The arbitrary assessments will be stopped.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What assurance has the gentleman of that?

Mr. DEAL. The last Congress appropriated $105,000,000 for the repayment of taxes unjustly taken from the taxpayer. If there were $105,000,000 taken from the taxpayers of this country unjustly which was detected by the taxpayers themselves, Heaven only knows how much was taken from them that was not detected and unjustly paid by the taxpayers and now enjoyed by the Government. There are no means of determining this amount. It may be fairly assumed that it would run into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Not only that, but the taxpayer when assessed arbitrarily in a sum greater than he believes that he owes the Government is forced to secure the services of an attorney or a certified accountant, bear the expense of coming to Washington and looking into his accounts, and my judgment is that it has cost the taxpayers of this country over half a billion dollars in fees to certified accountants to aid them in reducing their taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. DEAL. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall be compelled to object; my friend can extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DEAL. Oh, yes; I have sat here for two weeks and have not opened my lips and now that I want to make some remarks on this iniquitous proposition that you have before Congress you want to shut me off.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has waited until the last minute before he has seen fit to say anything; but, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. DEAL. This is section 1001, in the latter part of the bill. It is the principal objection that I have to the whole measure, the one thing that the taxpayers of my district, and all other districts from which I have heard, complain mostly of in the bill. These regulations of the Internal Revenue Department have the force of law and subject the taxpayer to a prison penalty if he violates them. It is nothing more or less than law. I believe Congress should write the law and not leave it to the Internal Revenue Department. It would be idle to say that Congress has not the power and ability to do it; it can do it. The great Ways and Means Committee is capable of writing the law as well as the Internal Revenue Department, and they should write it and protect the taxpayer by letting him know what the law is. These regulations are binding on the taxpayer and not upon the revenue department. It can change the rules from year to year, month to month, week to week, and every morning before breakfast if they feel like doing it. The taxpayer has no redress and they never know what the law is. As an evidence of the arbitrariness of the department, Mr. McCarl issued a ruling that the workmen's compensation should be held up and not paid; that it is wrong. The law says that they shall be paid a certain compensation at certain times, but the department handling this measure is forced to cease payment of the workmen's compensation to-day because of the arbitrary ruling of Mr. McCarl, which he says supersedes the advice and opinion of the Attorney General, and even the President himself. The same is true of the Navy Department. Some of our young men have been denied the right of compensation for dependents, and not only have they been denied this right but they have been forced to make restitution of amounts already paid, going back some two or three years. I have a case in which men have been required to make refunds through a period of two and a half years on account of this ruling of Mr. McCarl.

The Internal Revenue Department does not seem to have any regard for the taxpayer at all, nor does it seem that Congress has any regard either. We are continually talking about justice here. I have seen men walk up and down this Hall like caged lions demanding justice. Analyzed, it means that they want to place the tax on the other fellow. It seems to me that in the matter of taxes the justice demanded consists in an effort to have certain interests exempted from taxation. We can not all be exempted from taxation. The Government must have revenue, but while we are being taxed we ought to have some regard for the taxpayers who have to make out their returns, and not force them to the expense of a certified accountant and exorbitant expense in the matter of their tax returns.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAL. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, the gentleman knows that the Comptroller General is not a part of the Treasury Department.

Mr. DEAL. I am merely citing that to show——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. He is superior to everybody else.

Mr. DEAL. It seems that he is superior even to the President.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not only in fact, but in conduct he is superior to everybody else.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McSWAIN: Page 208, line 23, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "provided such regulations shall not enlarge or modify any of the provisions of this act and of any other law, and all such rules and regulations and all amendments thereto shall be annually reported to Congress."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, personally I have no objection to the amendment and am willing to accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1002. (a) Every person liable to any tax imposed by this act, or for the collection thereof, shall keep such records, render under oath such statements, make such returns, and comply with such rules and regulations, as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may from time to time prescribe.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEAL: Page 209, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "keep such records."

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to protect the small operator or business man. I do not think that the Internal Revenue Department or the commissioner would really require every man to keep a set of books, but it gives him the power, and, in carrying out the same idea I heretofore presented, I assume that he may exercise that power. I want to protect the small business man from being required to keep a set of red tape books in accordance with the requirements of the commissioner.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAL. In just a moment. The larger business firms, of course, keep their books and it is no trouble for them to keep them in such a manner as to suit the commissioner, but it would be a great hardship to many of the small business men of this country to have to keep books in accordance with the requirements of the commissioner. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman aware that this has been in the law for years?

Mr. DEAL. I am not concerned with precedents. I say to the gentleman from Iowa that I am not a lawyer, and not being a lawyer, precedent has no great weight with me. If it has been the law and if it is wrong, we ought to correct it now.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman aware that this would enable every person who is disposed to do so to cheat the Government out of the tax—that is, any man who carries on a business of any kind.

Mr. DEAL. The gentleman is assuming that every taxpayer is disposed to defraud the Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not, but I know that a large number are.

Mr. DEAL. American and English jurisprudence since the days of Magna Charta assumes that every man is innocent of crime until he is proven guilty, and the burden of proof rests upon the Government. In this law the situation is reversed, and every man is assumed to be guilty and the burden rests upon him to prove his innocence. I want to protect the citizen.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important matter, and I hope I may have the attention of the committee for a few minutes. If this amendment were adopted, it would cost the Government anywhere from fifty to a hundred million dollars in taxes that ought to be paid. This provision has been in the law for years, and it has not hurt any honest man, nor has it made any extra expense or trouble.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want just a minute. Does the gentleman claim that anybody has been hurt by this provision? He has not claimed it.

Mr. DEAL. I do not claim that they have been hurt, but I claimed that they had been placed at great inconvenience and expense unnecessarily.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No one has been placed to any inconvenience and expense. There is a certain class of people, mostly foreigners, who, if this provision were left out, would not pay any taxes at all. There are some of them now trying to avoid keeping any books, and they are not keeping any bank accounts. What they want is to beat the Government out of all taxes.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXAMINATION OF BOOKS AND WITNESSES.

SEC. 1004. The commissioner, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return or for the purpose of making a return where none has been made, is hereby authorized, by any revenue agent or inspector designated by him for that purpose, to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and may require the attendance of the person rendering the return or of any officer or employee of such person, or the attendance of any other person having knowledge in the premises, and may take his testimony with reference to the matter required by law to be included in such return, with power to administer oaths to such person or persons.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEAL: Page 211, beginning with line 10, strike out the paragraph 1004.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, the fourth amendment to the Constitution is one amendment which the Supreme Court has not declared unconstitutional. The fourth amendment provides that the right of the citizens to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures of their persons, houses, papers, and effects shall not be violated, and no warrant shall lie except upon probable cause, stating the place, persons, or things to be searched and seized and described and their location. This section gives the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the right to send his agents, detectives, and spies into the home of every American citizen and search his papers, his books, and his private correspondence to seek a cause or probability of fraud. Now, the citizen is presumed to be innocent until proved to be guilty, and the burden of proof rests upon the Government, and I contend that we should not delegate any such power as this. It is clearly unconstitutional. We have no right to do it, and in doing so we are simply placing a citizen at the mercy of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to do as he pleases, with no defense, no opportunity on the part of the citizen to defend or protect himself in any manner whatsoever. I submit that Congress would be exceeding its power should it pass any such legislation as this. [Applause.] All governments are supposed to exist by consent of the governed; especially is this true with ours. It is not intended as a means of persecution and oppression, but to afford the greatest amount of peace, happiness, and prosperity. Section 1004 is the antithesis of it all and clearly unconstitutional. It is in keeping, however, with the policy being pursued by the prohibition department, which is, of course, sufficient warrant for any violation of the statute or constitutional law.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if some of us are not too loquacious—probably I am one of them—we expect to get final votes upon this bill to-day.

Reaching to that point, I can not refrain from expressing a few personal views, in no wise representing anybody but myself, and it may be a poor representation at that. I have always been a pretty strict party man, and I never have been very much disposed to compromising, either with my pride or with people with whom I do not agree. This House started in December to compromise, and we have been at it ever since, and we will be at it to-night when we vote for this bill. I would rather, a great deal rather, go down to defeat with the Mellon rates in this bill, with the rates as they were originally framed, than go on to victory by a compromise with insurgent Republicans or the Democrats.

However, our party leader on the floor seems to think that a better program is to compromise, and if that program is wanted we shall have to go through with it. Sometimes, they say, you have to hold your nose and do a thing that you do not like, and that is the position in which I find myself to-day. [Laughter.] I confess that 37½ per cent is better than 44, but it is not enough better to take the stench away from the 37½ per cent. I am for the surtax rate of 25 per cent as reported by 11 Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I am not for any compromise of those rates. [Applause.] We want to go to the country with a tax reduction. Perhaps we will, if we write in it 37½ per cent, but we will not go with any real tax revision. It seems we can get a vote here only by showing a reduction of 25 per cent as proposed by Mr. LONGWORTH from the present surtax rates. We will have to be satisfied with that. In other words, over 200 Republicans have to be ruled by about 20. I do not like it, and I resent it. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. No. The gentleman can get his own time and speak in it.

I do not like it. I hate like thunder to vote for it. We have been led by a few members of our party, with whom I do not agree, for some time. It is poor leadership, and I kick against it like the deuce. [Applause.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. No. The gentleman can speak his own piece. I must get this out of my system before I can vote for it. Thirty-seven and one-half per cent is proposed because certain men want to compromise all the time with 20 men, and lose every time it is done.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman expect to get a chance to vote for 25?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; and I want to continue to vote for it, and I do not want to compromise.

That is about all I have to say, gentlemen. That tells the plain facts of the case. Let us face them to-day. A majority of the Republican Members of this House ought to write into this bill the rates as suggested by the administration—call them the Mellon rates, or the Ways and Means rates, or the Republican rates, as you please; call them what you have a mind to. It is a bill on which we ought to go through to the end. [Applause.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman knows that I am as anxious to vote for 25 per cent as he is, but is it not a recognized fact that the best legislation that is ever enacted is finally a matter of compromise and arbitration? [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. No; although we very often have to compromise to get anything, and that looks like the situation now. But I deny that it is the best legislation; it is not the best way to legislate; and it is a long way from being the best legislation. However, it is the best we can get, and that is all I can say for it.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, has my time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I will not say more than to repeat the thought I have already expressed to the committee, and I will let it go at that. We are again about to be obliged to accept a compromise practically dictated by the insurgent Republicans and one very near their original program. I regret to see the power they have exercised to spoil a good bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3228. All claims for the refunding or crediting of any internal-revenue tax alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or of any penalty alleged to have been collected without authority, or of any sum alleged to have been excessive or in any manner wrongfully collected must, except as provided in section 281 of the revenue act of 1924, be presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within four years next after the payment of such tax, penalty, or sum.

(b) This section shall not bar from allowance a claim for credit or refund filed prior to the enactment of this act which but for such enactment would have been allowable.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRISP: On page 217, after the end of line 12, insert as a new subsection to be known as paragraph (c) the following:

"That when any taxpayer makes a fair, honest, and correct return as to the taxes due by him to the United States under its internal revenue laws, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or any other official of the United States authorized to act in such cases determines that there is a deficiency in respect to the tax due the United States on said return and assesses and levies an additional tax against the taxpayer to the amount of the determined alleged deficiency, and the taxpayer objects to and caveats the right of the Government to assess additional taxes against him and appeals from the determination and decision of the Internal Revenue Bureau in assessing such additional tax; if, upon the hearing and review upon the caveat or appeal, the taxpayer sustains his contention and his original returns are found to be just, fair, and correct, or if he has paid more taxes than due by him, then the Government of the United States shall reimburse the taxpayer his reasonable costs expended in having his appeal reviewed and prosecuted before the proper authorities of the United States in such cases made and provided, the amount of cost to be allowed under this provision to be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue subject to a review by the Court of Claims."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. CRISP. If a point of order is to be made, I would like to hear it, because I do not care to make a speech unless there is some chance of getting the amendment adopted. I would like to hear the point of order, for I do not believe one can be successfully made against the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think I would rather submit the matter to a vote and not make a point of order. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that he may proceed on his amendment for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have offered this amendment in the utmost good faith, believing it is sound, equitable, and just. I believe in a progressive income tax, but there is great opposition to that tax, and I believe the greatest objection to it is because of its administration and because of the annoyance, the expense, and the inconvenience to the taxpayers in making out their returns, and the injustice done to them, unwittingly, I grant you, but still there are great hardships inflicted upon the taxpayers.

Now, gentlemen, the policy of the Treasury Department is that when they review tax returns they levy and assess an additional tax against the taxpayer, and the policy has been that agents from the Treasury Department would go out and examine the books of some corporation or business house. They would stay there for weeks, examine the books of the corporation, and when they would finish their examination they would leave without saying anything to those in charge of the business. They would not consult the officers of a corporation or of an individual taxpayer; if they had done so, many of the items that the revenue agents were claiming were unjustly deducted as expenses would have been explained away. But their policy was to leave, and after they were gone for months and possibly a year they would notify the taxpayer that he owed so many hundreds or thousands of dollars additional tax.

Now, I believe the agents of the Government should extend every courtesy and helpful assistance possible to the taxpayer, so as to make the administration of the law as little burdensome as possible, and in that way create as favorable an impression as possible on the taxpayer. It is their duty to do what they can to popularize the law.

Now, I am told by Mr. Mellon's assistant, Mr. Gregg—and I want to join with the others in paying tribute to his ability and his splendid personality—that since I offered this matter before the Ways and Means Committee the Treasury Department has changed its regulations to the extent that when a revenue agent now assesses an additional tax against the taxpayer he must notify the taxpayer of the additional claim and give the taxpayer an opportunity to be heard before the final assessment is made final.

That is an improvement, and I am glad of it, but, gentlemen, it seems to me that when a taxpayer has made an honest, just, and fair return and additional taxes are assessed against him he should have the right to protect his rights as to that additional levy, and if on a rehearing he sustains his contention and shows that his original return was honest and correct that he should not be mulcted in damages by having to pay attorneys' fees, auditors' fees, traveling fees, and other expenses which are absolutely necessary in order that he may protect his rights before the Treasury Department.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. CRISP. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman says "when it has been determined"—by whom? By this new board we have created, by the circuit court, by the Supreme Court of the United States, or by whom?

Mr. CRISP. The amendment reads by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or other duly constituted authority of the Bureau of Internal Revenue who has power to assess additional taxes. This board of appeals has not that power. They are a board to pass upon whether or not this additional assessment was just and correct.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman, as I understand it, refers to a judicial review, and not to a review within the department.

Mr. CRISP. Yes; my amendment, I think, is clear; but if it is not, I would be glad to have amendments perfecting it. I think the amendment is clear to this extent, that when a duly authorized agent of the Treasury Department assesses additional taxes against the taxpayer, if upon review before the commissioner, under the present law, or, if this bill is adopted, before the board of tax appeals, he sustains his original returns and establishes that they were honest and correct, then he shall be reimbursed his reasonable cost in prosecuting that appeal.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman think his amendment is broad enough to include attorneys' fees?

Mr. CRISP. I was just coming to that, I will say to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. KEARNS. I did not think the language was broad enough to cover that.

Mr. CRISP. I was coming to that. When I first introduced a bill, which I urged before the Committee on Ways and Means, I had a second clause in it providing that attorneys' fees, auditors' fees, hotel bills, and transportation charges should be prima facie reasonable cost provided for in the bill. The Committee on Ways and Means submitted the proposition to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury was not favorable to it, in that he said that the second provision, providing for reasonable cost, embraced every kind of imaginable cost, and it might be that the taxpayer would make contingent-fee contracts, and large ones; and that it was not reciprocal, in that if the taxpayer won he was to be reimbursed all the costs, whereas if the Government won, the Government would not be reimbursed its costs out of the taxpayer.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I must decline to yield for the present unless I get more time.

Mr. YOUNG. I think the gentleman ought to have more time.

Mr. CRISP. Gentlemen, I do not believe the amendment will work any hardship on the Government, because the Government already has its attorneys and its employees paid on salaries. I admit there might be some force in the criticism of the Secretary that it might lead to unreasonable, unfair, and exorbitant cost charges as the bill was originally drafted, so that in the amendment as offered I have protected that. I have cured that and have fixed it so that there will be no unjust hardship on the Government, because the amendment as offered provides that if the taxpayer sustains his returns, then he is entitled to reasonable cost, the reasonable cost to be primarily assessed and fixed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to a review by the Court of Claims. If this amendment becomes a law, I have no doubt that in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred whatever reasonable cost is allowed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will be accepted by the taxpayer. However, I did not care to put the taxpayer's rights absolutely, so far as this was concerned, in the power of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, so I added a provision that the action of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in assessing the attorneys' fees was subject to a review by the Court of Claims. Gentlemen, I do not believe there can be any injury wrought by this amendment. I think it will have the beneficial effect of making the Treasury Department more careful in assessing additional taxes. I think it will have the effect of making the agents of the Treasury Department, when they go out to examine the books of a business concern, careful to see that any assessment they might levy on the taxpayer can be sustained, and if they are doubtful about any item, they will take it up with the officers of the company or with the business men and iron it out.

It may be urged by some that if this amendment was adopted it would have the effect of working against the taxpayer in that if the Government assessed additional taxes they would be more determined to hold some additional amount of taxes than they would be if they would not be mulcted in costs if they found their returns were wrong. I do not think that would be the case, because this bill provides for an impartial board of tax appeal, and I favor that provision. I think it is one of the best provisions in the bill. If the additional taxes are assessed, both the Government and the taxpayer will have a fair, impartial hearing before this fair and impartial board, and I believe they will pass upon the facts in each case according to the law and justice and will not be biased or influenced either way as to whether the Government would have to pay costs in the case. I do hope you will adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the attention of the committee for just a few minutes, although I realize everyone is so impatient to get on, it is difficult for anyone to get a hearing. I have not only the greatest respect and esteem but an affectionate regard for the gentleman from Georgia. Ordinarily, I am very much inclined to accept his judgment on a matter of this kind, but I hardly think my friend from Georgia has gone to the bottom of this matter or has understood what would be its effect. Its effect would be to greatly increase the appeals and the actions between the Government and the taxpayer because it would be an inducement to every attorney to go to the taxpayer and say, "If you can get any little amount allowed on your claim I can have all your attorneys' fees and all your expenses paid." The gentleman says that it would not be fair to give the Government the same privilege of having its attorneys' fees paid for the reason the Government has a large number of attorneys already in their employ. Let me say to the House that the Government will need a great many more attorneys if this provision goes into effect to take care of the great increase in the number of claims that are made against the Government.

And also let me say that when you come to pay the attorneys' fees that run up into hundreds of thousands of dollars in some cases and would be sustained by the Court of Claims on the testimony of attorneys, that they were reasonable, what does my friend from Georgia think that it would cost the Government? You can be prepared to make an additional appropriation.

Mr. YOUNG. What does the gentleman from Iowa think it would be?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Five or ten million dollars.

Mr. CRISP. If the taxpayer made an honest return, and if his return is sustained, and if the Government assessment of additional taxes is not justified, if justice is to be done the taxpayer, why should not he be entitled to receive his cost?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If he has made an honest and just return, I do not think he will have much trouble with it, but this puts a premium on contesting tax assessments. My experience with the department has been, as a Member stated the other day, that when I went down there I was given a fair and respectful hearing, and they were disposed to treat the matter fairly. I admit the field agents sometimes get reckless, but here in Washington they give the taxpayer everything, and sometimes a little more.

Mr. DEAL. Yes; they give it to him after a hearing, but they keep him in jeopardy for a month and sometimes a year.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], with his usual fairness and consideration, presented this matter to the Committee on Ways and Means. We considered it very carefully. It is a departure from any practice, of which I have any knowledge, in a matter of review of the acts of administrative government anywhere in the United States. Our courts do not ordinarily allow attorneys' fees or fees of experts or fees of accountants or other expenses against unsuccessful litigants. We have not incorporated that system into our jurisprudence. This will be the first case of this kind in the country so far as I am advised at this moment, and I have made some inquiry and investigation of the subject. Of course, the Government is not allowed any part of its costs or expenses in those proceedings where it is successful.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield? Is not the Government permitted to assess a penalty against the taxpayer, and does not that take the place of the expenses?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; we have taken off the penalty and only charge interest. Where it appears that the man has made a fair and honest return but owing to some mistake by the taxpayer there is an additional assessment put on, we do not charge any penalty, but only charge him interest.

It was said by the gentleman from Georgia that the Government has its force of attorneys and accountants and experts on hand. So have most of the taxpayers. Most of these claims come from large taxpayers; they involve hundreds of thousands of dollars usually. They take their own force of experts; they take their own force of accountants; they take their own lawyers, and the big expense will be in these cases where they have the high-class attorneys. These attorneys and accountants and experts will be paid out of the Public Treasury, not at the rate we pay Government employees but at the rate which they are paid in their private practice.

Mr. CRISP. Not under the bill, because the bill gives the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the right to assess the fees.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is subject to review in the Court of Claims and every substantial claimant will go to the Court of Claims and the experts will testify, for instance, that Mr. Jones is the leading attorney in New York City, Mr. Brown is the leading attorney in Chicago, and Mr. Smith is the leading attorney in Pittsburgh, and that their services are worth $500 a day. The Government will not be able to dispute it because the time of these attorneys is worth $500 a day in their private practice.

Mr. DEAL. Yes; and the taxpayer has to pay $500 a day because the Government has placed that burden upon him in addition to his tax.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The men who are in the employ of these companies constantly will be in the Treasury Department, always seeking a review of taxes. We have taken out the necessity of their paying under protest because all large taxpayers made a protest whenever they paid their taxes, when they sent in their checks, whether they had any case or not. It became a regular custom under the advice of lawyers to make the payment under protest.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All through this bill we have written it in favor of the taxpayer to make it easier.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Now, whatever additional amount is assessed, be it large or small, the taxpayer will be without the benefit of this legislation. Suppose he has paid $100,000 in taxes and it transpires that he should have paid $25 more, he will not get the reimbursement for his expenses.

It will be inequitable, however you arrange it. You can not do entire justice all the way through.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Will not this be establishing a precedent that will eventually mean that in the case of every claim against the Government in every department the claimant will be entitled to costs?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The next step, the next logical step, is to provide that all litigants in the courts, whether against the Government or against private parties, can always recover their costs and expenses in a successful litigation.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRISP) there were—ayes 73, noes 121.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 177. No interest shall be allowed on any claim up to the time of the rendition of judgment by the Court of Claims, unless upon a contract expressly stipulating for the payment of interest, except that interest may be allowed in any judgment of any court rendered after the passage of the revenue act of 1921 against the United States for any internal-revenue tax erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or for any penalty collected without authority or any sum which was excessive or in any manner wrongfully collected, under the internal revenue laws.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, which happens to be "laws." I want to take only two minutes for a single purpose. In the debate the other day upon the gift tax, which may become a law, it was said by several speakers that some exemption was made in the proposed gift tax which would take bonuses given to employees by their employers out of the gift-tax provisions. I call attention to the fact, for the purpose of the RECORD, that bonuses given to employees are treated by the revenue department, and I think properly so, as a part of the compensation received by the employees, and they are required to pay taxes on that compensation. These bonuses will not be at all affected by the gift tax.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSOLIDATION OF LIBERTY BOND TAX EXEMPTIONS.

SEC. 1028. The various acts authorizing the issues of Liberty bonds are amended and supplemented as follows:

(a) On and after January 1, 1921, 4 per cent and 4¼ per cent Liberty bonds shall be exempt from graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations, in respect to the interest on aggregate principal amounts thereof as follows:

Until the expiration of two years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government, as fixed by proclamation of the President, on $125,000 aggregate principal amount; and for three years more on $50,000 aggregate principal amount.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 231, line 17, strike out line 17, to and including line 24, and through to line 7 on page 232.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman why it is necessary to have this language remain in this bill? The purpose of the provision is evidently passed. I can see no reason why we should keep that legislation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My understanding is that it is necessary in order to preserve those provisions.

Mr. McKEOWN. I should not think we would want to go on record here as passing this tax bill containing language putting us in the attitude of still being in favor of tax-exempt securities. I think it ought to go out. I understand that it was in the original law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was originally passed for five years, and the five years are not yet up.

Mr. McKEOWN. I should think we ought to take that language out of the bill because we do not want to go on record as being in favor of any tax-exempt securities. It has effected its purpose, and it ought to go out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. These were provisions made at the time these bonds were issued, and it has been the law for a long time. They will expire in 1926.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is true; and we could not change the contract under which they are issued, but I see no reason why we should continue these provisions in this law, which is a new law and does not affect and could not affect the contract under which the bonds are issued.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think I can tell the gentleman why. We have tried to put into this law all of the provisions which relate to these taxes, even though we reenact certain laws, because a lawyer or a judge or even a layman finds it convenient to have all of the law in one place.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is all right. I see the purpose. But here is a bill containing this language, and we have to face constituents who are insisting that we pass no more legislation favoring tax-exempt securities. As a Member of this House, I do not want to be put in the attitude of voting for a bill that carries further provisions with reference to tax-exempt securities when, as a matter of fact, it is not necessary. It is nice and convenient for the lawyers, but I do not want to have some fellow going over the country demagoging, misconstruing the situation, and saying that we were voting for further continuation of tax-exempt securities. I think it would be better legislation to eliminate it now. The reason for the legislation is gone

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The effect would be to leave this provision in the law, but the gentleman wants to leave it where nobody knows it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Let them know that we are not going on record as voting for a continuation of it. That is the objection that I have to it. There is no reason to reenact the law. If it is already the law, let it go out of this bill. I am not doing this for the purpose of trying to hinder the legislation, and I take opportunity now to commend the members of this committee for the patience that they have exhibited, and especially the chairman. We have had some trouble, but it is all worked out all right. The chairman of the committee has had a lot to bother him, and I want to compliment him upon his fairness to us in extending time. I also compliment the members of the committee on both sides for their patience. I ask the committee now to take this language out of the bill, so that it may not be misconstrued. It is already the language of the law, and there is no necessity for continuing it in this bill. And the same applies to the next section (b). There are exceptions set out in section (b) that are not necessary in this bill. I propose to offer an amendment to strike that out. It is not necessary. Why, in putting out a new law to the country, encumber it with old provisions that are not going to be changed and which will not affect us? I hope the committee will strike this language out. I see no reason why it should be retained. It should be stricken out, and I submit that to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will pardon me; but we can not get through the bill to-day if there is much discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at this time I beg to call your attention to an injustice which is about to be done to the farmers of my district and of the tobacco-growing section of the Nation.

The amendment adopted the other day to this bill to increase the tax on cigarettes will militate against the tobacco growers of the country by forcing down the price of raw tobacco as sold by the farmers. The farmers of my section and of the South generally are suffering very much just now on account of the ravages of the boll weevil. Like a drowning man, they are catching at everything which will help to keep them from losing all. One gleam of hope comes to those in a large section of the South where tobacco can be produced. The people of south Georgia and other sections are just beginning to grow tobacco successfully, and I am extremely anxious that nothing be now done to hurt or lower the price of the tobacco of these folks.

People who are vitally interested in the growing of tobacco, and who have studied the question closely, say the increase of tax on cigarettes here proposed will hurt very much the price of the tobacco of the growers.

Gentlemen, let me beg you not to hurt these folks who are now struggling so hard to keep going under adverse circumstances. In order to show how much my people oppose this tax I wish now to read the following telegrams:

BLACKSHEAR, GA., February 27, 1924.

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Believing that any further taxes on the products manufactured from tobacco will react to the injury of the farmer growing tobacco, we urge in the interest of the farmers, warehousemen, banks, and all other interests financing the growth of tobacco that you oppose all such further taxation.

THE BLACKSHEAR TOBACCO BOARD OF TRADE.

NASHVILLE, GA., February 27, 1924.

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Please help us preserve our south Georgia tobacco industry by forceful opposition to proposed increase in cigarette tax to $4.

THE FIRST BANK OF NASHVILLE.

HAHIRA, GA., February 27, 1924.

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Use your influence and legislate against new proposed tax raise on tobacco.

J. E. MASSEY.

HAHIRA, GA., February 27, 1924.

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Your influence against increase cigarette tax desired. Do all you can to defeat same.

HAHIRA BOARD OF TRADE.

HAHIRA, GA., February 27, 1924.

Hon. W. C. LANKFORD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Please do all you can to defeat increase cigarette tax.

HAHIRA TOBACCO WAREHOUSE CO.

In response to these telegrams I advised my people by wire as follows:

I opposed amendment increasing tax on cigarettes and will secure separate vote on this item when main bill comes up and hope yet to help secure defeat of increase.

When this separate vote is secured I beg the friends of the farmers here to help us in this our time of need. Let me say that a separate vote will be secured on this item. I will demand a separate vote, unless the Speaker recognizes some other friend of the tobacco growers to make the motion. I will see to it that a separate vote is had and will insist on a record vote being taken. Some say this tax will not hurt the farmers. The tobacco growers say it will hurt them. Let us take no chances. We should resolve the doubt in favor of the farmers if we have any doubt. I, for my part, have no doubt. The tax will hurt my people, and they are not able to suffer any loss at this time. We ought to be appropriating money to help these unfortunate people in the boll-weevil section to get established fully in the growing of tobacco, instead of passing legislation to wreck this new industry.

The farmers always bear more than their share of the burdens of government, and I hope the time will soon come when we can pass tax and other legislation here without piling additional heavy and unnecessary burdens of taxation on backs which are already very much overloaded. This bill is, in part, favorable to the common folks. Let us not now retain a provision which will far overbalance all good in the bill for the farmers. Gentlemen, I wish to plead with you at this time not to increase the present tax on cigarettes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) The exemptions provided in subdivision (a) shall be in addition to the exemptions provided in section 7 of the second Liberty bond act, and in addition to the exemption provided in subdivision (3) of section 1 of the supplement to the second Liberty bond act in respect to bonds issued upon conversion of 3½ per cent bonds, but shall be in lieu of the exemptions provided and free from the conditions and limitations imposed in subdivisions (1) and (2) of section 1 of the supplement to the second Liberty bond act and in section 2 of the Victory Liberty loan act.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of paragraph (b) on page 232, commencing with line 8 and concluding with line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 232, beginning with line 8, strike out all of subsection (b).

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I insist that that is the same proposition. I do not care whether or not you vote to strike it out because I offer the amendment, but I say you are going to be subjected to severe criticism, and I apprehend it will be misrepresented. This changes the law, and——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This is part of section 1328 of the revenue act of 1921. You have reenacted paragraph 8. If you strike out paragraph (b), that does change section 1328 of the revenue act of 1921.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman knows we ought not to carry this language further in here with reference to tax-exempt securities. You can not change the law under which they were issued, because that is a solemn contract with the Government. I mean to say that if you issue tax-exempt securities and those securities are put on the market and held as tax-exempt securities, Congress, until it has some power other than is given it now, could not change the contract under which they were bought.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The statute in regard to the impairment of contracts does not apply to the United States Government.

Mr. McKEOWN. It would be a very immoral thing for the Government to set a bad example in that way. I do not want to delay the proceedings, but I insist you are putting in language that you will find, if you pass this bill, you would wish you had taken out.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the use in rushing through this bill in such a speedy way when we have plenty of time to-day? It is still early, only a little after 1 o'clock. I think this paragraph ought to stay in the bill if the majority party is consistent.

Mr. WINGO. Let me suggest to my friend that he hurry. They are having conferences over here. They have not decided which one has surrendered, and they are afraid they will back down, and they want to bring it to an issue as soon as possible.

Mr. BLANTON. You Republicans ought to quit camouflaging about tax-exempt securities. As to the $15,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities now existing, there is not a Republican leader who would interfere with the situation. They want them to be exempt, and they want the people who own them to escape taxation. We ought to keep this language in here in order that our Republican friends at least in one particular may be consistent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want the Government of the United States to keep its solemn contract. I do not want to be placed in the position of a repudiator.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; neither the gentleman nor his party seem to like repudiators. We have heard our friends over there on the Republican side of the aisle insist upon a surtax rate of 25 per cent. There was not going to be any change of front; they were for Mr. Mellon's bill and nothing else. There was to be no repudiation of their position. Yet here we have in the RECORD this morning a statement from the leader of this House [Mr. LONGWORTH] that he is going to ask the Republicans on this side to vote for a surtax rate of 37½ per cent, in the face of his former stick-to-the-death plan for 25 per cent. Is that consistent? Is there any repudiation in that? I ask the gentleman to answer. Is it consistent?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to say to the gentleman that I have been entirely consistent all the way through.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that keeping his contract with Mr. Mellon?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am not out of order. I was answering the gentleman. I am speaking on consistency in keeping this language in the bill, because if you take it out it would make my friend and his party appear inconsistent with respect to tax-exempt securities. As I said before, you Republicans ought to quit this camouflaging and you ought to be fair with the people. If you take a stand, you ought to be fair about it. If I were an insurgent—and I am not—if I were an insurgent and believed in 50 per cent or in 44 per cent as against only 37½ per cent, I would stand hitched until Gabriel blew his trumpet before I would be led away from the path of righteousness. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is, you will stand hitched until your side holds a caucus?

Mr. BLANTON. I stand hitched always for what I believe is right. My side stands hitched. We Democrats have decided on a policy in the best interest of the whole people of this country and now we have almost pulled you Republican stand-pat regulars up to the Democratic policy. You have come most of the way. There is now very little difference between us. I wish you would see the light of day and hear from the people of the country and then you would raise the 37½ per cent a little and every last one of you would vote for the Garner plan. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1100. (a) The following parts of the revenue act of 1921 are repealed, to take effect (except as otherwise provided in this act) upon the enactment of this act, subject to the limitations provided in subdivisions (b) and (c):

Title II, called "Income tax," as of January 1, 1924;

Title IV, called "Estate tax";

Title V, called "Tax on telegraph and telephone messages," except subdivision (d) of section 500, effective on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act;

Sections 602 and 603 of Title VI, being the taxes on certain beverages and constituent parts thereof;

Title VII, called "Tax on cigars, tobacco, and manufactures thereof";

Title VIII, called "Tax on admissions and dues," effective on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act;

Sections 900, 901, 902, 903, and 904 of Title IX, being certain excise taxes;

Section 905 of Title IX, being the tax on jewelry and similar articles, effective on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act;

Title X, called "Special taxes," effective on June 30, 1924;

Title XI, called "Stamp taxes";

Title XII, called "Tax on employment of child labor";

Sections 1307, 1308, 1309, subdivision (c) of section 1310, sections 1311, 1312, 1313, 1314, 1315, 1316, 1318, 1320, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1328, 1329, and 1330, being certain administrative provisions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 236, line 6, after the parenthesis and before the semicolon insert "effective on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is made necessary by the previous action of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to erroneous statements carried by several of the newspapers in regard to the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole respecting amendments affecting the automobile tax. I read from the New York Times of this morning:

Through an amendment written by Representative CLANCY, Democrat, of Michigan, and presented by his Republican colleague, Representative McLAUGHLIN, $23,600,000 was lopped off the automobile taxes.

I read now from the Detroit Free Press of February 27, the latest issue of that paper received in this city. Under the column relating to the work of the House on this tax bill this appears:

Representative McLAUGHLIN, also of Michigan—

The article had been speaking of Mr. CLANCY—

Representative McLAUGHLIN of Michigan gained the floor and presented amendments previously drawn up by CLANCY, but given to the Republican for introduction because of the difficulty Democratic Members have met in gaining recognition on the floor.

A little further along in the same article is a line or two I wish to read:

It had been agreed that McLAUGHLIN, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, should present the amendments.

Mr. Chairman, these newspaper items, as the House knows, relate to two amendments I offered Tuesday to the automobile section of the tax bill, and which were adopted yesterday—Thursday—by the Committee of the Whole practically without opposition.

On page 106 of the bill is section 600, paragraph 1 of which proposed to continue a tax of 3 per cent on the sale price of autotrucks and autowagons. On the same page, paragraph 3 of the section proposed to continue a tax of 5 per cent on tires, accessories, repair parts, and so forth. Under paragraph 1 the taxes collected last year—1923—amounted to about $10,500,000, and under paragraph 8 the amount collected was about $40,000,000.

I have been and still am opposed to the continuance of these taxes. In the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I am a member, I sought but was unable to obtain repeal or reduction of either of these paragraphs; so I determined and notified the committee of my intention to carry the matter to the House, to offer amendments, and endeavor to secure their adoption.

Tuesday I did as I had determined; I offered an amendment to paragraph 1 to exempt from taxation autotrucks and autowagons the chassis of which sells for not more than $1,000, the effect of which, if it shall become law, will be to reduce taxes on trucks and wagons to the extent of about $3,600,000.

I also offered an amendment to paragraph 8 to reduce the tax from 5 per cent, the present rate, to 2½ per cent, the effect of which will be to reduce these taxes by about $20,000,000.

The New York Times story I have just read says that I offered "an amendment written by Mr. CLANCY, Democrat, from Michigan." The Free Press article says I "presented amendments previously prepared by Mr. CLANCY, but given to the Republicans because of the difficulty Democratic Members have of gaining recognition on the floor"; says also, "It had been agreed that MCLAUGHLIN, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, should present the amendments."

I did obtain recognition, not on account of any "agreement" but because under the rules and uniform custom of the House I was entitled to be recognized. I explained my amendments and their effect very briefly because there was little, if any, opposition to them, but no vote was had that evening because the committee decided to rise. During the brief and confused discussion the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] said he "had an agreement with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN to give him credit for the battle I had carried on for the repeal of these taxes." Mr. Chairman, I never had any agreement or understanding of any nature whatever with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] or with anyone else in regard to "giving me credit" for these amendments or for anything else I might do in the matter of these automobile taxes. I did not seek recognition by the Chairman for the purpose of offering these amendments as a result of any agreement or understanding. I had a clear, well-understood, undisputed right to be recognized as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. It was not necessary for me to ask anyone on the Democratic side of the House for permission or preference. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means not wishing to offer any amendment, I was clearly indisputably entitled to be recognized.

Nor did the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] or anyone else prepare these amendments for me. I prepared them myself.

In the Committee on Ways and Means I moved to reduce the taxes on accessories, tires, repair parts, and so forth, from 5 per cent to 2½ per cent. In committee I sought also reduction of taxes on trucks and wagons.

Some two weeks later in a speech in the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] advocated the reduction I had offered in the committee; that is, reduction from 5 per cent to 2½ per cent; and in the same speech he urged reduction of taxes on trucks and wagons on a basis of their carrying capacity—all below 2 tons capacity.

The gentleman from Michigan kindly offered to assist and did materially assist me in securing data respecting trucks and wagons, and I advised with him as to the amendment I proposed to offer; but I told him I could not accept his theory; that my amendment would not provide for reduction of taxes on a basis of the carrying capacity of the vehicles.

In my interviews with him I told him that it would be necessary for me to insist on an amendment by which the selling price of the chassis would be the basis of such reduction of taxes as ought to be or properly could be made, and I showed him a draft of an amendment I had prepared after conferring with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and other Members who were interested as we were in the matter. Mr. CLANCY approved my amendment and kindly said he would support it. The theory of the amendment was mine; its language, form, and substance were mine. It was my amendment that was offered to and adopted by the House.

The gentleman who wrote the newspaper stories I have read was misinformed. I make this explanation because I feel too much responsibility has been placed upon the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY], a burden which I ought in all fairness largely to bear myself. He has been very kind and very helpful to me, and he ought to be acquitted and entirely relieved of the charge of having drafted my amendments or of having conceived the idea upon which they are based.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order that the gentleman is not in order. Now, the gentleman from Iowa wants to get rid of this bill——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman moved to strike out the last word, which is "taxes," and certainly he is talking about taxes.

Mr. BLANTON. But we have a parliamentarian in the chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan have the same courtesy that he himself secured for Mr. CLANCY a day or two ago, and that he be permitted to proceed out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will couple with that the request that Mr. CLANCY follow him for five minutes, that will be all right.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. CLANCY had time yesterday at the request of Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] asks unanimous consent that for the three minutes remaining the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] may proceed out of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. With the understanding that Mr. CLANCY may have five minutes to reply there will be no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There will be no such understanding.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment for the purpose of making a statement to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is a pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is recognized.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to what has just happened in the committee. I have no objection to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] making a statement to correct the RECORD and get all the credit he can for the automobile amendments or any other kind of an amendment. If it is necessary that he get credit for something in order to stay in Congress, then let him have credit. I had supposed that the position of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] was sufficiently known——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order, and the point of order is that the gentleman is not speaking to the pending amendment. If permission can not be given to Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, it ought not to be given even to the distinguished gentleman from Texas. I make a point of order.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Sustain the point of order, and I will talk on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If you do not mean what you say, that you are going to finish this bill to-day, you are misrepresenting the House, and the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Ohio ought to protect it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will inform me what other methods I can possibly use to get the bill along, I will adopt them.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will tell the gentleman how to do it: Do just what the gentleman from Michigan did a moment ago with me and make a point of order against the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] when he was speaking out of order, and make a point of order against the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON] when he was speaking out of order, and make a point of order against the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] when he was speaking out of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The result would not have been to save time, I will say to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. This is out of order, gentlemen. The Chair has already sustained the point of order. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRAVELING EXPENSES.

SEC. 1101. All officers and employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in addition to their compensation shall receive their necessary traveling expenses and actual expenses incurred for subsistence while traveling on duty and away from their designated stations, in an amount not to exceed $7 per day.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 237, line 18, strike out "$7" and insert in lieu thereof "$5."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 237, line 18, strike out the figure "7" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "5."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we have numerous departments of the Government where there is occasion for their employees to travel in the interest of Government business. The gentleman from Iowa knows, and every member of the Committee on Appropriations knows, that in most of these bills the compensation allowed for subsistence when traveling is fixed at $4 and, in a few cases, at $5 per day.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. If my recollection is correct, in some of the other appropriation bills we have been considering the amount has been fixed at $4, and I was wondering why the gentleman from Texas would not change his amendment so that it would be uniform and insert $4 instead of $5.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to my friend from Oklahoma that I wanted to be consistent. In the majority of instances, in most of the appropriation bills, the maximum is fixed at $4, but there have been two or three bills wherein the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and others have helped to raise it to $5 and I wanted to be as fair with this department as we have been with any of the other departments, hence I put in $5 in lieu of the $7.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. What department permits more than $4? To what department is more than $4 permitted in continental United States? I do not know of any.

Mr. BLANTON. There are one or two instances; for instance, certain employees traveling in Alaska.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, that is different. There is no case in any department in continental United States where over $4 is permitted.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to offer an amendment to change $5 to $4? If he does, I will support it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will be glad to support the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The reason I did not fix it at $4 was that I did not think amending it to $4 had any chance on earth to pass. I fixed it at $5 hoping it would pass and believing that our Republican friends over there on this other side of the aisle would not have the face to allow from several hundred to possibly a thousand or more employees, who could be employed under this bureau, to go out traveling over the United States with more than $5 a day allowed them for expenses in addition to their salaries and transportation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does not the gentleman believe that some latitude should be given to cover actual expenses when an employee is sent to a center where living is expensive?

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know how many employees are employed in this bureau?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know there are too many traveling.

Mr. BLANTON. There are a horde of them traveling all over the United States every day, and you are fixing in this bill to give them $7 a day for subsistence in addition to their transportation and salaries, and it is too much. I have offered an amendment to cut it down from $7 to $5, which is $1 more than the employees of practically every other department receive now for subsistence when away on business. I presume my amendment will be voted down, as this committee seems to have no concern whatever about waste and extravagance. I wanted to raise the question here and place the responsibility on you Republicans, where it justly belongs, in case it is left in this bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER. Do you think you can travel around this country for $5 a day expenses?

Mr. BLANTON. This $5 is in addition to transportation expenses and salary. If I were allowed $5 for subsistence, I would travel on $5, I will say to my friend. I have traveled many times on less than $5 a day for subsistence, and I could do it again, I believe.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. In many places over the United States. You do not have to put up at the Waldorf-Astoria as a Government employee. It is no disgrace to put up at a lower-priced hotel.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman mention one?

Mr. BLANTON. There are many respectable hotels where you can get rooms now for $2.50 a day, even with baths, and they are fairly good hotels. You do not have to put up at such hotels as the Willard or the Raleigh or the Washington or the Hamilton. You can choose a more modest hotel. I know of Congressmen who choose them here in the city. You have too big an idea about this matter of furnishing expenses to officials and employees when the money comes out of the Public Treasury.

What are you going to do about this increase? You are setting a dangerous precedent. You limit the other employees of other departments to $4. Why are you going to allow $7 to these particular employees? What is there about this particular bureau that you should change the system and policy of this Government and pay them $7 for subsistence when you pay others only $4? Are these employees a little more high-toned, so that they have got to have an extra $3 a day more? Are they members of certain high social societies that they must be paid an extra $3 per day more? Why do you not leave them on the same plane that we have left employees of every other department of this Government? I say that you ought to change this from $7 to $5. It is up to the chairman of the committee to change it, and the responsibility will be on his party if he lets this go through. His party leaders are here with him, and he and they can change it if they want to do it. I can not change it, but he can, and if he lets it stay in this bill he and the Republican Party are responsible and nobody else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 58, noes 106.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

EFFECTIVE DATE OF ACT.

SEC. 1103. Except as otherwise provided, this act shall take effect upon its enactment.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The next section is all one integral piece of legislation. It is my purpose to move to strike out the entire title. In the interest of expediting the bill I would suggest that it all be read at one time and have the whole matter before the House subject to amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it would be well to do that.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman means the entire title?

Mr. CRISP. I mean the entire title. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the entire Title XII be read and the whole matter be open for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that Title XII be read in its entirety by the Clerk subject to any amendment that may be proper to any paragraph therein. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read Title XII.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE XII.—REDUCTION OF INCOME TAX PAYABLE IN 1924.

SEC. 1200. (a) Any taxpayer making return for the calendar year 1923 of the taxes imposed by Parts I and II of Title II of the revenue act of 1921 shall be entitled to an allowance by credit or refund of 25 per cent of the amount shown as the tax upon his return.

(b) If the amount shown as the tax upon the return has been paid in full on or before the time of the enactment of this act, the amount of the allowance provided in subdivision (a) shall be credited or refunded as provided in section 281 of this act.

(c) If the taxpayer has elected to pay the tax in installments and, at the time of the enactment of this act, the date prescribed for the payment of the last installment has not yet arrived, the amount of the allowance provided in subdivision (a) shall be prorated to the four installments. The amount so prorated to any installment, the date for payment of which has not arrived, shall be applied in reduction of such installment. The amount so prorated to any installment, the date for payment of which has arrived, shall be credited against the installment next falling due after the enactment of this act.

(d) If the taxpayer has been granted an extension of time for payment of the tax or any installment thereof to a date subsequent to the enactment of this act, the amount of the allowance provided in subdivision (a) shall be applied in reduction of the amount of tax shown upon the return, or, if the tax is to be paid in installments, shall be prorated to the four installments. The amount so prorated to any installment, the date for payment of which has not arrived, shall be applied in reduction thereof. The amount so prorated to any installment, the date for payment of which has arrived, shall be credited against the installment next falling due after the enactment of this act.

(e) Where the taxpayer at the time of the enactment of this act has not paid in full that part of the amount shown as the tax upon the return which should have been paid on or before the time of the enactment of this act, then 25 per cent of any amount already paid shall be applied in reduction of the amount unpaid (such unpaid amount being first reduced by 25 per cent thereof) and any excess shall be credited or refunded as provided in section 281 of this act.

(f) If the correct amount of the tax is determined to be in excess of the amount shown as the tax upon the return, and a deficiency has been assessed before the enactment of this act, then 25 per cent of any amount of such deficiency which has been paid shall be applied in reduction of the amount unpaid (such unpaid amount being first reduced by 25 per cent thereof) and any excess shall be credited or refunded as provided in section 281 of this act. Any deficiency assessed after the enactment of this act shall be reduced by 25 per cent of the amount which would have been assessed as a deficiency if this title had not been enacted.

(g) The allowance provided in subdivision (a) shall be deducted from the tax or deficiency for the purpose of determining the amount on which any interest, penalties, or additions to the tax shall be based.

SEC. 1202. Any taxpayer who has made return of the taxes imposed by Parts I and II of Title II of the revenue act of 1921, for a period of less than a year and beginning and ending within the calendar year 1923, shall be entitled to an allowance by credit or refund of 25 per cent of the amount shown as the tax upon his return. If the correct amount of the tax for such period is determined to be in excess of the amount shown as the tax upon the return, the taxpayer shall be entitled to the benefits of subdivision (f) of section 1200 of this act.

SEC. 1203. The allowance provided in sections 1201 and 1202 shall, under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, be made in a similar manner to that provided in section 1200.

SEC. 1204. The interest provided in section 1019 of this act shall not be allowed in respect of the allowance provided for in this title.

SEC. 1205. The benefits of the allowance provided for in this title shall be granted to the taxpayer under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

SEC. 1206. Terms defined in the revenue act of 1921 shall, when used in this title, have the meaning assigned to such terms in that act.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can not agree on the time for debate on this title. How many gentlemen want to speak on that side?

Mr. CRISP. So far as I know there are only two. I want to move to strike out the title and would like five minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNELL] has a perfecting amendment and he would like five minutes.

Mr. DENISON. I want five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. I think the time of recognition should be left to the Chair.

Mr. CRISP. That will be satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on Title XII and amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DENISON. Reserving the right to object, is it understood that I shall have five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not make any promises to recognize gentlemen. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire Title XII.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning on page 238, line 4, strike out all of Title XII.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have sent to the desk a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That will have priority of vote, but the gentleman from Georgia has priority of recognition.

Mr. CRISP. Gentlemen of the committee, the title just read proposes to give retroactive benefit of 25 per cent tax reduction to income-tax payers for the calendar year of 1923. The amount involved in it is about $223,000,000. This House is in favor of adjusted compensation for the soldiers, and whenever that proposition is made you hear the objection that you have no money to pay it. Here is a proposition that proposes to give a cash bonus amounting to $223,000,000 to the business men, the income-tax payers, for the year 1923. Now, why do I say it is a cash bonus? We all know that the business men pass on the greater part of their taxes in overhead charges to the consumers. My distinguished friend from New York [Mr. SNYDER]—and I have high regard for him—who is a sensible, prosperous, and successful business man, said on the floor of this House that he in his business passed on 90 per cent of the taxes to his consumers. The President in New York the other day in a speech gave an illustration of the farmer buying a pair of shoes, and said that the farmer paid all of the taxes that were passed on to him. The Secretary of the Treasury in all the arguments for 25 per cent surtax said that the consumer pays the tax.

There is no provision in the bill to remit to the consumer who purchased the goods from the business men in the calendar year of 1923 the excess price they paid the business men on account of income taxes for the goods that they bought in 1923. It is a pure proposition to remit to the taxpayers of this country the taxes they have already collected out of the public and allow them to retain this additional profit in their treasury amounting to $223,000,000. And yet you say you have not funds to grant adjusted compensation to the soldiers of this country who saved the Nation. Gentlemen, I do not believe you will do it.

Several years ago a proposition came into this Congress to make retroactive the excess-profit taxes. The able and distinguished gentleman from Illinois, who has gone to his reward, Mr. Mann, jumped on it as unjustifiable and indefensible to remit to these people the bonus money they had already collected out of the consuming public. This is identically that proposition.

This proposition was not in the original Mellon bill. Our distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, says that he is the father of this. It simply proposes to give to the business men, the men who are best able to pay taxes, $223,000,000, and I do not believe you will do it. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: Page 238, line 10, after the word "return," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That such allowance by credit or refund to any taxpayer shall not exceed a total of $400."

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is a compromise between the bill and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. I have taken the figure of $400 somewhat arbitrarily. It represents the ultimate amount that any taxpayer with an income up to $20,000 would get under a 25 per cent reduction. Under the present tax rates, anybody with an income up to $20,000 has to pay a tax not exceeding $2,000, and a refund of $400 would cover everybody who has an income of $20,000 or less, which is the same figure put in the bill as the maximum of the earned income. Beyond that, no matter what the income of the taxpayer might be, he would be limited to $400 in the return, so that by this the 6,600,000 taxpayers would be taken care of as against 53,000 who would not benefit, as they do under the proposed law.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty with the gentleman's figure is that there are only three and a half million, approximately, who pay taxes, while there are some 7,000,000 returns filed.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Very well. The same proportion holds. This provision of mine would return to these people, who directly pay the taxes, 25 per cent reduction. On the authority of Secretary Mellon and the authority of President Coolidge you should not return to withholding agents, and that is practically what the high taxpayers are. They were withholding agents who collected the taxes from the people who dealt with them. It is now proposed to return and let them keep 25 per cent of the taxes, whereas if you adopt my amendment—and I have offered it in the utmost sincerity, having discussed it with many Members, and having given some study to it—those people who out of their earned income actually paid the money out of their own pockets would get the 25 per cent reduction up to incomes of $20,000, and it would limit all of the other taxpayers to only $400 refund. I believe my amendment is a fair compromise between the provisions of the bill and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. I am opposed to his amendment because it will accomplish nothing. I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. I had intended to offer that amendment myself; but as he is a member of the committee, he was entitled to first recognition. I do not think this title has any proper place in the bill. I can think of only one reason for it, and that is political. There are two good reasons against it. The gentleman from Georgia gave them perhaps better than I can.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] on the second day of the debate, I believe, quoted from a number of authorities, political economists, specialists on the subject of taxation, all of whom said that all taxes, and especially all income taxes, are passed on to the consumers. Every expert in this House who has spoken during this debate, without any exception, has asserted the same principle—that taxes are passed on to the consumer—and I think we may as well accept that as a settled proposition. Those who are to pay income taxes for this year have already adjusted their businesses upon the basis of the present tax rates. They have anticipated that they would have to pay their income taxes under existing rates, and they have collected the taxes as far as they could from the consumers. The only ones I know of to whom this would not apply are those who have to pay an income tax on their salaries.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I have not the time. I do not think we ought to now make a present to those who are to pay these taxes of this $332,000,000, instead of $326,000,000, as stated by the gentleman from Georgia. I think we ought to go ahead and collect this year's taxes and hold the money in the Treasury, because the people who really have to pay it have already paid it, and the Government ought to keep it. [Applause.]

I want to speak briefly of the other reason why I do not think this provision ought to remain in the bill. The time has come when we have to settle this question of adjusted compensation for the ex-service men. Congress can not avoid that question any longer, and we can not pass adjusted-compensation legislation without having some cash with which to pay it. We are here talking about the proposition of returning back to the business men of the country $332,000,000 which they have already collected from the consumers instead of retaining it in the Treasury and having it available to meet a part of the first cash that will be required if we pass the adjusted compensation law. In that connection, I take this opportunity, with the indulgence of the House, to say that there is not any doubt in my judgment, but that this Congress is going to pass an adjusted compensation bill. It is going to do it just as certain as day follows night, and it will be done within the next two weeks. It will be passed by this House by an overwhelming majority. [Applause.] It is also going to pass the Senate by an overwhelming majority and it will be sent to the President. I do not think he will veto it. The President has not said that he would veto a bill of that kind. I do not think he will. I think it will become a law with his approval. But if he should veto it, it will come back to this House and more than two-thirds of this House are going to vote to pass it over his veto. [Applause.]

I think the same thing will happen in the Senate, and then we are going to have to raise the money to pay it. Here is an opportunity to meet that problem at least in part. Why not let us do it? Let us not resort to this provision in the bill to play a little politics. It is, of course, a nice thing to hand this money back to the income-tax payers. I will get some of it myself if this provision of the bill is not stricken out; and I am one of those few who can not pass it on to others, because I am working for a salary. The income tax that I pay comes out of the salary that I get as a Member of Congress. It is a very nice thing to hand $332,000,000 back to the business interests. Of course, they would all like to have it, but there is no justification for it. They have all adjusted their business to the present tax law, and they have already collected the money with which to pay the taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, my position with reference to adjusted-compensation legislation is well known in this House, and my attitude toward the ex-service men is just as well known. The committee of which I am a member reported every law that has been passed by Congress for the benefit of the ex-service men while they were in the service and for their benefit and the benefit of their families and dependents since they left the service; and I have supported every one of these measures. I voted for the adjusted compensation bill in the Sixty-seventh Congress. I was one of the first Members that spoke for it in this Chamber. I voted to pass it over the President's veto.

In Illinois we passed a State bonus law that has cost us $50,000,000. I spoke and voted for that measure. I have repeatedly stated on public occasions that I am still in favor of the enactment of an adjusted compensation law by the Federal Government and that I believe it should be passed as soon as possible.

Our Government has gone too far in adjusting losses that have resulted from the late war to now refuse to adjust as far as possible the meager compensation that was paid to those who went to the front. We have adjusted the losses sustained by the railroads to the extent of over a billion dollars. We have adjusted the losses sustained by industrial concerns who had contracts or entered upon extensive enterprises in contemplation of the demands of the Government as a result of the war. The ex-service men feel that we should adjust their compensation, and I think they are right. I am going to vote for an adjusted compensation bill when it is presented, and will vote to pass it over the veto if it should be vetoed.

Notwithstanding my record, which has been consistently favorable to the interests of the ex-service men, and although my attitude ought to have been well known, some persons for political reasons have recently spread the report in my district that my attitude toward adjusted compensation was uncertain. They have even told that I voted against the adjusted compensation bill in the last Congress, and as a result of these untrue reports I have received a number of telegrams and letters from the ex-service men of my district. This, I presume, is an injustice which many of you have had to contend with and which all who are in public office must some time suffer. I shall ignore it, for I know that within a very short time my record here will convince my constituents better than anything I could say of my continued interest in the welfare of the ex-service men of the country.

And now we have an opportunity to save $332,000,000 for the Treasury with which to meet the first cash payments that may be required under the adjusted compensation law, if one is enacted. If we leave this provision in the bill, it will amount practically to the Government handing over to the income-tax payers a bonus of that amount, because, as I have said, they have already collected it from the others so far as they could do so. I do not think we ought to do that. We are doing a splendid thing for the income-tax payers of the country by the radical reductions in the income-tax rates in other provisions of the bill. That will not only be a good thing for them but for the entire country. Let us strike out this provision of the bill and collect this money and get ready to settle, as far as we can, our obligation to the ex-service men.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I hope that nothing that I say will be construed in any way as a reflection upon my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. Yet I can not but remark on the extraordinary change of front of gentlemen on the other side who have all along been contending that the income taxes could not be passed on and who now say that they are passed on, and that, therefore, they do not want a reduction made in the taxes to be paid this year. Members, of course, understand that this provision does not apply to corporation taxes but merely to the personal income taxes and these taxes can not be passed on.

There are not more than two or three men on the side of the gentleman from Georgia that believe in that doctrine. Every man in this House knows that I have never believed in it, and I have contended against it before.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENNISON] said that the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] cited authorities showing that the personal income tax is passed on. I read the speech of the gentleman from Ohio with great care. The opinions which he cited were taken from works written before the income tax was instituted. They did not contain the slightest reference to income taxes.

In this day I do not know of an economist of any standing who claims that personal income taxes are passed on. Anyone who advanced such theories in England would be ridiculed. Indeed, it is perfectly evident that if personal income taxes are passed on to the final consumer the income tax ought to be taken off and instead of the complicated system of income taxes under which taxes are so often evaded we should have a sales tax. There is no escape from the logic of this position. Some two years ago a campaign was instituted all over the country, and since followed up by page advertisements, costing enormous amounts totaling altogether many millions of dollars, in an attempt to make the public believe that these taxes were passed on to the final consumer. As a result, many have come to believe in this doctrine and repeat it in good faith. There is no question but that the ultimate object and purpose of those who have been carrying on this propaganda is to do away with the income tax entirely and substitute consumption taxes instead.

The technical features of this matter may not be fully understood, but it should be apparent to everyone that if these taxes were passed on to the final consumer those who are now paying them would not be spending so much money and making such a tremendous effort as has recently been done in flooding the country with propaganda.

Prof. Thomas S. Adams, professor of economics at Yale University, has been quoted as a high authority on taxation by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS]. On this question he says:

Taxes on profits do not shift to consumers. Most economists hold that income and profit taxes are shifted only in part, and economic theory leads to the conclusion, I think, that income taxes, particularly taxes on differential net income or excess profits, are unusually difficult to pass along. (Needed Tax Reform, p. 21.)

The repeated charge that business men figure income taxes as part of their cost and then charge the customary percentage of profit on the increased cost basis is next to absurd. If it were true, it would only be necessary for Congress to increase the income and excess profits taxes in order to increase business profits. Taxes were responsible only in minor degree for the high cost of living. The cost of living went up before tax rates were increased, it stayed up when tax rates were reduced, and it will come down in the future whether tax rates be increased or reduced. (Quarterly Journal of Economics, August, 1921, p. 550.)

The National Industrial Conference Board, as a result of an investigation made by its staff economic counsel, and careful research, reported:

If the tax on net profits is a general one, sound economic thinking must inevitably lead to the conclusion that the tax can hardly be shifted. Net profits constitute a surplus of price over costs, and since the net profits tax reaches this surplus, it is manifest that the tax can not affect costs. The producer almost invariably bears the burden of the tax under ordinary conditions.

The Government has for several years been refunding hundreds of millions in taxes erroneously collected. If they have already been passed on to the consumer, these refunds ought not to be made. In this particular case the Government has not collected the money, and the passage of this bill settles that if collected it will be refunded.

If such taxes can be passed on, every certified accountant who ever made up an account for a corporation has made up his account wrongly, because he never took into consideration the income taxes of gentlemen who owned stock in that corporation, nor would he, if he were making up the balance sheet of a partnership, do anything different. No balance sheet of any business is ever made up so as to include individual income taxes.

Something has been said in this connection about the soldiers' adjusted compensation. There is no man on this floor that is more loyal to the principle of adjusted compensation than I am. [Applause.] Every Member of this House knows that I was chairman of the subcommittee that wrote the former bill. I assisted in every way possible in putting it through the House and passing over the President's veto. I made a speech in favor of it in which I made my position clear, and I now stand where I always stood upon it. But the adoption of this provision will not affect the soldiers' adjusted compensation in the least. It is believed that this bill will take out of the Treasury $232,000,000. After all is taken out including the amount of excise taxes repealed there will still remain under any calculation more than $100,000,000 surplus for this calendar year. Let me say to gentlemen on this side and gentlemen on the other side that I have in my possession a letter from the Secretary of War telling us that when the Adjusted Compensation Act is passed it could not possibly be put in effect until nine months thereafter. You will therefore have $100,000,000 surplus on hand at the end of this calendar year to start the bonus. It will be more than anything we will authorize for the next year on account of the bonus. You will have on hand in the Treasury enough money to pay the first year of adjusted compensation. If you do not have it after that, it will depend on the form of this revenue bill, after it is passed by the Senate and agreed to in conference and ratified finally by both House and Senate.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. It has been repeatedly stated on that side of the House that if this bill passes there will be a deficit of from $300,000,000 to $600,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not responsible for that statement.

Mr. HASTINGS. You do not agree to that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I agree that it will produce a deficit as it now stands, but I expect to see the bill amended so that it will not before it finally passes this House. In any event it does not affect that question in the least. The gentleman is talking about a matter that the provision under discussion does not affect, and which does not affect this provision; that is, taxes to be paid in 1925 and thereafter. We are talking now about the taxes that are to be paid this year. There is not any reason in the world why they should not be taken off.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not want to object, but would there be any time left?

The CHAIRMAN. The situation is this, gentlemen: There has now been used 17 minutes. Thirteen minutes remain. There are two preferential motions to be voted on and another one that is still pending. With the debate on that, it will take the entire 13 minutes, so that if there is an extension of time the limit should be extended. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. STENGLE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will not object to answering a few questions as he goes on, I shall not object.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on agreeing to the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 153.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers a perfecting amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIMMONS: Page 238, line 7, after the word "by," strike out "Part I" and insert "Sec. 210, Part II."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think I can state this amendment very briefly. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has proposed an amendment that strikes out this entire title on the ground that these taxes have already been passed on to the consuming public and that this is a bonus given to the big taxpayer. The payer of a tax on a small income who pays a normal tax, in my judgment, has not been able and is not able to pass on that tax to anyone else. He pays it. The amendment which I offer will limit the provisions of this title to the normal tax only, giving 25 per cent reduction to those who pay the normal tax. It will leave the surtaxes as they are now, so that the argument of the gentleman from Georgia will apply to the amendment that I am offering. By this amendment we will be able to give this 25 per cent reduction to the taxpayer who pays the normal income tax, a tax which he is not able to pass on, and a reduction to which he is entitled.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the committee only a couple of minutes to make a brief observation. Historically it is not true that the 1923 taxes have been passed on or could have been passed on by the taxpayer. These taxes will be assessed and determined according to the act of 1921. That act was passed on November 23, 1921, and went back in its operation to January 1, 1921. So that under that act the 1921 taxes, paid in 1922, could not have been passed on prior to the passage of the act.

The act of 1918 was passed on February 4, 1919, and was made effective January 1, 1918. The act of 1917 was passed on October 3, 1917, and was made effective on January 1, 1917. The act of 1916 was passed on September 8, 1916, and was made effective on January 1, 1916; and the first act, which carried a very small income tax, was passed in October, 1913, and went back in its operation and in the determination of income to March 1, 1913. Therefore, from the very beginning it has not been historically true, and it is not true as a fact, that the taxes paid in a particular year were passed on during the preceding year for which the taxes are being paid.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in a very few moments this bill will come to its voting stage in the House, and in just a word I want to explain the parliamentary situation.

The bill having been reported to the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] will move the previous question on such amendments as were adopted in committee up to, but not including, the Garner amendment. If the previous question be voted—and I think no one will object to it—those amendments will be disposed of. Thereupon the question comes on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. I am not advised as to whether the gentleman from Texas proposes to move the previous question or not. If he should, it would be very vital for those who desire to vote for some substitute for the Garner rate to vote down the previous question. If, however, the gentleman from Texas does not move it, or some other gentleman on that side, then the Garner rates will be open to amendment.

As I understand it, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] will offer as a substitute for the Garner rate the rate as substantially contained in the bill reported by the committee, the maximum rate of 25 per cent. This will give an opportunity for the gentlemen who desire to be recorded in favor of the 25 per cent surtax to so record themselves. In the event of the defeat of the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon—which seems likely—I shall then offer the amendment which was yesterday printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The issue then will be between the rates as proposed by the gentleman from Texas and the rates proposed by this substitute.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Before we take that vote or go into the House, would the gentleman mind giving us whatever information he has had from the White House as to the President's opinion of the compromise plan?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would have no objection whatever to telling the gentleman that I have received no intimation whatever.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Has the gentleman talked to the White House about the letter that the President proposed to write to the gentleman from Iowa or the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have not, because I have no knowledge of any such letter. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMMONS) there were—ayes 120, noes 140.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other perfecting amendments to be offered? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 145, noes 150.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. CRISP.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 145, noes 181.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6715) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on all amendments to the bill H. R. 6715, the revenue bill, up to and including line 17 on page 29.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GREEN of Iowa moves the previous question on all amendments up to and including line 17 on page 29.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, just to get the ruling of the Chair, I make the point of order that it is improper to separate a motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the first amendments?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on amendment No. 31, page 152, relating to the tax on cigarettes.

The SPEAKER. That is not one of the amendments. These are only the first six amendments. Is there a separate vote demanded on any of these amendments?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on page 26, line 9, the Garner amendment to the committee amendment which removes stock dividends from the term "capital assets."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks a separate vote on the amendment referred to. Is a separate vote demanded on any other of these amendments?

Mr. TREADWAY. Also, Mr. Speaker, on page 28, at the end of the line, an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] with reference to earned income.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry. I want to ask for separate votes on amendments 5 and 6 on page 21, and I can not tell whether they are covered by the previous question or not.

The SPEAKER. Yes; they were included.

Mr. BEGG. Then I ask for a separate vote on those.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any of the other amendments? If not, the Chair will put them en bloc. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The question was taken, and the other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 4: Page 26, line 9, after the word "property," strike out the remainder of the line and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, that was a committee amendment. That is not the one they wanted the vote on.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is the amendment following the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the amendment to which the gentleman refers was an amendment to the committee amendment, and of course no separate vote can be had on that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It was an amendment following the committee amendment, as I recall it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed it was in addition to the amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, amendment by Mr. GARNER of Texas to the committee amendment——

The SPEAKER. If it is an amendment to the committee amendment, no separate vote can be had on it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I withdraw the request on that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the request, and the Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Since the other amendments were voted on en gross and this amendment as amended has not been adopted, should it not be voted on?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair thinks the gentleman is right.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 5: At the end of line 6, on page 28, insert "earned income also means reasonable compensation or allowance for personal services, where income is derived from combined personal services and capital in the prosecution by unincorporated persons of agricultural or other business."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I demand a division, Mr. Speaker.

While the committee was dividing, the following occurred:

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I will ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment so that we can have a record vote.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We will not ask for the yeas and nays over here, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. We will.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 267, nays 144, answered "present" 2, not voting 18, as follows:

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Gallivan	Luce

NOT VOTING—18.

Berger	Funk	Kopp	Thomas, Ky.
Black, Tex.	Geran	Reed, W. Va.	Vare
Buchanan	Hammer	Rosenbloom	Wilson, La.
Corning	Hersey	Rouse
Dempsey	Kahn	Taylor, Colo.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Rouse (for) with Mr. Kahn (against).
Mr. Gallivan (for) with Mr. Vare (against).
Mr. Wilson of Louisiana (for) with Mr. Funk (against).
Mr. Berger (for) with Mr. Reed of West Virginia (against).
Mr. Buchanan (for) with Mr. Hersey (against).
Mr. Black of Texas (for) with Mr. Luce (against).
Mr. Thomas of Kentucky (for) with Mr. Dempsey (against).
Mr. Geran (for) with Mr. Rosenbloom (against).

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, on this roll call I voted in the affirmative. I am paired with Mr. VARE, who, if he were present, would vote "no." Therefore I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. This completes the amendments on which a separate vote was demanded.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to perfect sections 210, 211, and 266, subdivision (c).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment to the Garner amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A paliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. On what page of the bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is not in the bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a substitute for the Garner amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Garner amendment is in the bill up to date.

The SPEAKER. Not in the printed bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Garner amendment was submitted in the form of a printed bill. This is a substitute. For convenience, it refers to the printed Garner amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY to the Garner amendment: Page 1 of amendment No. 7 (the Garner amendment), line 8, after the word "every," strike out the remainder of the line, and all of line 9, and pages 2 to 7, inclusive, of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"individual (except as provided in subdivision (b) of this section) a normal tax of 6 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216, except that in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such excess amount shall be 3 per cent.

"(b) In lieu of the tax imposed by subdivision (a) there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every nonresident alien individual, a resident of a contiguous country, a normal tax equal to the sum of the following:

"(1) Three per cent of the amount of the net incomes attributable to wages, salaries, professional fees, or other amounts received as compensation for personal services actually performed in the United States in excess of the credits provided in subdivisions (d) and (e) of section 216; but the amount taxable at such 3 per cent rate shall not exceed $4,000; and

"(2) Six per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the sum of (A) the amount taxed under paragraph (1) plus (B) the credits provided in section 216."

Strike out lines 19 to 25, inclusive, page 30; lines 1 to 24, inclusive, page 31; lines 1 to 26, inclusive, page 32; lines 1 to 7, inclusive, page 33; and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SURTAX.

SEC. 211. (a) In lieu of the tax imposed by section 211 of the revenue act of 1921, but in addition to the normal tax imposed by section 210 of this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

"One per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $10,000 and does not exceed $12,000;

"Two per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $12,000 and does not exceed $16,000;

"Three per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $16,000 and does not exceed $18,000;

"Four per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $18,000 and does not exceed $20,000;

"Five per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $22,000;

"Six per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $22,000 and does not exceed $24,000;

"Seven per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $24,000 and does not exceed $26,000;

"Eight per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $26,000 and does not exceed $28,000;

"Nine per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $28,000 and does not exceed $30,000;

"Ten per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $30,000 and does not exceed $32,000;

"Eleven per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $32,000 and does not exceed $34,000;

"Twelve per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $34,000 and does not exceed $36,000;

"Thirteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $36,000 and does not exceed $38,000;

"Fourteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $38,000 and does not exceed $40,000;

"Fifteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $40,000 and does not exceed $46,000;

"Sixteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $46,000 and does not exceed $52,000;

"Seventeen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $52,000 and does not exceed $58,000;

"Eighteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $58,000 and does not exceed $64,000;

"Nineteen per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $64,000 and does not exceed $70,000;

"Twenty per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $70,000 and does not exceed $76,000;

"Twenty-one per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $76,000 and does not exceed $82,000;

"Twenty-two per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $82,000 and does not exceed $88,000;

"Twenty-three per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $88,000 and does not exceed $94,000;

"Twenty-four per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $94,000 and does not exceed $100,000;

"Twenty-five per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $100,000.

"(b) In the case of a bona fide sale of mines, oil or gas wells, or any interest therein, where the principal value of the property has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, the portion of the tax imposed by this section attributable to such sale shall not exceed 10 per cent of the selling price of such property or interest."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Does this proposed amendment follow exactly the provisions that were in the bill as reported from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendment changes some 12 or 14 brackets between the upper and lower brackets.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. In other words, you changed the Mellon plan to the point where you can get in from a parliamentary standpoint?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have stated what we have done.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Is this the Hawley plan, the Longworth plan, or the Mellon plan, or what is it?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the amendment he proposes will in effect give to those Members of the House who wish to vote that way a chance to vote for the administration measure known as the Mellon plan.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was about to say when the gentleman interrupted that you can vote directly for the Mellon plan making such changes in a few brackets as will make it a parliamentary proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Hooray! [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wish the gentleman would withhold that; I just want to make an observation on the statement of the gentleman from Illinois. I understand that this is a further demonstration of the effort of that side of the House to pyramid their incapacities. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. HAWLEY. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 261, answered "present" 3, not voting 14, as follows:

NOT VOTING—14.

Berger	Hersey	Rouse	Wilson, La.
Black, Tex.	Kahn	Taylor, Colo.	Yates
Dempsey	Kopp	Thomas, Ky.
Funk	Reed, W. Va.	Vare

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Luce (for) with Mr. Black of Texas (against).

Mr. Vare (for) with Mr. Gallivan (against).

Mr. Kahn (for) with Mr. Rouse (against).
Mr. Reed of West Virginia (for) with Mr. Berger (against).
Mr. Dempsey (for) with Mr. Thomas of Kentucky (against).
Mr. Hersey (for) with Mr. Wilson of Louisiana (against).

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, on this question and on all the major questions connected with this bill I have agreed to pair with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BLACK, who has been obliged to return home by reason of the death of his brother. I voted "aye," and I ask that my vote may be withdrawn and that I may be recorded as "present." If Mr. BLACK were here, he would vote "no."

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. VARE. If he were present, he would vote "aye." I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. ROUSE, of Kentucky, is unavoidably absent, and he requested me to say that if he were present he would vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following substitute for the Garner amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LONGWORTH offers the following substitute for the Garner amendment to sections 210 and 211 and subdivision (c) of section 216:

"On page 29 strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 to 18, inclusive, on page 30, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 210. (a) In lieu of the tax imposed by section 210 of the revenue act of 1921, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual (except as provided in subdivision (b) of this section) a normal tax of 6 per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216, except that in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such excess amount shall be 2 per centum and upon the next $4,000 of such excess amount shall be 5 per centum;

"(b) In lieu of the tax imposed by subdivision (a), there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every nonresident alien individual, a resident of a contiguous country, a normal tax equal to the sum of the following:

"(1) Two per centum of the amount by which the part of the net income attributable to wages, salaries, professional fees, or other amounts received as compensation for personal services actually performed in the United States exceeds the credits provided in subdivisions (d) and (e) of section 216; but the amount taxable at such 2 per centum rate shall not exceed $4,000;

"(2) Five per centum of the amount by which such part of the net income exceeds the sum of (A) the credits provided in subdivisions (d) and (e) of section 216, plus (B) $4,000; but the amount taxable at such 5 per centum rate shall not exceed $4,000; and

"(3) Six per centum of the amount of the net income in excess of the sum of (A) the amount taxed under paragraphs (1) and (2), plus (B) the credits provided in section 216."

Also strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, on page 30; lines 1 to 24, inclusive, page 31; and lines 1 to 26, inclusive, page 32, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 211. (a) In lieu of the tax imposed by section 211 of the revenue act of 1921, but in addition to the normal tax imposed by section 210 of this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a surtax equal to three-fourths of the sum of the following:

"Two per centum of the amount by which the net income exceeds $10,000 and does not exceed $12,000;

"Three per centum of the amount by which the net income exceeds $12,000 and does not exceed $14,000;

"Fifty per centum of the amount by which the net income exceeds $200,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the Longworth substitute that in effect it is a revenue bill and the rules of the House require that a revenue bill which appears on the Union Calendar shall be framed in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The only exception is where new matter is offered in a motion to recommit. This is not a motion to recommit. It is an attempt to frame a revenue bill in the House, which can not be done, as the rules require it to be framed in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Where was the Garner amendment framed?

Mr. BLANTON. In the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, where it should be framed. I make the point or order that this is an attempt to frame a revenue bill in the House. This Longworth substitute is a new revenue plan and has not been considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where it could be debated under the rules of the House and where the membership would have a right to analyze it and perfect it by amendments.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman anything further to offer?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order sincerely, believing that it is well taken. Under the rules of the House the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has the inherent right to pass upon such a new revenue proposition as is now proposed. This is going behind the rules and setting them aside.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's argument seems to go to the point that the House has not the right to amend this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. It has, certainly, on a motion to recommit. But this is an entirely new revenue proposition about which we know nothing, and we are entitled to debate it in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House always has the right to amend. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, by this substitute gentlemen will have an opportunity of deciding between a well-considered Republican income tax reduction plan, which will raise the necessary revenue, and an ill-considered Democratic, makeshift plan, which will cause a tremendous deficit in the revenue. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 216, nays 199, answered "present" 2, not voting 14, as follows:

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Gallivan Luce

NOT VOTING—14.

Berger	Funk	Reed, W. Va.	Vare
Black, Tex.	Hersey	Rouse	Wilson, La.
Buchanan	Kahn	Taylor, Colo.
Dempsey	Kopp	Thomas, Ky.

So the Longworth amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Luce (for) with Mr. Black of Texas (against).
Mr. Vare (for) with Mr. Gallivan (against).
Mr. Kahn (for) with Mr. Rouse (against).
Mr. Reed of West Virginia (for) with Mr. Berger (against).
Mr. Funk (for) with Mr. Wilson of Louisiana (against).
Mr. Dempsey (for) with Mr. Thomas of Kentucky (against).
Mr. Hersey (for) with Mr. Buchanan (against).

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, on this amendment I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. VARE, who is not here. If he were present, he would vote "aye." Therefore I desire to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recorded as "present."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, on this question I voted "aye." I am paired with Mr. BLACK of Texas. If he were here he would vote "no." I ask that my vote may be withdrawn and that I may be recorded as "present."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name will be recorded as "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there were several informal amendments made in places to conform with the Garner amendment when adopted in the bill, amendments that now in conformity with the action of the House should be corrected; that is, they should be voted down to correspond with the action of the House. I ask unanimous consent that I may now submit these amendments to the vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the following amendments be submitted together.

Mr. BLANTON. We want to know what they are.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report them separately.

The Clerk read as follows:

The following amendments were offered by the committee, being made necessary by the adoption of the Garner amendment changing the normal tax and the personal exemption:

Page 62, line 8, striking out "paragraph (1) of subdivision (b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subdivision (c)."

Page 66, line 10, striking out "$2,000" and inserting "$3,000."

Page 68, line 2, striking out "$1,000" and inserting "$2,000."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, these amendments, as I said, were inserted originally in Committee of the Whole to conform with the Garner amendment. Now, to conform with the action of the House just taken, they should be voted down.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering them together?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have no objection to considering them. The amendments ought to be adopted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They ought not to be adopted.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I mean the amendment you propose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not proposed any amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman desires that these amendments be voted on together and voted down?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. Under the plan in the bill we gave an exemption of $3,000 to the married and $2,000 to the unmarried person. Now you have restored the former exemptions. This is merely to conform to the Longworth amendment.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I can not consent to that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Well, I consent. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were rejected.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, is a separate vote desired on any amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, since objection is made, I move the previous question on the bill and all remaining amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on amendment No. 31, page 152, known as the cigarette tax.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, No. 16, on page 100, line 12, introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], known as the "Peeping Tom amendment," and the one on the same subject offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on amendment No. 7, page 125, line 20, being an amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], on page 201, beginning with line 16, to strike out the paragraph, being the tax on checks and promissory notes; also on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN], on page 207, line 7, inserting the words "with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The SPEAKER. The clerks at the desk were unable to hear the gentleman's last request.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will send these to the desk, marked.

The SPEAKER. What was the gentleman's last request? We have them all except the last one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 205, line 7, amendment offered by Mr. LARSEN of Georgia, inserting the words "with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On page 201, beginning with line 16, the amendment offered by Mr. COLLIER.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLIER: Page 201, beginning with line 16, strike out paragraph 5, being the stamp tax on drafts and checks, agreed to February 28.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment adopted on page 150, offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], imposing a tax on gifts.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will submit the other amendments en gross. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Moore amendment: Page 100, line 12, after the word "President," insert the following:

"Provided, That the Ways and Means Committee of the House or the Finance Committee of the Senate, or a special committee of the House or Senate, shall have the right to call on the Secretary of the Treasury, and it shall be his duty to furnish any data of any character contained in or shown by the returns or any of them that may be required by the committee; and any such committee shall have the right, acting directly as a committee or by and through such examiners or agents as it may designate or appoint, to inspect all or any of the returns at such times and in such manner as it may determine; and any relevant or useful information thus obtained may be submitted by the committee obtaining it to the Senate or the House, or to both the Senate and House, as the case may be."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRISP) there were—ayes 238, noes 124.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BARKLEY: Amendment No. 17, on page 100, lines 13 and 14, after the word "State" in line 13, strike out the words "imposing an income tax."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARKLEY) there were—ayes 222, noes 179.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSEYER: Strike out all beginning with line 20, page 125, to and including line 22, page 126, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"One per cent of the amount of the net estate not in excess of $50,000;

"Two per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $100,000;

"Three per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

"Four per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $250,000;

"Six per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

"Nine per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $450,000 and does not exceed $750,000;

"Twelve per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $750,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;

"Fifteen per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $1,500,000;

"Eighteen per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,500,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

"Twenty-one per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

"Twenty-four per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

"Twenty-seven per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000;

"Thirty per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $5,000,000 and does not exceed $8,000,000;

"Thirty-five per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $10,000,000;

"Forty per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $10,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 261, noes 107.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 150, after line 24, insert new sections, as follows:

"SEC. 319. On and after January 1, 1924, a tax equal to the sum of the following is hereby imposed upon the transfer of property by gift, whether made directly or indirectly, by every person, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States:

"One per cent of the amount of gifts not in excess of $50,000;

"Two per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $50,000 and do not exceed $100,000;

"Three per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $100,000 and do not exceed $150,000;

"Four per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $150,000 and do not exceed $250,000;

"Six per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $250,000 and do not exceed $450,000;

"Nine per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $450,000 and do not exceed $750,000;

"Twelve per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $750,000 and do not exceed $1,000,000;

"Fifteen per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $1,000,000 and do not exceed $1,500,000;

"Eighteen per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $1,500,000 and do not exceed $2,000,000;

"Twenty-one per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $2,000,000 and do not exceed $3,000,000;

"Twenty-four per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $3,000,000 and do not exceed $4,000,000;

"Twenty-seven per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $4,000,000 and do not exceed $5,000,000;

"Thirty per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $5,000,000 and do not exceed $8,000,000;

"Thirty-five per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $8,000,000 and do not exceed $10,000,000;

"Forty per cent of the amount by which the gifts exceed $10,000,000.

"SEC. 320. The amount of the gifts subject to the tax imposed by section 319, in the case of residents, shall be the sum of all the gifts made by such resident during the calendar year, and in the case of nonresidents the sum of all gifts so made of property situated within the United States. If the gift is made in property, the fair market value thereof at the date of the gift shall be considered the amount of the gift subject to the tax.

"Where property is sold or exchanged for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, then the amount by which the fair market value of the property exceeded the consideration received shall, for the purpose of the tax imposed by section 319, be deemed a gift and shall be included in computing the amount of gifts made during the calendar year.

"SEC. 321. For the purpose of this tax the amount of the gift subject to the tax imposed by section 319 shall be determined—

"(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the total amount of such gifts—

"(1) An exemption of $50,000;

"(2) The amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year to or for any donee or purpose specified in paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) of section 303, or to the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act;

"(3) Gifts the aggregate amount of which to any one person does not exceed $500.

"(b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the total amount of such gifts—

"(1) The amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year to or for any donee or purpose specified in paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) of section 303, or to the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act;

"(2) Gifts the aggregate amount of which to any one person does not exceed $500.

"SEC. 322. In case a tax has been imposed under section 319 upon any gift, and thereafter upon the death of the donor the amount thereof is required by any provision of this title to be included in the gross estate of the decedent then there shall be credited against and applied in reduction of the estate tax, which would otherwise be chargeable against the estate of the decedent under the provisions of section 301, an amount equal to the tax paid with respect to such gift; and in the event the donor has in any year paid the tax imposed by section 319 with respect to a gift or gifts which upon the death of the donor must be included in his gross estate and a gift or gifts not required to be so included, then the amount of the tax which shall be deemed to have been paid with respect to the gift or gifts required to be so included shall be that proportion of the entire tax paid on account of all such gifts which the amount of the gift or gifts required to be so included bears or bear to the total amount of gifts in that year.

"SEC. 323. Any person who within the year 1924 or any calendar year thereafter makes any gift or gifts of an aggregate value in excess of $10,000 shall, on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of the calendar year, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, listing and setting forth therein all gifts and contributions by him made during such calendar year, and the fair market value thereof when made, and also all sales and exchanges of property owned by him made within such year for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, stating therein the fair market value of the property so sold or exchanged and that of the consideration received by him, both as of the date of such sale or exchange.

"SEC. 324. The tax imposed by section 319 shall be paid by the donor on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of the calendar year, and shall be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject, in so far as applicable, to the same provisions of law as the tax imposed by section 301."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 31, page 152 of the bill: Amendment by Mr. GARNER of Texas: Page 152, line 8, strike out "$3" and insert "$4."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, that is the amendment which adds an additional tax of $1 on cigarettes?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 258, answered "present" 1, not voting 19, as follows:

Mr. Funk with Mr. Wilson of Louisiana.
Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Thomas of Kentucky.
Mr. Hersey with Mr. Buchanan.
Mr. McFadden with Mr. Casey.
Mr. Sears of Nebraska with Mr. Lilly.
Mr. Vare with Mr. Wolff.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out paragraph 5, embraced in lines 10 on page 201, to line 5, on page 202.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLLIER) there were—ayes 232, noes 102.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LARSEN of Georgia: Page 205, line 7, after the word "President" insert "with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GREEN of Iowa) there were—ayes 206, noes 159.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the amendments. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a motion to recommit, but I can not qualify as being opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman opposed to the bill desire to make a motion to recommit?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLS. I move, Mr. Speaker, to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, and on that motion I move the previous question.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. If the previous question was voted down, the motion would be amendable, would it not?

The SPEAKER. It would. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLS) there were—ayes 223, noes 196.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
